Mrs. H. D., Cadillac, Mich.—There is no one cure for constipation as there is no one definite form of constipation. It is due to many causes, some curable and others only to be remedied temporarily. You should study your diet and learn what you can digest and assimilate and you should be careful to eat nothing that will not digest properly. A dose of salts, or other laxative, may be taken at intervals, but not often as that only interferes with nature. In addition to the dieting, such exercise should be taken as will reach the muscles about the stomach and intestines as far as possible in order that they be kept active. Massaging the abdomen and sides is good to get action. Deep breathing is also of value in keeping the blood in good condition, that is plenty of oxygen in it. It's no easy matter to overcome constipation and all your attention will be necessary. Read up on the subject in various health magazines.

Julia, Greenville, Texas.—You are large for seventeen, but a woman five feet, five inches tall may weigh one hundred and sixty pounds, though one pound heavier is the maximum and one hundred and forty is the minimum. If you wish to reduce, eat less than you now eat and eat no fats or sweets and no potatoes.

E. M. M., Infanta, Tayabas, P. I.—If your wife is as well as usual, being fairly active and no definite complaint, it is well not to worry about lack of weight. In fact she is pretty sure to become thinner if she worries. She might gain in flesh by a diet of red meats, potatoes, sweets and plenty of milk and eggs, taking as much sleep and rest as possible. Probably the climate, unless she is accustomed to it, has something to do with keeping her thin. As for the child, any ailment it has now at seven years should have the attention of a physician who can make a personal examination and determine the proper treatment. Attention at this time may save her many years of suffering during her later life.

Troubled, Hannibal, Ill.—We don't know what kind of shoes you wear, or have been wearing, or what you have been doing to your feet to make them look small, but whatever it is a sixteen-year-old girl should not have bunions. It must be from bad foot wear, unless there is something else wrong, and we advise that you wear bunion-proof shoes having two pairs so that you may change them every day. No matter if they do look less pretty than you wish, you had better be comfortable with healthy feet, than be pretty and a cripple. Did you ever talk to a doctor to find out if it really were bunions that was causing the trouble?

Mrs. H. T., New Cumberland, W. Va.—Prunes, or prune juice, is a mild laxative for the baby and pure olive oil is good, say a teaspoonful morning and night more or less as the need may be. At the same time watch the child's diet and see that she gets nothing that will be binding. Talk to a physician, not to get medicine from him, but advice as to the feeding of the child and other care of it. Constipation beginning as a baby may continue through life if not prevented now. The cure of a disease is less to be sought after than the prevention of it.

S. Z., Lexington, Va.—If the swelling, or enlarging of the neck in front, is incipient goiter, ordinary massaging or other mechanical treatment will not be of value, as goiter is not superficial and requires constitutional treatment. See a physician at once and have the matter decided positively whether you have goiter or not, and if you have, begin treatment to prevent its growth. Unless you do this, the goiter will grow and permanently disfigure you if it does no worse. It is not a matter for you to attempt to treat yourself Subscriber, Kiron, Iowa.—Climate, as a rule, has little or no effect upon kidney and bladder troubles, though with other complications the climate might have some effect. Probably in a warm, dry climate, as catarrh is so prevalent in the cold and damp, you might have a better degree of health than in Iowa or Illinois. Florida might be some improvement, as it is at least warm down there, but you would probably find Arizona or New Mexico better as they are drier. However, do not move to any location until you have looked it over yourself, or have positive information from someone who knows and has nothing to make out of you. Going from the North to the South you will have to become acclimated, but it usually takes only a short time and no serious effects are experienced.

G. H., Winslow, Ind.—The peculiar feeling of worms crawling around your toes results from disordered nerves. The pain is neuralgic, which is also more nerves. When your baby is older and you have regained your normal health, this will all no doubt disappear, but in the mean time you should see a physician and have him determine if there is any other cause why your nerves should be affected. Your good appetite is a favorable indication, but because you can eat "most anything," don't do it. Watch your appetite and your stomach and eat only what you need and can digest thoroughly. Bad digestion is sure to make bad nerves.

J. M. W., Milwaukee, Wis.—Epilepsy is a disease which is practically incurable and when several competent physicians have decided that any particular case is beyond their power, about the only thing that can be done is to give the patient the best care possible at home and await the end. Sometimes epileptics live long lives and, barring the one trouble, are quite up to the average and often above it, but they must always be watched and tided over the difficulty when it becomes acute. Attacks are often at long intervals and such patients usually live long, but when the attacks are frequent the mind becomes affected and the body as well and death follows within a comparatively short time. Knowledge of how to care for an epileptic patient is of more value than medicine, except certain established tonics or other simples.

E. M. P., Sparks, Nebr.—Asafœtida is good for the digestion and also for depression, but its odor is so rank that it is very seldom used, except in small quantities in connection with other ingredients. Ask your doctor about it.

E. A. E., St. Louis, Mo.—The bursa on the back of your wrist is not uncommon at that point and it usually may be reduced by a sharp blow with a wooden mallet. This breaks it up and it is absorbed, but it may return, in fact, it usually does, but the same treatment will remove it again. You had better have it done by a physician than to try it yourself. You have let yours continue so long that it may have assumed a wen form and will require the knife, but in any event the operation is a simple one.

Worried, Fairdale, N. Dak.—A mail carrier in North Dakota driving thirty-one miles a day, six days in the week should get all the fresh air he needs and with that as a base he should build up a very good superstructure of health. You have constipation and backache because you sit too much. Get out and walk eight or ten miles a day—not all at once, but up the hills—if you have any—where walking will be some effort. Or let the horse trot and run alongside of your wagon. That will get your blood to going, warm your feet and start the peristaltic action in your stomach. Stop eating meat and potatoes and take rice, eggs, milk, raw cabbage, brown bread, cottage cheese, stewed fruit, and drink cocoa, with plenty of pure water between meals. Your weight, one hundred and forty-two is just right for five feet, seven, at twenty-one years. For your weak wrists take some kind of exercise requiring grip. Begin with a little and gradually increase. Your doctor was right when he said your nerves were out whack, but he should not have given you medicine, he should have told you pretty much what we have told you and also told you to stop thinking about your condition and worry because you weren't as well as you thought you should be. Get your mind off of yourself and you won't have any nerves.

D. G., Lake Arthur, La.—You say you would be willing to do anything for your husband's health, a big, strong, young man, with some kind of growth in his nose and you ask us a whole lot of questions which we can't answer by guessing, but you don't take him to a physician in your neighborhood who can make a personal examination and remove the obstruction, with nearly every chance of making him well? Why don't you do that? Why haven't you done it long ago? Such nasal growths are very common and a simple operation nearly always removes the trouble, especially in the cases of children, as his should have been done when he was a child. Take him to a doctor now it will cost you much less than moving out to Arizona for catarrh—And have whatever is obstructing his nasal passages removed and he will be all right, unless it has run too long. Anyway, he will be greatly improved. And to all other COMFORT readers we want to say that when they find they can't breathe well and think they have catarrh, if they will submit to a physician's examination and have the real obstruction removed they will save themselves much future suffering and a lot of expense for catarrh and cold medicines.

C. C. D., Union, Miss.—The consensus of medical opinion seems to be that the best anti-catarrhal climates are in the cold dry air of Colorado, or the warm dry air of Arizona or New Mexico. Certainly dry air is a prime factor in improving, if not always curing, catarrh. As to the hot or the cold, that depends upon which the patient likes better for his personal comfort. Northern New York and the highlands of North Carolina are also given as of the proper dryness. For that matter, anywhere that is thoroughly dry, catarrh does not thrive, though there may be individual cases anywhere and everywhere. Arizona or New Mexico would be our personal choice. But before deciding upon any location, first go and look it over to see for yourself and know what you are getting.

Beautiful Hair and Lots of it, if You Use Crystolis.

In Europe "Crystolis," the New English Hair Grower, has been called the most wonderful discovery of the century.

The judges of the Brussels and Paris Expositions enthusiastically awarded Gold Medals to this marvelous Hair Grower.

Already since we secured the American rights hundreds of men and women have written telling of the phenomenal results obtained by its use. People who have been bald for years tell how they now glory in beautiful hair. Others who have had dandruff all their lives say they have got a clean, healthy scalp after a few applications of this wonderful new treatment.

We don't care whether you are bothered with falling hair, prematurely gray hair, matted hair, brittle hair or stringy hair, dandruff, itching scalp, or any or all forms of hair trouble, we want you to try "CRYSTOLIS" at our risk.

We give you a binding guarantee without any "strings" or red tape, that it won't cost you a cent if we do not prove to you that "CRYSTOLIS" will do all we claim for it—and what's important, we have plenty of money to back our guarantee. $1000 has been deposited in our local bank as a Special Fund to be forfeited if we fail to comply with this contract. Poultry Farming for Women

E. E. W.—I have a bunch of mixed chickens. All seem to be healthy; are laying fine. One of my Plymouth Rocks passed a long worm about twenty-five feet long, thin, like a number ten thread. What is the cause of same and what can I do for it? They are penned up most of the time. Don't see how I could get along without COMFORT.

A.—Fowls and birds of all sorts are liable to have worms. They don't seem to do very much damage unless they are very plentiful, but it will be a wise precaution to examine all your birds and pick out any that are thin, have pale combs, or show any other signs of debility. Confine them in a comparatively small coop, the bottom of which is made of slats. Put short legs at each corner, or raise it above the ground by means of bricks or blocks—anything so that the bottom of the coop is a few inches above the ground, so that the droppings will fall through out of the birds' reach. Give a very light supper, and the next morning, while still fasting, give each bird from two to thirty drops of the following mixture: Oil of turpentine and olive oil in equal parts. About two hours later give each bird two tablespoonfuls of Castor oil. If you have many birds to doctor, the best plan is to mix a little ground grain with the oil. Roll it up into pills, and see that each bird gets an equal share. Examine the droppings, and satisfy yourself that the treatment was necessary, and then burn them. If there are signs of worms in the droppings of the first few birds you take out of the flock, continue the dosing until you have treated every bird there is on the farm. As worms are transmitted from bird to bird by means of their droppings, keep the henhouse scrupulously clean, and remove droppings after it is light in the morning, as soon as possible, for several weeks.

F. R.—As I have not seen anything like our chickens have, I thought I would ask your advice. We have one hundred chickens in a very small house. We have Black Spanish, Rhode Island Reds, Black Leghorns, Mottled Anconas and Brown Leghorns, all mixed. Their heads and eyes get sore, and inside their mouths are big white scabs. One rooster's windpipe was full of white scabs. We scrape the scabs off, and they bleed. Is this contagious? And what is good for it? I know they are two-crawed. Could that be the cause? Please tell me how much and what corn to feed one hundred chickens at night, and how much mash for morning. They have oyster shells all the time, and free range. We feed them Alfalfa in their mash. We don't get any eggs.

A.—It is worse than useless to keep more hens than can be comfortably housed. When birds are crowded they sweat at night, and receive a chill when they go out into the cold morning air. This of course affects the egg organs, and usually ends in the development of some disease. It is better to have ten profitable, well-housed hens than a hundred half-sick drones. From your description, the birds have canker, which is mildly contagious, and being caused usually by a cold, is apt to develop into roup if neglected. In fact, the sores in the mouth and throat are one of the symtoms of roup. The only sure distinction between the two diseases is an unmistakable offensive odor which is always present with roup. If there is no odor on your birds' breath, you can safely treat for canker. Use equal parts of pulverized camphor, boric acid and sub-nitrate of bismuth, all well mixed. Partly fill a stiff, clean straw about ten inches long, and blow the mixture into the birds' throat and nostrils. Give the bird plenty of green vegetable food and light nourishing diet. It is impossible to tell just how much to feed any given number of birds, as every breed and individual fowl varies in the matter of appetite. The only way to find out what a flock really needs is to test it one morning by giving them all the mash they will eat up in fifteen minutes. Then, for the future, give them half that quantity. At night, however, I believe in their having all they want to eat. Feed slowly, and scatter all the feed wide enough to give every bird a chance to get her full share.

O. M. N.—Will you please tell me how to get rid of the red mites? They have killed about ten of my hens. I have used ashes and coal oil, but it does not seem to do any good.

A.—Red mites live in the woodwork and the walls of the henhouse; not on the birds themselves. The only way to get rid of them is to clean, thoroughly, disinfect, and whitewash the henhouse, using freshly slaked lime, with a good supply of crude carbolic acid, and kerosene in it. Scrape the perches, and paint them with strong sheep dip, and wrap rags around the ends where they touch the walls of the house, and keep the rags saturated with kerosene oil. Clean out the nests, burn all the old bedding, and then paint thoroughly with dip, being careful to go into all the cracks and crevices. Or, you can turn the nests upside down over the burning bedding so that the flame and the smoke are forced through the cracks and crevices; of course, being careful that the wood does not take fire. When they have cooled and aired off for an hour or two, go over them with whitewash. Put clean hay in, and destroy once a week at least, giving the boxes a dose of dip for each time. It may take several weeks of constant work to get rid of these pests, but until you do your hens will not be profitable.

O. S.—What is the cause of weak leg among young chicks, and also the cure? I hatched some chicks in December and they were getting along fine until lately they have shown signs of weak legs. I always start hatching chickens in December and January, and never had any trouble with my chicks. I keep the chicks indoors in a moderately heated room, but there is always plenty of Alfalfa for them to scratch in on the floor. They always have grit, and I gave the fine cracked oats and baby chick feed. When one day old, oats; when one and one half weeks old, chick feed. They are now one and one half months old, and I give to them and the old hens mixed corn. I also gave them boiled milk when one half to two weeks old.

A.—There are many causes for leg weakness; inbreeding of parent stock, want of proper exercise; too much or too little heat in a brooder; rheumatic tendencies transmitted from breeding stock; which has at some time suffered from roup. But in this case I think it is due to too heavy feeding, as you say they are only a month and a half old, and you are giving them the same mixed grains that you are feeding to the old hens. Little chicks confined to rooms or brooders must be furnished with a constant supply of green vegetable food. Sprouted oats, chopped lettuce, chard—in fact, greens of any sort. They also need some animal food to take the place of the worms and bugs which they would get if they were running at large with the hens. There are several good brands of beef scraps and bone meal on the market, specially prepared for small chicks. If your feed man keeps none of this, buy a little liver, partly boil it, and chop fine. When you first commence to feed animal food of any description, give very little at first, and increase the quantity slowly, otherwise you may have trouble with their bowels.

A. P.—Will you please tell us, if you can, what to do for our chickens. We have the large Buff Orpington hens. During moulting time, they fail to lose their feathers and go drooping around. They don't seem to get very sick, but gradually die. They eat with the fattening hogs, corn, Kafir, milo-maize, cane and broom corn seed. Before dying, their feathers get very rough. We have other hens which have a cankered sore on their windpipe, causing them to gasp for breath all the time. One lived three days after we noticed it on her.

A.—Orpingtons, being of the heavy type of fowl, are very liable to contract liver trouble if allowed too much fattening food. Your hens, feeding with the hogs, have naturally eaten more than is good for them, especially of fattening food. Your only course is to confine the birds in yards, feed very lightly on grain and plenty of green vegetables, and give each bird a teaspoonful of Castor oil, or add one half teaspoonful of sulphate of magnesia to the drinking water for each bird. Repeat the treament once each week until they have had three doses, after which you can go back to ordinary rations, but their morning mash should be composed of corn meal and ground oats, wheat bran and clover or Alfalfa hay; equal parts of each. At noon, give them vegetables of some sort, and a very small quantity of oats, Kafir corn or barley, scattered over the scratch-material in their house, so that they will have to scratch and exercise for every grain they get. If you cannot yard your birds, or safeguard the hog feed, you had better give up Orpingtons and keep Leghorns, for they are light, active birds, which won't suffer so much from the heavy food.

W. M.—Could you tell me what was the matter with my chickens last year? I had a couple of hens that seemed healthy, but they would grow weak in the legs. They would try to walk and just fall over. One hen—a Rhode Island Red—would even get to the nest and lay, and at times she couldn't get off. I would have to take her off. She would eat and drink good. I fed corn, wheat and scratch food. Another one of my hens went to setting, and sat about two weeks. She left the nest with the same complaint as the other hen. They grew weaker and weaker; wherever they were put they would lie, until finally they died. I would like to know what the disease was, and whether it is contagious or not. I have one more question to ask. I ran an incubator last year and set my own eggs; had good hatches. After the chicks were three or four weeks old, they seemed to take fits. They would go round and round as if they were trying to catch their tails, and then fall out with a stiff neck. Their heads would be turned around over their backs. They would lie out that way for an indefinite length of time and would come to again. I had quite a few die from this trouble, and some did recover. We fed the small chick-feed and cracked corn. Had good brooders, well ventilated.

A.—The general condition of your fowls is very poor. This is undoubtedly, from your description of the old hens and the young chickens you hatched in an incubator last spring, for it leaves little doubt that the old birds have tuberculosis in an advanced stage. One of the last symptoms is lameness. Eggs laid by hens in the first stages of this disease would produce chickens with weak legs and epileptic tendencies, which would show the symptoms you describe in your brooder chicks. Your only course is to kill old hens that seem unduly thin, have pale combs, dull eyes, or any other sign of want of strength and activity. After culling out the flock, clean up the henhouse and yards. Have the latter plowed deeply, and sown to some quick crop, like oats or rye, that the birds can eat. Put a little nux vomica or tincture of iron in the drinking water, for a week or two, to tone up the constitution of the birds you keep for this spring's breeding pens.

N. McL.—I have just an ordinary canary bird past four years old. Each time he moults feathers, it is a longer period before he commences singing again, but the last time he began the middle of July. He still is moulting, or rather, he picks them out, as though he is oiling them, so there are new feathers coming in all the time. If there are lice or mites on him I can't see them, as I have looked close. He bathes regularly enough. He eats apple, cabbage, bread, cookies, cuttle bone, sand, crackers peppers but he has not had as much pepper as usual. He don't seem to eat any of what I buy. I gave him a drop of parogoric on cabbage leaf, rock candy in drinking water, as I read in a recent paper to restore his voice, but he does not sing. One of his toes turned purple over a year ago. His toe-nails grow so long they are a hindrance. I clip them off some. Do you think a warm or cold room is best for him? He can't stand much heat. He begins a few notes as though he was going to sing, but then he quits. How long do canary birds live?

A.—Give the bird's cage a thorough disinfecting. Unscrew the plates at the top which hold the ring for the cage to hang by. It is usually the place where red mites congregate. If these pests get into a canary's cage, they irritate his skin so much that he is sure to pick and pull out feathers during the day. Add a good quantity of household ammonia to some boiling hot soapy water, and dip the whole cage up and down in it. The poor little chap may have indigestion. As cage birds get older, one has to be more careful with their diet. Cakes, and such rich treats, are altogether too heavy. Give him a little hard-boiled egg now and then, and put a little saffron in his drinking water. Canaries thrive best in a moderately cool room where the temperature is even. They often live to be fourteen or six teen years old when not overfed.

C. H. D.—Will you please tell me through COMFORT how to remedy dampness in my chicken coops? the cheapest and quickest way? I have three coops. No. 1. Matched lumber with matched floor; tar paper roof, sixteen by twelve feet. Slanting roof, five feet back and seven feet front. One window, forty-eight inches by thirty inches, always out. No. 2. Matched lumber, covered all over with tar paper, and dirt floor and slanting roof, size eight by twelve feet. This coop has an open window, twenty by fourteen inches, covered with cloth. No. 3. Rough lumber covered all over with tar paper, dirt floor, slanting roof twenty-four by eight feet. This coop has two open windows, one twenty-four by twenty-four inches, and one twenty-eight by thirty-two inches, covered with cloth. All of these coops have other windows on the south side or front, and have sunlight on clear days. All of these coops get white frost on the inside from the hens' breathing, I think, and remain damp, causing the hens to catch cold. Do double wall coops with air space ever get this way?

A.—The ground on which the coops stand is poorly drained, most probably, or you have got too many birds crowded into the house. Try putting small ventilators in the corners of the back wall, high up near the roof. Even double walled houses will get damp if not properly ventilated.

Comfort's League of Cousins

sure. He doesn't realize that poverty is his enemy, and so he doesn't organize with his fellow workers to get a wage that will support himself and his family comfortably. He doesn't realize that alcohol is his enemy (a deadlier enemy than any armed soldier he will ever confront) and so he swallows gallons of whiskey until it puts him under the sod. He doesn't realize that sickness is his enemy, and so he doesn't force his government to give him national insurance. He doesn't realize that old age, with its accompanying dependence, is his enemy, and so he doesn't cry out for old age pensions. All he does is to act like a first-class nut, then when trouble, sickness and misfortune come, he either gives up and perishes or starts to try and use the one thing he has scarcely ever used before, his brains. Does his brain reproach him? Not a bit. He begins to pity himself and the only thought that his disused thinking box produces is a suggestion that he convert himself into a suppliant and a beggar, for all his think box can tell him is to throw himself on the mercy and charity of those who have used their brains a little more than he has, with the result that one gives up a blanket, the other a chair, another a few platters, still another a frying pan and some moth-eathen duds. Other people have to make up his deficiencies because he would not think, and there is not one thinking person in this world who has not got at least a dozen thoughtless persons leaning on him or her. You don't think for a moment do you that if my junk were burned up I would have to beg. Every stick I have is insured. When a man can get two thousand dollars' worth of insurance on his goods and chattels, manuscripts and other possessions for three or four dollars a year, if he doesn't insure them he should have neither pity nor help when trouble comes. Now get busy you people who have not insured your homes nor your lives. You are constantly menaced by fire. Fire is a good friend but a bad enemy. Give it a little encouragement, be a little careless, and up goes your home and out you go. It is a condition and not a theory that confronts you. Fire is a fact and not a dream. Men with more brains than you, have given you an opportunity to set fire almost at defiance. It only costs a trifle to get protection. Get it and make yourselves safe, and not throw the burden of your stupidity on those who have enough troubles of their own. The value of property that is burned up in this country every year by careless people would pay for the construction of the Panama Canal. Will you never think? Will you never wise up and use a little common sense?

STORMOUT, VIRIGINIA.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:

I have just finished reading your letter in the COMFORT and think they are so interesting. I have decided to write one. I am a country girl fifteen years old, weigh one hundred and twenty pounds.

I have light hair, dark gray eyes, and have dark skin. My mother and father are living, and also have three brothers and no sisters.

I can do all kinds of house work, and can hitch horses. Now Uncle Charlie don't you think I am smart.

We have lots of fruit in Virginia. Wish you could be here to get some of our nice June apples. Can you ride horsesback? I can. We have three horses and one cow and about three hundred chickens and fifty young turkeys. Tell Billy the Goat to correct all of my mistakes but please don't eat my letter. If this escapes the waste basket I will come again. May God bless you and all the cousins forever.

I remain your niece, OLIVE NEW.

P. S. Please send me your advice about being a train nurse.

Give my love to the turkeys, Olive. It does not seem right that you should have fifty turkeys while we haven't one. Times were so hard this year and business so fierce that the only thing we got in the turkey line at Thanksgiving and Christmas was the turkey trot from Billy the Goat. They always have Turkey in Europe and Turkey in Asia, but we don't always have turkey where we live. Billy the Goat got me to buy an atlas for Christmas. Do you know why? Because it had Turkey in it. When this war is over there won't be any Turkey in Europe. If we want Turkey we'll have to go to Asia for it. We'd have starved to death last Christmas if it hadn't been for a lady who gave us a canary, but a canary don't make much of a meal for three, especially when one is a goat. So Olive you want my advice about becoming a "train nurse." I'm sure I shall be very glad to give you any information I can on the subject, though to tell you the truth I don't know much about it. Of course if you were a train nurse your duty would be to take care of the train and see it didn't get sick. You'd have to wrap the cars up all snug at night, so they didn't get cold. You never can tell what would happen to a freight car that got cold. The car might get pneumonia and die. The car might also get a *car*buncle on its *car*case, and if it did you'd have to dose it with car*scara*. After you graduate from the car hospital, Olive, we'll all come and watch you, when you're putting a sick pullman car to bed, feeling its pulse or taking its temperature and applying a hot water bag to its feet, I mean its wheels. If a day coach gets a cough we'll all hop round to see you rubbing goose grease on its chest. When you put the pullman car to bed you must see that it does not get bed sores and kick off the clothes when it gets delirious. If there's a train wreck you'll have to bandage up all the wounded cars so they don't bleed to death. You see the work of a "train" nurse is quite varied and strenuous. You must particularly watch the dining car, as it is usually so chock full of grub, it is liable to get dyspepsia. Keep an eye too on the pullman sleeper and see that it doesn't snore too much. Now if you do all this Olive, I think you'll make a first-rate train nurse. What's that Billy? Olive means trained nurse? Oh, if that's the case Olive, I suggest you go to school for another couple of years and stay there until you have graduated from high school, for no hospital of any repute nowadays will admit a girl to training, unless she can show a high school diploma. We place our lives more in the hands of the trained nurse than we do of the doctor, and the better educated the nurse the more she will know about her business, and the better chance she will have of pulling us through and keeping the doctor from murdering us. Most of the girls who write to me about being trained nurses have not enough education to take care of a sick umbrella. People who want to wear smart uniforms and earn twenty-five to thirty dollars a week must at least be able to spell simple words. If they can't do that they had better take up general housework, as trained nursing of all things calls for an education.

MOTT, NORTH DAK.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:

I take the liberty of writing to you to pray for me with all your heart, mind and soul to our Father in Heaven. I am afflicted with those terrible noises in the ears, and my eye sight is poor. You do not know how I suffer. I know you are a good man and love God and I hope He will hear you. Please drop me a few lines. My affliction is something awful. Pray for me. Please insert this in COMFORT and ask for the prayers of all its subscribers in behalf of your suffering sister.

With love, MRS. CHARLES ROBSON.

Here is a cry from a soul in distress, and I hope you will implore the aid of heaven in her behalf. Her affliction may seem very trifling, but there is nothing under heaven more maddening or more hard to endure than these terrible noises in the ear of which she complains. I speak from experience, for I have for many years had the most terrific noises in my ears. If you have ever heard a dozen engines blowing off steam, half-a-dozen threshing machines running at full pressure, with three or four boiler foundries thrown in for good measure and all joining in chorus and trying to drown each other out, you will get a faint conception of the kind of aural concert I have to listen to day in and night out. When that racket first began and I'd endured it for about steen minutes, I began inquiring about various makes of revolvers and their prices. I wanted to make a target of the place that noise was coming from. This dreadful scourge which has never let up for eighteen years drove me at first almost to the verge of insanity. There was no getting away from it for a second's relief. Relentless and cruel as fate it gripped and never let go. The angry waves of the ocean sometimes rest, there is at times a lull in their murmuring, but the aural safety valve blows off steam from one year's end to the other, and the more you pay attention to it the worse it becomes. There is only one thing to do and that is to learn to shut out and ignore. It seems incredible that anyone can ever school himself, and by a supreme exercise of will power set this torturing racket at defiance. I however have succeeded in doing just this and I know a lady who has been completely deaf for a number of years who has also learned to do the same thing. This is another instance of the triumph of mind over matter. Sometimes the bodily anguish is too great for the mind to conquer. I fear that is so in Mrs. Robson's case. Prayer is a good thing, so is an aurist, or ear specialist.

Conducted by Cousin Marion

In order that each cousin may be answered in this column, no cousin must ask more than three questions in one Month.

WELL, well, my dears, here we are at the first spring month and the winter hardly seems to have been at all. Still, we can't be too sure that March is as full of spring as it might be and we might as well keep on our winter flannels until the April showers come along with the flowers. Anyhow, those of us who live to the North of Mason and Dixon's line. If you don't know where that is located, suppose you ask your school teachers or your cyclopedias. But it won't be long till the warm sun will be shining and the whole world will be in bloom and make us all feel light and cheerful. Also will come spring fever when we won't want to work, so to get ahead of it, I'll begin now.

The first is from Loneliness of Wyndemere, N. Dak., and she is a school teacher aged nineteen and in great trouble. And she should be, for she says she met a young man on a train, entire stranger he was, too, and she became "deeply infatuated" with him on the spot. I wonder if she teaches her girl pupils to be as foolish as that. However, the young man now wants her to marry him and she doesn't know what to do because she doesn't know a thing about him, except what he tells her. I'm sure I can't tell her, for I don't know the young man any better than she does. I know though that she hadn't better marry him until she knows more about him than he tells her. But what makes grown up young women, so utterly silly about the men?

Troubled, Norfolk, Va.—Let me see—you met him seven years ago, and it was a case of love at first sight. Then five years elapsed and during that time he never saw you, but was forced by another girl to become engaged to her. Next, two years ago, you met again and he realized that he loved you and not the other girl. Four months ago you discovered that you were perfectly devoted to each other, but the other girl would not give him up, and as he is not free, you want to know what you should do. Well, if he doesn't love the other girl and does love you, he should not marry the other girl. Whether he marries you or not, is to be settled between yourselves, regardless of the other girl. Better break an engagement than go into a divorce court.

Blue Eyes, Bryan, Texas.—Better not be popular with young men than sacrifice your self-respect to do so. If other girls get all the beaus that way, you let them have them.

Sister, Castle Rock, Colo.—Many times a man who has known a woman for years suddenly realizes that she is the one for him and at once falls in love with, or lets the latent love break out, as this one has done. I think it is sincere. As to whether you can live with his mother or not, that can only be settled by trial. As far as he is concerned, I think you can risk him.

Cousin E., Osborn, Idaho.—I think you are ever so much better off without a sweetheart with such an ugly temper that he quits you for a month because you won't say you love him, when he knows you do. Give him back his presents and letters, get yours back and have nothing more to do with him. (2) Practise is the only way to write a good hand and some people can't ever learn. I am one.

Clehm, Olympia, Wash.—Accept all the attention you can from other young men and if this particular one objects, tell him he has never proved any claim on you and you are free to do as you please until he does. Lots of young men have a way of demanding the exclusive attention of girls and never say a word or show a sign of having any right to do so. Even if you become engaged to him he has no right to make a hermit of you. I'd hate to marry a man of that disposition. If you like that kind, it is none of my business, but remember I warned you in time.

J. C. J., Allardt, Tenn.—By all means give him back the engagement ring, if he wants it, and give it back to him anyway. A man who drinks and refuses to stop when his sweetheart asks him to, is the very kind of man no sensible girl would marry and no other kind of girl should. Let him go, quick.

Blue Eyes, Billings, Mont.—Indeed, there are exceptions to the rule that the husband should be older than the wife, and enough of them to prove the rule. If your young man is really in love with you and you with him, don't let your being the older prevent your marrying.

Doubtful, Wapato, Wash.—It is not proper for a girl of fifteen and a man of twenty-three to exchange "cool, but friendly letters." The girl of fifteen should be putting in her time over her school books.

Virginia, Trevilians, Va.—A young man of good family and good habits who has been devoted for five years is, I think, the very kind to make the best kind of husband. But he is too young yet to think of marrying. Wait until he is at least twenty-five. Both of you will have saved money, too, in that time and have a nest egg to start with. You have my blessing.

Lonely, Moneta, Va.—A seventeen-year-old girl in school has no business whatever to be disturbed in her mind, or heart, about which of two young men she should choose. Her books are her business and there will be plenty of time for beau troubles when she is done with her books. Cut out the beaus for the present, my dear.

Undecided, Hancock, Wis.—When you don't know which one of two to be happy with, don't try to be happy with either, and you stand a much better chance of being happy.

V. V., Tennessee, Texas.—Unless you wish to be as your mother is, wholly devoted to society and her clubs don't marry the city man, but choose the quiet country lad, even if you have to wait a dozen years until he overcomes his bashfulness sufficiently to tell you he loves you, as you know he does now in silence.

Blue Eyes, Whigham, Ga.—You say, "I love him to my very soul," and ask me if you should tell him so. Well, my dear, don't if you don't want to scare him clear away. Let him do the telling. And don't let him give you those tender little love taps on the cheeks. He wants to be too familiar and you should have better sense than to permit him.

Teacher, Jonesboro, Ark.—You did quite right, I think, in sending back all letters, presents, the ring, etc., when without explanation or apparent cause your fiance stopped writing and paid no attention to your inquiries as to the cause. He may be all right, but he takes a wretchedly poor way of showing it. Continue your correspondence with his sister, if you like her and she likes you. There is no reason why you should lose a good friend, because she happens to have an unworthy brother.

Sunny Peg, Hunt, Ill.—Perhaps you would be happy with a man who as your sweetheart never took you any place, or went any place himself, and didn't want you to go with anyone else, but I doubt it. Still, if at seventeen, you think he is your only chance and you feel that you must marry, maybe you had better take him. But I'd hate to be you.

Unhappy, Ashville, N. C.—I certainly would not go with a young man who not only would not buy my box at the box supper but wouldn't even go to the supper. And he never goes any place with you, or ever makes a date to come to see you, and gets mad if you talk to other young men! Well, he sure is the limit and I'll never forgive you if you don't throw him over, right away. And don't be unhappy any longer over one like him.

Faithful, Howard, N. Y.—Don't worry, my dear, and don't get married until you are eighteen at least, even if your present home isn't just what you wish it to be. Very many of the cousins have written me to say how glad they were that they had taken my advice and not married at sixteen, and some of them had far more disagreeable homes than yours, for yours seems to be fairly nice. The young man is all right and I'm sure he doesn't object to waiting until you are old enough to marry. And while you are waiting, take up the study of spelling and grammar. No girl in the state of New York should lose all the opportunities of education that that state offers. You write a good hand and a well expressed letter, but your grammar is faulty and your spelling worse, both of which you could easily correct.

Dred, Allhardt, Tenn.—Don't elope with him, and if he loves you right he won't insist on it. You haven't a year to wait until you are of age and then you can assume the responsibility yourself. In any event, don't marry to suit your parents unless it suits you. Parents should know better than to ask that of a child.

Lonely, Santa Fe, N. M.—You would be ever so much better fitted to be a wife if instead of marrying now at eighteen, you waited until you were twenty-one and put in the extra years securing the education you are so desirous of having. If the young man doesn't want to wait that long, tell him kindly he doesn't have to. An ignorant wife means an ignorant husband and ignorant children. Do you want a record of that kind?

Blue Eyes, Pineville, La.—School girls should not have beaus on Sunday afternoons, but if your parents have no objection I don't suppose I should make trouble about it. I know if I had daughters in school the beaus would be few and far between. At the same time I should want them to associate with boys and girls of their age and have a good time without any beau business and regular callers. (2) The best way to cure the flirting youth is to laugh at him when he tries it on you. This is for now and when you are older.

Troubled, Shady Lane, W. Va.—The girl who offers herself as a reformer for a young man that drinks is taking about one chance in a million that she won't be making a serious mistake with herself as chief sufferer. (2) An eighteen-year-old boy had much better be sent to the nursery than to the marriage altar.

Troubled Heart, Ishpeming, Mich.—For goodness sake, don't think marrying a boy only sixteen years old. You are old enough to know better, or ought to be. If he hasn't any more sense, you insist on waiting until he is twenty-five and see what he thinks about it by that time. If he wants to marry you then, and you twenty-eight, it will be lovely and you may have my blessing. And don't you do the card writing and sending for him and other courting. Haven't I said a thousand times that it is the man's place to do the courting? It isn't for you to chase him, but him to chase you. My, but you are slow to learn!

There, my dears, I've answered all the questions that were for me to answer and I've been perfectly sweet about it, haven't I? Scolded just enough and where it was needed, didn't I? You see I know. Now be good little girls, remembering that while you have hearts to throb you also have heads to have some sense with. May the good Lord watch over us all and lead us aright. By, by.

Possibly an operation would relieve her. The ear is an exceedingly delicate and important organ. Ear noises may come from a variety of causes. Often wax adheres to the ear drums. When this is the case the ear should be syringed with warm boric water. Don't be too strenuous in the operation. Use half a teaspoonful of boric powder to a pint of warm water. If one has a steady hand and will go to work very gently he or she can get a piece of absorbent cotton and wind it round the end of a toothpick, then dip it in warm glycerine, and any accumulated matter in the ear can be easily removed. Often with the removal of wax, the noise subsides. If there is pain in the ear there is nothing better than warm glycerine dropped in the outer ear. I have to use this constantly, and often have to lie with my head on an ice bag to prevent inflammation of the inner ear. One cannot be too careful about the ears for if inflammation starts in the inner ear, one is liable to get that most terrible of diseases, mastoiditis. The mastoid bone is that big bone behind the ear and necrosis or rotting of this bone quickly takes place when an inflammatory condition arises. It is a delicate and dangerous operation to have the mastoid bone chiseled open and the brain exposed. Of course if you are a democrat or a republican it is not so dangerous, as there is no brain to be exposed. ("Uncle Charlie you'll get hammered for that.—Billy the Goat.) People who have any discharge from the ear are considered a bad risk by an insurance company. There is a passage from the back of the throat that leads up to the ear called the eustachian tube. There is a good deal of sympathy between the ear and the throat as you will readily understand now that you know about that connecting passage. Quite recently that great genius Edison had mastoiditis. When there is an acute catarrhal condition of the throat or nose it is apt to extend up the eustachian tube and involve the middle ear. In this way the tubes beome choked and obstructed with the over secretion or by swelling. The air in the middle ear then becomes absorbed in part and a species of vacuum is produced with increased pressure from without on the ear drum; the drum membrane will be pressed in, and through the little ones pressure will be made against the sensitive nervous apparatus irritating it and giving rise to deafness, dizziness and the sensation of noises in the ear. Every fresh cold in the head and throat has a tendency to start trouble in the ear. Mrs. Robson should consult an ear specialist in Minneapolis or St. Paul, or pay a trip to Rochester, Minn., where the greatest surgeons in the United States will be found. Perhaps by the time this letter appears in print Mrs. Robson will by sheer force of will power have learned to shut out and ignore those dreadful ear noises to a certain extent. It is an awful task, but it can be done. The shutting out process can be applied to many of the hard, unpleasant things of life. I've got it down to a fine point, but sometimes pain is too terrible, too agonizing to conquer and subdue. Perhaps Mrs. Robson has reached that point. I fervently hope not. Give her the benefit of your prayers and any advice that from experience you have found helpful.

MILNER, KY.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:

I am a little girl thirteen years old. I have black eyes and light brown hair. I am four feet eleven inches tall. We are old subscribers to COMFORT and I like to read your's and the cousin's letters. I have one little sister and three brothers. I can churn iron and milk the cows, and cook and sweep the floor up. I go to school. I have to walk about two miles. I like to ride a horse. My father lets me ride one of his horses sometimes. Well Uncle Charlie I hope to see my letter in print next month. I remain your niece,

ROSA TODD.

Rosa, you are quite a cute clever little girl, and can do some remarkable things. I used to have quite a few accomplishments myself, but I never succeeded yet in ironing and churning a cow. It surely would be exceedingly cruel to iron a cow, especially if the iron was good and hot. I should think that would be a case of pasteurizing the milk at the source. What methods do you use in churning a cow? Do you give her an anæsthetic, and while she's under the influence of the dope, dreaming of the happy days of calfhood, turn the crank until you get her all buttered up? If you don't do that what do you do? Well I hope after you've churned the cow, she churns for you, for as you know "one good churn deserves another." Rosa, you'd better go to the punctuation box and dust a few commas into your sentences, and so save that poor cow a lot of needless torture. You also inform us that you cook and sweep the floor up. What is your object in cooking the floor? Billy the Goat says he thinks you do it to keep your feet warm. Excellent idea, but why do you want to sweep the floor up? The girl who does a job of that kind must be some sweeper believe me. You must be a regular human cyclone. I've seen a cyclone sweep a floor up and drop half of it in the gulf of Mexico, the other half in Hudson Bay, but I never saw a young lady sweep a floor up. You must keep the folks pretty busy putting floors down, for it is not very pleasant to be walking around a room that has no floor, especially when there's a cellar under it. The Goat says you mean that you sweep the dirt up and leave the floor in its usual position. I sincerely trust that the Goat's surmises are correct, as I hate to see such astounding energy employed in such destructive methods of housekeeping. You sweep the floor down next time, Rosa, instead of sweeping it up. If that does not get results you sit on the floor and sweep it with a tooth-brush. I like to see a nicely manicured floor, but don't be too strenuous when you are doing the job.

BANON, N. DAK.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:

I am a boy seventeen years of age, five foot eleven inches short. I have light brown hair, blue eyes and fair complected and my weigth (what's weigth? Uncle C.) is one hundred and fifty pounds. I have four sisters and one brother two of my sisters are married. I live on a farm with my mother and father and two sisters. We live eight miles north of the Northern Pacific railway. My youngest sister has been teaching school. The land around here is rather poor for wheat and the hot southwest wind comes some years and burn growing plants. But they did not reach us last year, for we got rain and it cooled them. There is lots of cattle raising done in this country. Would you be as kind as to give me a little advise in reporter work. I have written a few poems but, they have came back from the places I have sent them with the unavailable mark. Could I learn the trade without going to some town or city? Is there any difference in learn the author or fiction work to that of the reporter work?

I close with my best regards to you and the cousins, I remain,

OLE NEWLAND, JR.

So Ole, you want to be a reporter do you? If not a reporter, then a poet or an author. I've been standing on my head for about half an hour trying to read your letter, and my poor eyes are still aching and so are Maria's. Why didn't you mix a little ink with the water that you used, or why did you put so much water in the ink? Now the last sentence in your letter and a word which is the key to the whole sense of the matter have got me woozy. Now fancy a would-be author who wants to spread his thoughts before the millions of earth addressing such a query as this to a man: "Is there any difference in learn the author or fiction work to that of the reporter work?" I have unraveled some mighty knotty propositions, but you have my acrobatic brain tied in umpty steen knots. I suppose you want to know if the terms for making you an author would be greater than those that would be charged for making you a reporter. I don't see that there is anything else that you can mean. Let me tell you right now Ole, you can't learn to be an author, and judging from your letter I am rather doubtful whether you can learn to be a reporter, though you might have a good nose for news and be able to get the skeleton of a story for other hands to write out. Authors are born, not made. It's wonderful what humanity can do in the development of poor material at times, but you cannot make something out of nothing and what is the use of trying? If there were any seeds of authorship in your composition you would have been writing bright, newsy stuff four years ago, and at your present age you would be doing creditable work. No matter what line of effort you enter today, you will find it crowded with brilliant and clever men, men who even in the cradle develop a talent for one or other of the arts or professions they are to follow in later years. Before I could speak and while in the cradle I hummed some of the airs my father played on his violin and piano. My mother foolishly wept for she felt this infantile precocity meant my early decease. Now Ole if your mother had found you with a pad and pencil when you were three weeks old writing sonnets to your nurse's eyebrows, you would have been well on the road to authorship by now, and you would not have needed the aid of a correspondence school to help you achieve success. The plodder can do wonderful things, though almost devoid of talent, but he can never rise above mediocrity, and there is absolutely no market for mediocrity—that is the merely good. The world is full of clever people, people with a vast amount of natural talent, and with a great deal of education and culture to give the polish that even talent requires to make it acceptable and marketable. The plodder is an excellent man in business and trade and he may get there to a certain degree as a reporter, but nobody ever won distinction in literary work unless nature gave them a flash of genius, a spark of inspiration, or a modicum of talent when they entered the world. What I would advise you to do Ole, is to learn to spell simple words first of all, next read good books, and keep on reading good books, just revel in them and glory in them. Far better live and walk with the great minds of all the ages, than

This Wife and Mother

Wishes to Tell You FREE How She Stopped Her Husband's Drinking

By all Means Write to Her And Learn How She did it.

For over 20 years James Anderson of 602 Elm Ave., Hillburn, N. Y., was a very hard drinker. His case seemed a hopeless one, but 10 years ago his wife in their own little home, gave him a simple remedy which much to her delight stopped his drinking entirely.

To make sure that the remedy was responsible for this happy result she also tried it on her brother and several of her neighbors. It was successful in every case. None of them has touched a drop of intoxicating liquor since.

She now wishes everyone who has drunkenness in their homes to try this simple remedy for she feels sure that it will do as much for others as it has for her. It can be given secretly if desired, and without cost she will gladly and willingly tell you what it is. All you have to do is write her a letter asking her how she cured her husband of drinking and she will reply by return mail in a sealed envelope. As she has nothing to sell do not send her money. Simply send a letter with all confidence to Mrs Margaret Anderson at the address given above, taking care to write your name and full address plainly. (We earnestly advise every one of our readers who wishes to cure a dear one of drunkenness to write to this lady today. Her offer is a sincere one.)

Stylish Colored Petticoat

For A Club Of Two

Kelley Green, Cerise Or Black

COLORED petticoats modeled along narrow lines to conform to the narrow dress skirts that are now the style. Kelley Green, Cerise or "American Beauty" and Black seem to be popular shades as they afford a striking contrast to most any dress. The petticoat offered here is made of handsome sateen or "farmer's satin" of good quality with finished seams and deep flounce and it comes in the popular colors above mentioned. Every woman to be in fashion now needs one or more of these petticoats which fit so nicely and hang so gracefully having not near so much fullness as the old petticoats and yet not of the extreme hobble style. Be sure to specify size and color wanted when ordering otherwise we cannot fill your order. We have them in lengths from 38 inches to 44 inches and will send you length and color desired, if you will accept the following Club Offer. For a club of only two 15-month subscriptions to COMFORT at 25 cents each, we will send you one of these petticoats free by Parcel Post prepaid. Premium No. 612.

Comfort's Information Bureau

Under this heading all questions by COMFORT subscribers on subjects not related to the special departments elsewhere in the paper will be answered, as far as may be. COMFORT readers are advised to read carefully the advertisements in this paper, as they will often find in them what they seek through their questions addressed to this Bureau. They will thus save time, labor and postage.

NOTICE.—As the privileges of this Bureau and of all other departments of COMFORT are for subscribers only, no attention will be given any inquiry which does not bear the writer's correct name and address. Initials only, or a fictitious name, if requested, will appear in the published answer, but the inquiry must invariably be signed by the writer's true name.

Miss B. M. Y., Kingston, N. Y.—For information concerning the Philippines write to Hon. Edw. T. Williams, Chief Far Eastern Affairs, State Dep't, Washington, D. C. Ask him for all the information you want, special and general. Whatever he tells you will be authentic. If you want direct information you might get it by writing to Governor-General Francis Burton Harrison, Manila, P. I.

N. R., Taylorsville, Ky.—We hardly think you would be justified in attempting to raise guinea pigs unless you had your market in advance. Guinea pigs are chiefly used in medical laboratories to try out serums on and the demand is not rushing. Write to some animal dealer in Cincinnati or Louisville and get a few to start a local demand for them as pets. The cost per pair is small—just what we can't say, as prices vary.

Kiddie, Owensboro, Ky.—Your question about the Salvation Army was answered. The national headquarters in New York City, Mrs. Evangeline Booth in charge, with Col. William Peart as Chief Secretary. Write to either of them. As to the others you ask about, we do not know of any persons of the kind who are reliable. Glad to hear your married son has been reading COMFORT ever since he was a small boy. We'll venture he is a good citizen.

B. E., Commerce, Mo.—Last Leap Year was 1912 and the next will be 1916. 1900 was not a Leap Year. Every year that is exactly divisible by four is a Leap Year, except those that are divisible by 100 and not by 400. Now figure it out for yourself.

Mrs. C. E., Elkhart, Kans.—We cannot tell you where you can find a market for home-made things such as tea and counter aprons and other sewing, because there is no definite market. The only way to do is to build up a local trade among the women of your neighborhood who would prefer to buy such things at reasonable prices than to make them themselves. There is a very fair field for such sewing if you can get in touch with those who want to buy. In many cities and towns there is a "Woman's Exchange" established and maintained for the purpose of selling needlework, home-made bread, cake, pastry and other products of woman's labor. Under proper management these "Women's Exchanges" are successful, a great benefit to the community. Every town of any size should have one.

H. D., Mt. Pleasant, Texas.—We suppose a man could be a fair sort of Christian, and be a detective, but the work is such as does not tend to develop a man's spiritual nature. Don't know about Allan Pinkerton's religion, if he had any. Born in Scotland in 1819; died in U. S. in 1884. (2) A person of real ability can qualify as a member of the U. S. Secret Service as soon as he is of age. But he will have to have some pull to get the job. Write to W. J. Flynn, Chief, Secret Service, Treasury Dep't, Washington, D. C. for detailed information.

Miss V. H. Rumford, Maine.—There is no difference in meaning between Yours truly and Truly yours. Couldn't you have guessed it without asking?

Mrs. S. P., Pocatello, Idaho.—Property laws vary in different states and we advise that you consult a lawyer and have him draw a will just as you want it between you, making all the provisions you wish for your children. With that in good and regular shape there will be no trouble in the future that cannot be very readily remedied. If the property is all in the husband's name he can secure the widow for life, if he should die. What difficulties might arise if he died without a will depends upon what the property laws are in Idaho. A will should by all means be made and at once. No one need know its contents, except your husband, yourself and the lawyer who writes it.

V. B., Richardson, Ky.—You are like a good many other COMFORT inquirers who being entirely ignorant of a certain line think by asking a few questions they will be competent to handle a business in which competent persons are engaged. You must learn from those in the business. Unless you have the capacity and energy to find out from whom you can learn the necessary knowledge and then learn it, you certainly haven't the capacity or energy to do anything about it. We don't know an earthly thing about rosin and pine needles in Kentucky, but if we wanted to know we never would write to Maine to find out. We would go right after the people in Kentucky who knew and find out from them. Suppose you try that, if you really mean business.

F. P., Clark, Wyo.—Mr. Andrew Carnegie of New York and Pittsburgh has established a Hero Fund and if you will write to Chas. L. Wilmot, Secretary Carnegie Hero Fund, Pittsburgh, Pa., you may secure the information you wish. The money and the hero medals are there, all right, but it is not an easy matter to get either, unless you have the goods to deliver and can come highly recommended.

Subscriber, Greenwood, Ark.—The ruling religion in Germany is Protestant. There is a strong Catholic party there and it is not at all shut out of political affairs, though it does not rule, nor can it. There were by the latest returns 35,400,000 Protestants and 29,300,000 Roman Catholics in Germany.

Mrs. G. H., Ravenna, Ohio.—Jeremiah Curtin, translator of "Quo Vadis" and many other works in foreign languages, was born at Milwaukee, Wis., in 1840 and died in 1906. He was said to have known seventy languages and was one of the best known translators in the world. For several years he was connected with the Smithsonian Institution. Stop in at the Ravenna Public library some day and read up on him from any cyclopedia.

X. Y. Z., Caldwell, Texas.—Our silver dollar weighs 412.5 grains, 371.25 grains silver, 41.25 grains alloy. The value of the silver bullion is at present between 48 and 49 cents, varying with the market, so that our silver dollar, without the United States back of it, would be worth a little less than fifty cents. (2) It is proper and better for one seeking employment to meet the employer himself, unless the position is a very small one, or the firm is a very large one, where each department has its individual manager (3) Cats with different colored eyes are not uncommon and there is no especial demand for them.

Inquisitive, Waunakee, Wis.—The Civil War widow had better write to the Commissioner of Pensions, Washington, D. C., and state her case for adjudication. That is the quickest way to get at it. (2) If the estate is good for the debts of the deceased it must pay them. The just debts come out of it before the heirs can divide it. (3) Any place big enough to have a name as a post-office is usually called a town, though in New England it is called a village, as a town there is what a township is in western states. F. R., Barns, Tenn.—The only way to find out if the Secretary of the Treasury will give you a list of the names of makers of counterfeit money is to write and ask him for it. His address is Washington, D. C. and the Secret Service Chief has the list.

C. A. K., Milan, Ind.—You are doing your detective work too easy by writing to COMFORT for information which you should have before thinking about becoming a detective, just like a lot of other COMFORT young men have done who have the detective bug. If you have got detective stuff in you you will find out these details through their proper sources. Now go to it and detect.

Miss M. L., Shelton, Nebr.—We advise you to let hypnotism alone unless you can study it under the personal direction of an expert. It is a peculiar power much more apt to do harm than good if one possesses it without the knowledge of how to use it properly. If you haven't the natural faculty it is money wasted trying to learn it, for it cannot be learned. It is valuable only to a physician, or to a man who can use it in the show business. Amateurs have frequently seriously affected the health of persons whom they could influence and measures are being taken to restrict its practise to those only who pass examination and are duly licensed by law.

A. D. Z., Mossyrock, Wash.—It's a long way from Maine to the Pacific coast and we really are not informed and have no means of ascertaining as to whether the turtle raising business would pay where you are, or not.

D. R. T., Independence, Mo.—You'll find just the information you are looking for by reading the advertising columns in COMFORT. We suggest to inquirers in this column that by reading COMFORT advertisements they will frequently find answers to what they ask us and thereby save time, labor and postage.

The Alligator Pear

By C. B. Irvine

Copyright, 1915, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher, Inc.

TWENTY-SEVEN hundred dollars from a single tree in one season—twenty-seven hundred big round dollars—just think of it! That is the record of one avacado or Alligator pear tree near Whittier, Cal., for the year. But perhaps you do not know what an avocado is? Some call it alligator pear; but the name is meaningless, since its fruit is neither alligator nor pear. The proper name is ahuacate, though it is commonly called avocado or alligator pear; but of the name, more later on. With the neat sum aforementioned already in hand, the tree still contains more than one half of its crop, in different stages of maturity. It is estimated that the yield of the one tree for the year will be not less than thirty-five hundred dollars, including the sale of fruit, seeds and bud wood. The harvest up to date has consisted of fourteen hundred fruits, which sell readily at five dollars per dozen. The bud wood is worth ten cents for each bud and the seeds command the same price, but there is only one seed in each fruit. This marvelous tree, which is fifty feet high and thirty feet across, promises to yield for many years.

This splendid tropical fruit has recently been attracting much attention, since it has been found by experiment that it can be grown with success in sections where the orange and lemon thrive. The results have been such that the planting will no doubt be on a large scale and it will become one of the best paying orchard crops. It is one of the most wholesome and nutritious of all fruits and in those countries where it is grown extensively it is a staple article of food. Owing to the high price of the fruit it is consequently enjoyed by the wealthy class only, but being as easy to grow as other fruit crops it will without doubt be planted on a large scale and the fruit will fall to a price that will bring it within the reach of all. The profit of production will still be large, as the trees are generous producers, the variety being such that specimens may be grown which will ripen their fruit during every month of the year. As the fruit stands shipment well the market is almost unlimited. The tree is of rapid growth and particularly handsome, ever green, with large, deep green leaves.

"Persea gratissima." That is the name under which you will find the avocado listed in the catalogues of the nursery folk, should you be successful in finding it at all, and they will tell you that it "bears a large, pear-shaped, green or deep purple drupe, with firm, yellowish-green pulp of a pleasant flavor, used as a salad. The pulp contains an abundance of oil, which may be used for illuminating purposes, or for soap making. The seeds yield a deep, indelible black stain and are employed in marking linen." But these descriptions of the fruit are wholly inadequate. To taste it is to like it; to devour one calls for more. That the taste, when once acquired, amounts to almost a craving is attested by the prices paid for the fruit on the market, good specimens selling readily at from fifty to seventy-five cents each. It is destined to become one of the leading commercial fruits and a staple article of diet, for so appetizing is it that when once known and its worth appreciated it becomes a household necessity.

So far as records go, the first ahuacate was planted in California in 1871, but the fruit has been slow in being generally introduced. The tree was brought to California from Mexico, where it seems to be a native, and the name ahuacate came direct to us from the descendants of Montezuma.

The Whittier tree is eighteen years of age and has for a number of years been yielding rich returns. However, such enormous profits cannot be hoped for with the increased production, even though the supply today is not sufficient to give everyone even so much as a taste. Practically the entire supply on the market today is imported from Mexico. Several hundred acres are being planted each year in Southern California. For the most part these are of budded varieties, which mature earlier and produce a larger fruit than the seedlings. There are at this time at least a dozen named budded varieties, although there is but little difference between them.

THIN FOR YEARS—"GAINS 22 POUNDS IN 23 DAYS"

Remarkable Experience of F. Gagnon. Builds Up Weight Wonderfully.

"I was all run down to the very bottom," writes F. Gagnon. "I had to quit work, I was so weak. Now, thanks to Sargol, I look like a new man. I gained 22 pounds in 23 days."

"Sargol has put 10 pounds on me in 14 days," states W. D. Roberts. "It has made me sleep well, enjoy what I ate and enabled me to work with interest and pleasure."

"I weighed 132 pounds when I commenced taking Sargol. After taking 20 days I weighed 144 pounds. Sargol is the most wonderful preparation for flesh building I have ever seen," declares D. Martin, and J. Meier adds: "For the past twenty years I have taken medicine every day for indigestion and got thinner every year. I took Sargol for forty days and feel better than I have felt in twenty years. My weight has increased from 150 to 170 pounds."

When hundreds of men and women—and there are hundreds with more coming every day—living in every nook and corner of this broad land voluntarily testify to weight increases ranging all the way from 10 to 35 pounds given them by Sargol, you must admit, Mr. and Mrs. and Miss Thin Reader, that there must be something in this Sargol method of flesh building after all.

Hadn't you better look into it, just as thousands of others have done? Many thin folks say: "I'd give most anything to put on a little extra weight," but when some one suggests a way they exclaim, "Not a chance. Nothing will make me plump. I'm built to stay thin." Until you have tried Sargol, you do not and cannot know that this is true.

Sargol has put pounds of healthy "stay there" flesh on hundreds who doubted, and in spite of their doubts. You don't have to believe in Sargol to grow plump from its use. You just take it and watch weight pile up, hollows vanish and your figure round out to pleasing and normal proportions. You weigh yourself when you begin and again when you finish and you let the scales tell the story.

Sargol is just a tiny concentrated tablet. You take one with every meal. It mixes with the food you eat for the purpose of separating all of its flesh producing ingredients. It prepares these fat making elements in an easily assimilated form, which the blood can readily absorb and carry all over your body. Plump, well-developed persons don't need Sargol to produce this result. Their assimilative machinery performs its functions without aid. But thin folks' assimilative organs do not. This fatty portion of their food now goes to waste through their bodies like unburned coal through an open grate. A few days' test of Sargol in your case will surely prove whether or not this is true of you. Isn't it worth trying?

Plump, well developed men and women attract attention at the beach as well as in the city.

50c BOX FREE

To enable any thin reader ten pounds or more underweight, to easily make this test we will give a 50c box of Sargol absolutely free. Either Sargol will increase your weight or it won't, and the only way to know it is to try it. Send for this Free Test Package today, enclosing 10c in silver or stamps to help pay postage, packing, etc., and a full size 50c package will be sent by return mail free of charge. 1928 TEXAS TWINS.—The vital statistics department of Austin, Texas, reports that during the last two years 870 sets of white twins and 94 sets of negro twins were born in Texas. During the same period, eight sets of white triplets and two sets of negro triplets were born.

FIRST OPERATOR OF SEWING MACHINE.—Miss Elizabeth M. Kilbourn, eighty-six years old, the first woman to take a stitch on a sewing machine, died at the home of H. L. Streeter in Winsted, Conn., following a few days' illness. In the early 50's she was teaching in a private school in New Hartford, when Elias Howe was experimenting with his invention. She became interested and Howe invited her to operate it.

have never heard of the application being given without beneficial results in preventing worm infesting of animals. These remarks of course apply only to pastures which cannot be plowed, worked to crops and seeded down again and to districts where rock salt is plentiful and consequently cheap.

The Questions and Answers constitute one of the most valuable features of this department and we urge our farmer subscribers to read all of them carefully each month, as you will find that they contain much useful information and advice on practical problems that are troubling you as well as those who have asked the questions. Cut them out and paste them into a scrapbook for future reference. This will save you the trouble of writing us and will avoid delay in getting your answer when you need advice on these same matters. We are glad to receive inquiries from our subscribers and to advise them on all matters pertaining to farming, but it is hardly reasonable to expect us to waste valuable space in answering the same questions month after month for the benefit of those who need not have asked the questions if they had read and remembered the answers which we had previously printed.

Questions and Answers

BABY BEEF.—I am a boy reader of COMFORT and would like to have you tell me anything you can about the raising of "baby beef." As I understand it, "baby beef" is produced by feeding steer calves from the age of a month or six weeks to the time they are yearlings on a heavy balanced feed, and that by this means the animals are in prime condition when a year old. I would like to know the best and cheapest rations to feed a steer calf during the different periods of its growth to make baby beef.

D. E. W., Kennerdell, Pa.

A.—Breed is the first requisite. The tendency to fatten quickly and at an early age is hereditary. It would be waste of time and money to feed a scrub or common steer calf with the hope of making a profitable carcase at twenty months of age. If you can start with a cross-bred steer calf, between a Shorthorn and Hereford (pure bred) or between a Shorthorn and Aberdeen-Angus or Galloway, or with a good calf by a pure bred beef breed bull out of a high grade beef breed cow you may succeed. We cannot give specific advice about the feed except that the calf should have lots of milk as well as meals when it is quite young and then all the good grain and meals and clover hay it will clean up daily as it grows, adding roots or silage and also feeding grain on grass. You will have to decide the matter on the basis of the feed you can most cheaply buy or provide at home. Ask your State Agricultural Experiment Station for free bulletins on the subject.

TO GET RID OF MOLES.—Kindly advise me how to rid my lawn of moles. They are destroying my lawn and young fruit trees and the bulbs in my flower bed. Our cat used to catch three or four every day until some bad boys shot her, and now the moles are so numerous and active that I can't keep anything in the ground. MRS. F. K., Elm Grove, W. Va.

A.—It will be necessary to set special mole traps in the runs. The traps may be bought at the hardware store, or ordered there. It often is possible to see a mole at work, by watching the movement of the earth of the burrow, and quickly throw it out of the ground and kill it, by means of a spade or fork. We think the moles are not likely to injure your fruit trees, as they would hardly dig deep enough for that. Although moles are a nuisance in the lawn and flower bed, on the whole they do the farmer more good than harm by eating multitudes of destructive worms, grubs and insects that infest the soil; that is what they live on and what they burrow for. Moles do not feed on roots or other vegetation.

TOMATOES FOR CANNING.—I am thinking of raising tomatoes and canning them (by the steam pressure method) for the market. How many bushels ought a thousand plants to produce? How many No. 2 cans could I fill from a bushel? J. E. B., Rockland, R. I.

A.—One thousand plants should yield not less than 250 bushels. If the season is favorable, the soil suitable and the plants are of a good variety this yield may go to 400 bushels. With tomatoes, as with all other crops so much depends on soil, variety, climatic conditions, methods of planting and subsequent culture that no accurate estimate can be made. A bushel should fill about fifteen quart cans if there is not too much waste in canning.

FEEDING COWS.—Do green corn stalks fed to cows dry them up? (2) Is there any nourishment in bean pods after they have been thrashed? (3) Is oat straw good feed for milch cows? WM. K., Machias, Maine.

A.—Green corn fodder is an excellent feed for dairy cows in the dry weather of July and August when the pastures tend to become brown and bare. Feed them lightly at first. It is the sudden feeding of large quantities of green stalks or any other feed that does the harm. As the stalks mature snap off half of the ears or more before feeding. (2) Hogs eat bean pods and get some good out of them, if they have plenty of other good feed, but they cannot be considered of much value for such feeding and are unfit feed for other animals. (3) Let the cows eat oat straw in the yard when let out for water. Such straw, if bright and fresh, is a good adjunct to other hay, fodder and grain or meals. It is fine for idle horses and growing colts.

ALFALFA HAY FOR HORSES.—Can you give me any information as to the effect of feeding Alfalfa hay to horses? Is it the growing of Alfalfa that makes the Argentine a great stockraising country?

R. B., Easton, Pa.

A.—In some of the mountain states Alfalfa hay is the sole roughage ration of work horses. In those states Alfalfa cures perfectly without molding. This rarely is the case in states where rain is plentiful and the sunlight less strong and prevalent. Moldy silage is bad for horses. It may cause forage poisoning or act too strongly on the kidneys and bowels. Feed Alfalfa hay as a part ration with other sound hay under ordinary circumstances and reduce the amount if the bowels loosen too much or if the kidneys are irritated. Do not feed any hay that is moldy. The Argentine is famous as a grazing country on account of its natural pastures or pampas as well as its fine crops of Alfalfa.

FOAMY BITTER CREAM.—I have a good milch cow about six years old. She has had three calves and is about four months with calf again. For the last two weeks, although she has given her usual amount of milk and the cream looks nice but it is impossible to get butter from it. It will get thick in the churn so you can scarcely turn the dasher, but instead of the butter coming it whips up as light as sea foam and has a bitter taste. I have tried it with fresh sweet cream and with older cream, also with sour buttermilk added, and have churned it at cooler and warmer temperatures but with the same result. Is something wrong with the cow or is the trouble due to the feed? She has good Alfalfa hay, raw potatoes, beets and carrots of which she eats heartily. W. H., West Bishop, Cal.

A.—Often this trouble is from bacteria in the milk utensils and so you should scrupulously cleanse, scald and sundry the vessels or the germs may get in the milk during milking if carelessly done. Give the cow a pound dose of epsom salts with a cupful of molasses and half a cupful of salt in three pints of warm water as one dose, and then mix and once each of powdered wood charcoal and half an ounce of granular hyposulphite of soda in her feed twice daily for a while. Stop the roots and add wheat bran, corn-meal, gluten or hominy and oilmeal to the ration for a time. If possible feed Alfalfa only as a part ration of roughage.

WHERE TO GET THE INFORMATION.—I have a nice colt just weaned and I want some remedies to keep off diseases such as the distemper, worms and others. I also have a nice flock of hens and I want a remedy to make them lay. Give me full information on doctoring all kinds of young stock such as calves, pigs and colts. Please give me the best remedies to keep off disease and keep them in a growing, thrifty condition, remedies that are not poisonous. L. A., Roy, Ky.

A.—Do you realize what you are asking? Your questions cover the entire field of veterinary medicine and surgery, and all that is known about breeding, feeding and care of the various kinds of farm stock. To give you the full information you request on these subjects would take up every page of this issue and of every issue of COMFORT for months and years to come. Very many books and government bulletins have been issued on these subjects and we must refer you to these for information concerning so extensive a field of inquiry. Write to the Department of Agriculture of your state and the U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., for their bulletins on the subjects in which you are interested. They may be had free for the asking; but take care to name the subjects you wish to be informed about. We are glad to answer specific questions and give advice in regard to particular cases and special conditions, but of course we cannot print such extensive and general information as you ask. Another great mistake you make in asking for "remedies that will keep off disease and keep them (young stock) in a growing, thrifty condition" and "a remedy to make them (hens) lay." There is no such remedy or set of remedies as will keep off disease and keep young stock in a growing, thrifty condition or that will make hens lay. A remedy is medical or surgical treatment to restore diseased creatures to health and should never be administered to healthy animals, except a few well-known preventives such, for instance, as the hog cholera vacine, to be given only when the animals are threatened with some particular disease. Proper feed, care, shelter, good air and good water and clean, sanitary conditions are the only reliable and effective means of keeping stock in growing, thrifty condition and of making hens lay. If your stock and hens are healthy this will keep them healthy, growing and thrifty. Drugs are only for the sick and are injurious to those that are well. When your stock is sick employ a good veterinarian if there is one within reach, if not, then treat the animal yourself the best you can with such remedies as you understand. This is sound advice for all farmers. If you would start a scrap book and cut out and paste into it, month after month, all the articles as they appear in this department and the questions and answers in COMFORT'S Veterinary and Poultry departments, and index them for future reference, you will soon have quite an extensive and thoroughly reliable source of information ready at hand.

Edna pulled up her collar and gave him her hand again, and they pass on; but the mist had longer legs, and overtook them, throwing a wet blanket over the hills, hiding the lake, then the trees near them, then the stones at their feet, and then——

"Bad as a London fog," said Cyril, trying to proceed. "I can understand some of the stories they tell you about people being lost."

Edna, who has been looking down at her feet for some time in silence, stopped dead short, and crept a little closer to him.

"Yes," she says, with a little, soft laugh, "for we are lost now."

Cyril pulls up as if he had been shot.

"What!"

"Where is the track?"

Cyril stoops down—he does not loose his hold of her hand.

"By George! we have missed it!"

There is a moment's silence; then Cyril feels for his wax matches and strikes one. It is about as much use as a glowworm.

Edna smiles.

"We must wait," she says.

"How long?"

"Until it clears."

"It is coming thicker still, why——" feeling the sleeve of her ulster, which is not so thick as it looks—"you are nearly wet through already; and you were in bed—well in your room yesterday with a cold! Here——" slipping off his ulster—"put this on."

"No!" firmly.

"Yes," decisively.

"No, please!" imploringly.

"Edna! I insist. This coat I have on is quite thick enough—there!"

With anxious care he brushes the light, feathery moisture from her, then wraps his ulster round her. She seems very small in the great thing.

"I'm doubly lost now," she says, with a merry laugh.

But Cyril is in no laughing mood.

He is answerable for this sweet, innocent, peerless child.

"How long will this confounded mist last?" he says; "you know something about them."

Edna thinks a moment and crosses her arms over her bosom.

"It is so thick, it may last till night."

"What?" says Cyril, then he says in an altered tone—"Child, I must get you home before night if I die for it——"

Then, after a moment's silence, he can feel that she is trembling; her own words have brought a dread to her hitherto fearless young heart. All night! They may be lost all night! And Aunt Martha—what will she do—what will she say? All in a moment her mood changes from courageous to timid and imploring.

One hand goes to her face to stem the tear that suddenly springs to her eyes.

Cyril literally shakes with agony at her sudden misery.

"Don't!" he says, sharply; her tears stab him. "It all my cursed stupidity! Edna, I'll take you home before night or—that brook, we must be near it! If I could think—— Ah! where is that ball of crochet cotton you had in the train?"

"My crochet cotton! What do you want with that?" Edna says, but she takes it out of her pocket and hands it to him.

Cyril takes the ball, unwinds a round of the cotton, and tries it; it is not very strong. Edna waits, and watches, after a fashion, in smiling curiosity.

"See here, child," he says, "I must find that track, and we must push on—we must! There is no use waiting for this beastly mist, it may last for hours; there is only one resource. You take hold of this end and hold tight, I'll go with the matches and hunt for the track, and run out the ball as I go, so that I can feel my way back to you."

Edna shudders.

"Oh, no—no!"

"Yes," says Cyril. "Courage, my child! Keep tight hold of the cotton. You don't mind being left for a few minutes. If you knew how I hate leaving you; but it can't be helped."

Edna chokes back her tears and shakes her head.

"Do you think I am afraid to be left? It is not that!"

"What, then? Have you got it tight?"

"No! You don't know which way to go! We may be on the edge of a precipice——"

Cyril laughs carelessly.

"Oh, I shall be all right. I must find the track; keep hold of the cotton, and if I happen to slip, or it should break, stop where you are—don't move an inch; the ulster's warm."

As he speaks he presses her hand, and then loosens his hold of it.

Edna clutches his arm and holds it like a tiny vise.

"No—no! I don't mind staying!" she sobs. "You must not go—I——"

Cyril puts her hand away tenderly but firmly.

"Child, you don't know what you say. I'd rather die than you should stay here all night."

She puts her hands up to her face and shudders; then she catches him again, and, in a low voice, says:

"Give me the ball a moment—it isn't strong enough."

"Yes, I think so," he says, and puts it into her hand.

With a long breath she holds it aloft a moment, then flings it boldly into space.

"What's that?" exclaims Cyril. "The ball—good God! you haven't thrown the ball——"

For answer she falls on his breast, her hands upon his shoulders, her sweet, piteous face upturned to him.

"Yes—I—have thrown it away! I would rather stay here forever—I would rather die here than you should go."

The strong arm trembles like a leaf; he clasps her to him with a low cry, and hides her sweet, fair face upon his bosom.

"Oh, Edna! my darling—my darling!"

PUT PLANTS TO SLEEP.—Dr. J. C. Bose, a British botanist, before a distinguished gathering of the Botanical Society of America in the medical Laboratory of the University of Pennsylvania successfully anæsthetized a mimosa plant and then measured its "nerve" currents. By means of a microscopic lantern Dr. Bose showed that a poisonous solution injected into the plant by means of a small cylindrical instrument of his own construction produced the same effect on the mimosa that it would on animal life. "Plant nerve tissue corresponds with animal nerve tissue," he said. "There are constant rhythmic movements in these plant tissues resembling rhythmic movements in animal muscles."

Tobacco Habit BANISHED in 48 to 72 Hours

No craving for tobacco in any form after the first dose.

Don't try to quit the tobacco habit unaided. It's a losing fight against heavy odds and means a serious shock to the nervous system. Let the tobacco habit quit YOU. It will quit you, if you will just take Tobacco Redeemer, according to directions, for two or three days. It is the most marvelously quick and thoroughly reliable remedy for the tobacco habit the world has ever known.

Not a Substitute

Tobacco Redeemer is absolutely harmless and contains no habit-forming drugs of any kind. It is in no sense a substitute for tobacco. After finishing the treatment you have absolutely no desire to use tobacco again or to continue the use of the remedy. It quiets the nerves, and will make you feel better in every way. It makes not a particle of difference how long you have been using tobacco, how much you use or in what form you use it—whether you smoke cigars, cigarettes, pipe, chew plug or fine cut or use snuff. Tobacco Redeemer will positively banish every trace of desire in from 48 to 72 hours. This we absolutely guarantee in every case or money refunded.

Write today for our free booklet showing the deadly effect of tobacco upon the human system and positive proof that Tobacco Redeemer will quickly free you of the habit.

268 is COMFORT'S Total to Date

Four wheel chairs in February isn't bad, though I had hoped it might be six as it was in January. But in January we had two wheel-chair clubs of full 200 subscriptions each, and that just accounts for the difference.

Following are the names of the shut-ins who are made happy by the four February wheel chairs. The figures after the names indicate the number of subscriptions which the friends of the respective recipients sent in their behalf.

Lucy Fuller, Tacoma, Wash., 100; Fitzhugh Lee Johnston, Owensboro, Ky., 96; Harvey Martin, Dallas City, Ill., 90; Miss Golden Gertie Fippen, R. F. D. 19, Atlanta, Ind., 87.

Lucy Fuller sent the 100 subscriptions, that put her at the head of the February list, all in less than one month which seems to have kept her so busy that she has not found time to send me a description of herself.

Fitzhugh Lee Johnston is a bright boy of sixteen crippled by paralysis of the right side of his body which has checked the development and growth of his right arm and right leg and rendered them nearly useless. He bears his affliction patiently and makes the best of what facilities he has by pushing himself about in a rocking chair, but never gets out of the back yard. You can imagine what a blessing the COMFORT wheel chair will be by enabling him to get out of the back yard and see something of the world about him.

Harvey Martin is another smart little boy cripple of ten years. Although he cannot walk at all his arms and hands are strong and he manages to roll himself about in his little express wagon. His mother thinks he will be able to handle the wheel chair which I have ordered for him.

Miss Fippen is a young woman. For the last three years she has suffered severely from rheumatism which has drawn up her lower limbs to a sitting posture so that she is unable to walk or even stand. She has the use of her arms and hands with which she expects to be able to move herself about in the wheel chair which is on its way to her.

I need scarce remind you that on our list of shut-ins is a host of other poor unfortunates whose sufferings are as acute as either of these, all needing your help to get a necessary wheel chair. Will you not help them, and do it now? Send one subscription, at least, this month to be credited to COMFORT'S Wheel-Chair Club.

We have an interesting Roll of Honor this month, printed below. And in this connection let me correct an error in last month's Roll of Honor which should have contained two names omitted by mistake; they are Mrs. E. M. Henninger, Pa., 9 subscriptions, and Miss Sophronia M. Day, Pa., 5, and Mrs. Henry Crawley, Texas, should have read Crowley, Okla.

The gratitude expressed in some of the letters of thanks from recipients of COMFORT wheel chairs is touching. I wish especially to call attention to the the letters of J. E. Carter and Mrs. S. C. Jones. They did not stop working for the Wheel-Chair Club as soon as they got the chair for Mr. Carter, but have kept on sending in subscriptions to help provide chairs for other shut-ins. I am happy to say that some others do likewise, though some stop work the minute they get what they are after for themselves or their friends.

Sincerely yours,
W. H. GANNETT, Publisher of COMFORT.

P. S. For the information of our many new subscribers let me explain that for each and every 200 new 15-months subscriptions to COMFORT sent in either singly or in clubs by persons who direct that they are to be credited to COMFORT'S WHEEL-CHAIR CLUB instead of claiming the premiums to which they would be entitled, I give a FIRST-CLASS INVALID WHEEL CHAIR to some worthy, destitute, crippled Shut-in and pay the freight, too. It is a large and expensive premium for me to give for that number of subscribers, but I am always glad to do my part a little faster each month than you do yours.

Subscription price is 25 cents, but if sent in clubs of five or more for the Wheel-Chair Club, I accept them at 20 cents each.

Hope Other Shut-Ins Will be Fortunate as he in Getting a COMFORT Wheel Chair

DUBLIN, Feb. 1, 1915, TEXAS.

DEAR COMFORT:

This morning I received the rolling chair well crated and in good order. I am thankful to COMFORT for a substantial, well built chair and I hope to be faithful to get enough more subscriptions to make a full 200 for my chair, and I believe my friends who have worked to get mine for me will stay with me until we get you the full 200 and maybe more, as I want to do all I can to help other invalid shut-ins to get wheel chairs, and I hope they will be as fortunate as I am to get a nice wheel chair free by the aid of COMFORT subscribers. So wishing COMFORT to continue the good work for the unfortunate invalids, I am, Yours very truly,

J. E. CARTER.

Thanks from Those Who Worked to get the Wheel Chair for J. E. Carter

DUBLIN, Feb. 2, 1915, TEXAS.

DEAR MR. GANNETT:

We are all thanking you very much for the nice wheel chair you sent Mr. Carter. He is almost overjoyed with it. We will continue to send subscriptions as we can get them. I am with you in trying to help suffering humanity. Sincerely your friend,

MRS. S. C. JONES.

The Roll of Honor comprises the names of those who have sent five or more subscriptions to credit of the Wheel-Chair Club during the month previous. Following each name is the number of subscriptions sent.

Comfort's Home Lawyer

In this department will be carefully considered any legal problem which may be submitted by a subscriber. All opinions given herein will be prepared at our expense by eminent counsel.

Inasmuch as it is one of the principal missions of COMFORT to aid in upbuilding and upholding the sanctity of the home, no advice will be given on matters pertaining to divorce. Any paid-up subscriber to COMFORT is welcome to submit inquiries, which, so far as possible, will be answered in this department. If any reader, other than a subscriber, wishes to take advantage of this privilege, it may be done by sending twenty-five (25) cents, in silver or stamps, for a 15-month subscription to COMFORT thus obtaining all the benefits which our subscribers enjoy including a copy of the magazine for fifteen months.

Should any subscriber desire an immediate, special opinion on any legal question, privately mailed, it may be had by sending one dollar with a letter asking such advice, addressing the same to "THE EDITOR, COMFORT'S HOME LAWYER," Augusta, Maine, and in reply a carefully prepared opinion will be sent in an early mail.

Full names and addresses must be signed by all persons seeking advice in this column but not necessarily for publication. Unless otherwise requested, initials only will be published.

C. M., Pennsylvania.—We do not think the laws of your state require that, an alderman, magistrate or justice of the peace shall not drink intoxicating liquor during the term of office.

O. B., Washington.—Under the laws of your state we think that except for some small provision for the widow and minor children, the just claims against a decedent's estate must be paid before any share therefrom goes to the heirs at law or next of kin; we think that if a creditor accepts the individual note of some other person in payment of his claim, he releases the estate and must look to the maker of the note for the payment of such claim.

A Subscriber, Indiana.—We think it customary for the holder of a mortgage to be secured by a fire insurance policy or policies which read that the loss, if any, shall first be payable to such mortgagee as his interest may appear; we think that it is necessary for the mortgagee to have the policy properly drawn in order to hold the insurance company in case of loss.

A. M., Wyoming.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that upon the death of a married man, leaving no will and leaving no child or descendant, the estate would go three quarters to the surviving widow and one quarter to the father or mother of the intestate or the survivor of them, except that it is provided that if the estate does not exceed ten thousand dollars and there are no children or descendants of children the whole descends to the surviving widow absolutely.

E. W. S., New Jersey.—Under the laws of Massachusetts we are of the opinion that an executor should pay claims after one year and within ten years after his appointment, and that he must render an account at least once a year and at such other times as shall be required by the court, but may be excused in any year if the court is satisfied that it is not necessary or expedient, and that he must pay legacies at such times and in such proportions as the court may direct in a judgment or decree entered upon such accounting, but we do not think an executor can be compelled to pay legacies, in any event, in less than one year from the time of his appointment.

L. A. H., Pennsylvania.—Under the laws of your state we are of the opinion that upon the death of a married man, leaving no will and leaving a surviving widow and children, the widow would receive dower of a one third interest for life in his real estate and a one third interest absolutely in the personal estate, the same rule holding in cases where the children belonged to the deceased by a former marriage. We think life insurance is payable to the beneficiary named in the policy, and if the man's estate is named as such beneficiary, the same would be divided according to the rule for the division of other personal property.

L. M. S., Missouri.—We are of the opinion that the usual grounds upon which to base a will contest would be lack of testamentary capacity, undue influence, that the will was not legally drawn or executed or that same did not express testator's true intent; we can form no opinion as to whether the testator you mention possessed testamentary capacity, or whether undue influence was exercised upon him, these questions being questions of fact and proper ones for a court or jury to decide after hearing the testimony of the witnesses produced by both sides on the trial. We think the life tenant should produce evidence at the time payments are made to her, to show that she is entitled to receive same; we think the executor or trustee would be personally liable for over payments made to her or her estate; we think that in case fraudulent payments are made to the life tenant or her estate, the persons guilty of the fraud could be punished.

Miss L. O., Oregon.—We think the postmaster, who borrowed from you the papers concerning the company you mention, should return the same to you, and if the same are of any value we think you can compel him to return them or to reimburse you to the extent of your damages.

E. J. B., Pennsylvania.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that the payment of a judgment will be presumed after twenty years, and that the statute of limitations runs against an action for slanderous words spoken one year or more previous.

B., California.—We think that in disposing of the property, owned by you and standing in your maiden name, you should sign your present name and write below it or after it the word "formerly" followed by your maiden name. To illustrate: supposing your present name to be Mary Brown and that your maiden name was Jones, you would sign Mary Brown formerly Mary Jones. It is not necessary for you to execute a deed from yourself under your maiden name to yourself under your widowed name.

E. E. B., Pennsylvania.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that it is necessary for a wife to survive her husband in order for her to acquire any vested or alienable interest in the property owned by him and standing in his name, except that he can be compelled to support her; we think, in your state, if she survives him, and he leaves no will, and leaves no child or descendants, she would receive the whole estate both real and personal to the aggregate value of five thousand dollars, in addition to the widow's exemption; and that if the estate exceeds such sum she will receive absolutely five thousand dollars, and in addition one half of the balance of the personal property absolutely together with one half of the balance of the real estate for the term of her natural life, except that if he leaves no heirs she takes all in fee.

Gus., Maryland.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that the husband can release by deed his interest in his wife's property similar to dower, but that such interest can only be released by deed and that in almost all cases the husband's signature is necessary to the conveyance of his wife's property; we think if no provision is made for after born issue, in the will you mention, it would be better for the woman you mention to execute a new will.

Jennie, Virginia.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that there is no limitation as to the amount a husband or wife may by will, leave away from his family except that a husband or wife cannot deprive the survivor of them of the right to a one third of the surplus of the personal estate absolutely, and to dower to the widow of a one third interest for life in the real estate in any event; and courtesy of a life estate of the whole of the real estate for life to the husband, provided they leave issue born alive; we do not think the signature of either is necessary to the will of the other; we think the rights to dower or courtesy may be wavered by acceptance of the terms of the will, or by any proper instrument in writing. We think that in cases of intestacy children share equally regardless of whether they are children by a former wife, or children by the surviving widow. We think that the claims of a child for services performed for the decedent would have to be proved as a claim against the estate in order to legally entitle such child to payment of same.

B. J. J., Minnesota.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that upon the death of a married man, leaving no will, and leaving no child or descendant, his whole estate, after payment of debts, would descend to his surviving spouse.

E. S., Texas.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that no signature or acknowledgment of the wife is necessary to the sale of the husband's real estate, except it be a sale of homestead; we think, in your state, the husband can, during marriage, dispose of the community property without the wife's consent.

I Save Kidneys

Cure Backache, Bladder Trouble Rheumatism.

My New Three-Fold LEXOID Treatment has relieved Thousands From That Back-Breaking, Digging, Twisting, Terrible Torturing Agony, Stiff Joints, Heart-Wringing Rheumatic Pains and Unbearable Bladder Troubles.

I Want You to Try My Treatment

Don't spend another needless day of suffering. I will send you my regular, full, complete three-fold Lexoid, combined course of treatment on trial without a penny's expense, charges paid, just as my unequaled offer states. I don't mean a small, worthless sample, or a trial test treatment, that you can't tell anything about. I mean a regular, full treatment, and when I say a full treatment, I mean a full treatment, just as I say. I will send it to you complete—charges paid—delivered to your door—ready for you to use—so you can commence it at once.

My treatment has helped thousands to regain their health. Those with tired, lame, aching backs, with unbearable bladder and urinary troubles, others stiff and bent with rheumatism—and it has made them well, the most chronic, severe, long-standing, obstinate cases, after all the other remedies they tried had failed. They were suffering, and it eased their pains, soothed their aches, brightened their lives and made them happy, and now I want you to try it, to test it, and see for yourself just what it will do for you.

If you have backache, kidney, bladder trouble or rheumatism, dizziness, puffy swellings under the eyes or in the feet and ankles, nervousness, tired and worn-out feeling, if the urine is light and pale, dark colored or cloudy, if you make water often, getting up during the night, if it smarts and burns in passing, if there is sediment or brick dust when it stands write for my treatment without a minute's delay.

Don't Continue Suffering

My specialty is such diseases. I treat thousands of cases—helping them after all else they tried had failed. I am successful in my life work, because I love it. I love to feel I am helping people to enjoy life, and I want to help you to see the bright side of life, and enjoy true health and happiness.

I know you want to be well and strong again, so you can work, and walk, and run, and jump without pain; so you can sleep without disturbance, and wake up refreshed and rested, able to use every muscle, nerve, cord and joint of your body, without suffering misery all the time.

I want you to try my treatment. My new scientific course of medicines—soothing, healing, penetrating remedies—especially intended to drive away uric acid, cleanse, purify, strengthen, invigorate and encourage the kidneys to properly filter the blood.

My Unequaled Offer

Now here is my offer—I will send you a regular, full, complete, three-fold Lexoid Course of treatment, without a penny in advance—charges paid—ready to use—so you can try it without a penny's expense, just as I promise. Remember, I don't mean a sample or a trial, or a test, such as others call proof treatments. I mean a regular, full, complete course of remedies.

Take it when it comes. Use half of it, and see just what it does. Then when you know it is helping you, when you know you are getting better, just send me a small amount, an amount within your easy reach—an amount you can easily afford to spare—that is all I'll ask. I know you'll be willing to do your part when it helps you—and your word is good enough for me. It should help you quickly. But you are to pay nothing unless it does. Try it first, pay afterwards when you know, not before. When you have used half of it, if you are not satisfied, return what's left and pay nothing. It doesn't cost you a penny to try my treatment—I will send it to you, charges paid, take it, try it, and find out.

A Full Treatment on Trial

I am the only one to-day making this offer, sending a full treatment, on trial for such diseases. You know I could not afford to do it, if I did not feel sure it would help you—if I did not know what it would do. That's why I can afford to send it first—but you are the one to decide: you are the one to be the judge, it must help you, it must satisfy you—before you send a penny. And you are the one to say. I will take your word. It's all left right with you yourself what you say goes. That's all I care for. I don't want a penny unless it helps you. I would not take a cent th. t I am not entitled to. I believe in giving everyone a square deal—in being honest—I want to do what's right—that's why I am making you the broadest, most straightforward, fairest, most liberal one-sided offer ever made. When I have confidence enough in my treatment to send it to you this way, I know you'll be willing to try it and that's all I ask. Don't send a penny in your letter, not even a postage stamp; just your name and address and where to send the treatment. Address your letter to me personally, like this, DR. H. MICHELL DeWERTH, to be trying to turn out crude stuff of your own. The world is full of square pegs which are trying to get into round holes because the majority of the human race will insist on thinking they are square pegs when they are round, and round pegs when they are square. It takes education and lots of it before we find out just what we really are, and if you had a little more education Ole, instead of dreaming of authorship you would be turning your attention to agriculture, a far more important and necessary calling.

PRESCOTT, MICH.

UNCLE CHARLIE:

In reading in COMFORT the article on "Our ten billion dollar harvest," it came to my mind to ask you some questions. What does this wonderful crop profit the day laborer? His wages are no higher, but flour (of which there is such a great plenty), is higher than ever before. Think of paying one dollar and fifteen cents for a twenty-five pound sack of flour. The farmer can get one dollar a bushel now for his wheat. That's fine for the farmer. But the farmer only pays his laborers a dollar for a ten-hour day's work and that won't buy a sack of flour. I really can't see where the bountiful crop benefits the poor fellow. When women vote we'll see if they have better judgment than the men. I hope so at any rate.

A COMFORT reader from the unprogressive state of Michigan where the men don't let their women vote.

MRS. JULIA STALKER.

You ask what a wonderful crop does to help the day laborer and mention that he has to pay a dollar fifteen for a twenty-five pound sack of flour. You are not looking at the matter in the right light, my dear friend. The big crop has helped everybody indirectly if not directly, and it has helped you. If there had only been half a crop instead of a big crop that twenty-five pound bag of flour would probably have cost you two dollars instead of a dollar fifteen. If we had had a crop failure most of us would be starving to death, so let us be thankful for that big crop whether the profits that accrued from it reach the right hands or not. Don't be hard on the farmer if he is getting a dollar for his wheat, and isn't able to pay big wages. The average income of the farmer is only six hundred and forty dollars a year, that's twelve dollars a week and a man can't pay very high wages on that sum, though according to government statistics the workers on the farm are getting more pay, and country wages are increasing faster than those paid in the factories. Farm wages differ a great deal of course according to the locality. A farm hand in Nevada without board gets fifty-six dollars a month, in South Carolina he gets seventeen dollars and ninety cents. It would be some fun to note how the farm laborer in South Carolina blows in that princely sum of seventeen dollars and ninety cents. My rent alone is twenty-five dollars a month and I have the cheapest kind of a flat. If I lived in the suburbs of Pittsburg I'd have to pay more still. The wage earner in Nevada however, has not any cinch for when I lived out West board was a dollar a day in any old kind of boarding house, and you couldn't get a room bigger than a dog kennel for less than fifteen dollars a month. You must remember that the farmer only gets thirty-five cents of the consumer's dollar. That's what Governor Glynn of New York State told the Co-operative Farm Societies at Utica, N. Y. Another thing dear friend, you must remember, not all farmers own their farms. Many pay rent, or farm on shares, and at that rate perhaps the farmer in your vicinity got fifty cents a bushel for his wheat instead of a dollar. If you turn to Senate Document No. 847, Vol. 2, page 410, you will find a conversation between Senator Smoot of Utah and a Mr. Eubank that is very interesting. Senator Smoot: "Do you think the wages you pay have advanced as much in proportion as the prices of groceries and the stuff that you sell?" Mr. Eubank: "I do not think they have, because if I had to work for the salary that some of my clerks get—and I pay them sixty dollars a month—I could not live on it. At the same time, sixty dollars is right good pay for a grocer's clerk." Senator Smoot: "You could live on it if you lived the way they do?" Mr. Eubank: "Yes sir; but they hardly live. I know that." Don't blame the farmer if you are paying too much for your flour, but just cast your eyes in the direction of Chicago. There is a little old food trust out there that in the monopoly line can give pointers to the Standard Oil. This trust does a business and handles nearly as much money as Uncle Sam. It is butting into nearly every line of business you can think of from toy elephants to shoe laces, hog squeals to fancy soaps. The whole country is throttled and exploited by this trust of trusts and probably no one feels its iron heel more than the farmer. What are you going to do about it? The people of Illinois know all about it even if some people in Michigan do not, and the odds are, and I'm writing this before election, they will send the very men to Congress who are most instrumental in perpetuating the ravages of this monopoly. In other words if Mr. Cannon is not back in Congress by the time this appears in print I shall be a very astonished man. The women will do a great deal with their votes eventually but you've got to give them time to study conditions. Women are doing more reading and thinking today than men are and they are getting more education, but progressive women have got a tremendous task before them. They've not only got to fight the liquor trust and reconstruct the unprogressive man but they've got to educate and put a social conscience into millions of their unprogressive sisters who are still in the hat, bonnet and Willie's pants stage and haven't glimpsed the great future that is before them and the great part they are destined to play in making this a safe, sane and sensible world to live in.

GHENT, KY.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:

I am a little blonde rustic maid of fourteen years. Although I have never ventured within your happy circle, I long to come just once if I can succeed in jumping way over the waste basket, with this dreadful "hobble" skirt.

We are a family of four, Daddy, Mamma, brother Joe and I. My brother is nineteen, and finishes high school this year. I am in the country school. We have a nice home band, Daddy playing the cornet and clarinet, Joe the violin and I the piano. I'll mention several selections which I play; Grande "Polka De Concert," "Poet and Pheasant," by Suppe; "Last Hope," by Gottschalk; "Tanhauser," by Wagner; "Le Ruisseau," by Wollenhaupt; "The Butterfly," by Calixa Lavallee. Wish you could hear me play, and our band also. I think music better than any of the fine arts, and have high ambitions in that line. I also want a good education. I like farm life, with its many pleasures. We live in a thickly settled neighborhood, three and one half miles from Ghent, that place being situated on the Ohio river, half way between Cincinnati and Louisville.

I am a little "Tom boy" girl and can say am not so foolish to want beaus yet a while. Mamma says my only beau will be my brother for several years. I wish you lived near our farm, Uncle Charlie. I would bring you eggs which my bantys lay, and Jersey cow's milk, with yellow cream for your dinner every day.

You are doing a fine work Uncle Charlie. A man of your high principles exerts an influence which will live on, and on. I have gained so much by your good advice. With best wishes, from your cousin,

MILDRED SCHIRMER.

So you are a little blonde, rustic maid, are you Mildred? Glad to hear it. It's a good thing you are a rustic maid, and not a rusty maid as some of the girl cousins describe themselves. It's strange what queer mistakes some people will make. My waste basket is as big as a house. The only way you could get over it in a hobble skirt would be to crawl into the mouth of a cannon and get shot over it. Couldn't you use a step ladder? Well not unless you'd let me turn my head. So you are in the country school, eh? Talking of school reminds me of a little incident that happened in the receptive days of my youth. The master wrote on the blackboard three words: "Tripping, conclusion, elephant." and told us to write a sentence including these three words. After a few minutes Bill Brown who sat in the next seat to me wrote as follows: "An elephant went tripping down the hill with a tin can tied to his conclusion." I'm just delighted Mildred to find your family is so musical. I'm familiar with practically all the pieces you play, and congratulate you that there is no ragtime or jagtime among them; but why haven't you got one of my pieces in your program? I used to have to hide my songs so Wagner would not steal all my melodies. There is one piece you have on your list that appeals to me immensely and that is: "The Poet and the Pheasant." I'm passionately fond of pheasant. They are delicious eating but very classy and expensive. But what however I can't understand is the association of a poet with a pheasant. If this piece of music had been entitled "The Poet and the Free Lunch," I could have understood the connection. The average poet is supposed to live on fried moonbeams and boiled hyacinths with fricassed water lilies on the side. As a matter of fact when the poet lives at all you'll find him in a corner saloon grabbing a pig's foot from the free lunch counter when the bar tender isn't looking. Don't think that I am speaking from personal experience, as I'm no poet and don't want to be. I'm just a verse juggler and that's good enough for me. But I have a friend who is a poet and I know how he lives. If I were to even show him a picture of a pheasant e would drop dead. No, my dear, please don't associate poets with pheasants, it's cruelty to animals. Now Mildred, if you will look at that sheet of music again you will find it's entitled: "The Poet And The Peasant" and not the "Poet and The Pheasant." A peasant is a rustic laborer, and like the poet, as poor as a church mouse, or an American citizen under a democratic or republican administration. Poet and peasant make a very fine combination, so do the poet and the pig's foot, but the pheasant is food for kings and the only way a poet could ever get a pheasant would be to steal it from the ice box of a swell city restaurant or grab it by the left ear while it was sleeping in the tree top on some ancestral estate. I congratulate you Mildred, on being able to play Von Suppe's glorious overture to his opera "Poet and Peasant." There is nothing more delightful in all music. I remember I went simply wild the first time I heard it. Music is the spice of life and I would to heaven all people were really musical, not only when they are eating soup, but at other times as well. Nothing has helped to kill the musical taste of this country so much as the atrocious slush that is sung in country churches where the so-called Gospel hymns in all their malignant crudity have a strangle hold on people who would devour fine devotional music if they had a chance to get it. We want devotional, not emotional music. We have good music in our city churches, but the country church music is mostly made in Chicago and is the most awful junk that was ever foisted on a suffering people. You who have any love of music or influence in your churches, should secure the Episcopal hyman book, and have the glorious hymns it contains introduced in your churches. These hymns suit any and all denominations. The words of the hymns are written by real poets, not slush writers, and the music is gathered from the works of all the great composers, devotional and beautiful, inspiring and uplifting. It's impossible to make people vote right, but I think there is a slight hope of getting them to sing right. Remember God has a musical ear, and I can imagine on Sunday when some of the rural music floats up to the great White Throne, though the sincerity of the effort is apreciated, the doors of paradise are closed to keep the awful noise out. If there is any music in heaven rest assured it's good. Mildred you can thank heaven you are living near Ghent, Kentucky, and not Ghent, Belgium. If you were in the latter place that poet would be full of bullet holes and the pheasant would probably be in the Kaiser's stomach. I should like to see daddy playing both the cornet and clarinet in your band. I suppose he plays the cornet one side of his mouth and the clarinet the other, and you play the piano in between. Nothing like having a daddy who can blow himself once in a while.

clamored for admittance so persistently that it was deemed advisable to impose no age limit; thus all are eligible to admittance into our League provided they conform to its rules and are animated by the child spirit.

Membership is restricted to COMFORT subscribers and costs thirty cents, only five cents more than the regular subscription to COMFORT which is included. The thirty cents makes you a member of the League and gives you an attractive League button with the letters "C. L. O. C.," a handsome certificate of membership with your name engrossed thereon, and the privilege of having your name in the letter list, also a paid-in-advance subscription to COMFORT. You continue a League member as long as you keep up your subscription to COMFORT. There are no annual dues, so after you have once joined all you have to do to keep in good standing is to keep your subscription to COMFORT paid up.

Please observe carefully the following directions which explain exactly

How to become a Member

Send thirty cents to COMFORT'S Subscription Department, Augusta, Maine, with your request to be admitted into COMFORT'S LEAGUE OF COUSINS, and you will at once receive the League button and your membership certificate and number; you will also receive COMFORT for 15 months if you are a new subscriber; but if you are already a subscriber your subscription will be renewed or extended two full years beyond date of expiration, if you remit 35 cents.

Or, if your subscription is already paid in advance, you can take a friend's 15-months subscription at 25 cents and send it in with five cents of your own, thirty cents in all, with your request for membership, and we will send you the button and membership certificate, and send COMFORT to your friend for 15 months. League subscriptions do not count in premium clubs.

NEVER apply for membership without enclosing thirty cents to include a new subscription or a renewal.

The League numbering over forty thousand members, undoubtedly is the greatest society of young people on earth. It costs but thirty cents to join, and that gives you at least a 15-month subscription to COMFORT also, without extra cost.

Never in the world's history was so much given for so little. Never could thirty cents be invested to such advantage, and bring such splendid returns. Don't hesitate. Join us at once and induce your friends to do likewise.

All those League members who desire a list of the cousins residing in the several states, can secure the same by sending a stamped addressed envelope and five cents in stamps to Nellie Rutherford, 1299 Park Place, Brooklyn, New York, grand secretary.

Special Notice

Never write a subscription or renewal order or application for membership in the body of a letter. Write your subscription or renewal and membership application on a separate sheet of paper, separate from your letter. We have to put all subscription orders on our subscription file at once; so if it is written on the same sheet as your letter, the whole letter has to go on to the subscription file at once and thus can receive no attention from Uncle Charlie.

Never send subscriptions to Uncle Charlie nor to the Secretary of the League; they bother him and cause confusion and delay.

Address all letters to COMFORT, Augusta, Maine, and they will promptly reach the head of the department for which they are intended.

A Physician Cures His Wife Of Consumption

With A Simple Home Treatment. Book Fully Describing The Treatment Sent Absolutely Free To Any Lung Sufferer.

DR. W. H. KNIGHT of East Saugus, Mass., writes: "My wife was down with Consumption, when I ordered the Lloyd treatment. She was very weak from night sweats, cough, and in a feverish condition. I noticed a change for the better after ten day's treatment, and from that time on up to three months, when the cure was completed. The Lloyd Treatment kills the Tubercle Bacillus in the blood and tissue, and it is the only remedy so far discovered that will do this. It is a preventive as well as a cure. It should be used by those who are run down, or those who fear the approach of Consumption. It can be truthfully said that for the cure and prevention of Consumption, it is the most wonderful treatment of the present age."

This is only one of hundreds of letters received from physicians and others reporting cases of consumption and lung trouble restored to health in all sections of the United States. We want to send every lung sufferer absolutely free the startling statements of Dr. W. H. Kiester of Dayton, Ohio, Dr C. G. Pinckard of Kansas City, Mo., Dr. J. H. Ward of Troy, Mo., and many others who report results almost beyond belief, together with a valuable booklet on the cause, prevention and treatment of consumption and lung trouble.

If you are suffering from weakness, blood-spitting, pus-filled sputum, night sweats, chills, fever, loss of flesh, painful lungs, distressing cough, wasted body, loss of strength—write me today and I'll send you ABSOLUTELY FREE the sworn testimony of many who, after suffering with just such distressing symptoms, now state that they ARE CURED, strong, able to work, without ache or pain, happy, full of praise, after a few month's use of this simple home treatment. Send your name and address TODAY. LLOYD CHEMICAL CORPORATION, 501 Franklin, St. Louis, Mo.

ROSES!

6 Beautiful Monthly Blooming Roses Delivered to Your Door For One New Subscription!

BEAUTIFUL Charming Roses in profusion that anybody can grow in any climate and in almost any soil. Again this season we offer our readers a splendid opportunity to secure without money cost a rare collection of six, hardy, vigorous growing rose plants that will bloom and bloom all summer transforming your flower garden into a veritable paradise of delicious fragrance and radiant colors. The six varieties described below are strong, well-rooted plants ready to be transplanted to your garden as soon as you receive them and we guarantee that they will grow and thrive beautifully if given proper care and attention. No matter in what part of the United States you live, our growers will send them to you at the proper time to plant according to the schedule printed below. Please remember, however, that these dates may vary from ten to fifteen days in event of an extremely early or late spring, so you need not become anxious if they should not reach you just on the date named in schedule. The rose growers who supply us are perfectly familiar with planting conditions in your locality and you may depend upon them to forward the roses to you at the best time for you to put them in the ground. Following is a brief description of each of the six varieties of beautiful ever-blooming roses given you free on this great offer:

DATES TO PLANT ROSES.

Latitude of Florida, Calif., Tex.,	after	Feb.	1
" " Ariz., Okla., So. Car.,	"	Mch.	1
" " Wash., Tenn., Va.,	"	"	15
" " Nev., Kans., Mo.,	"	Apr.,	1
" " Iowa, Ohio, W. Va.,	"	"	15
" " Mont., Mich., N. Y., and all New England States		May	1

Crimson Crown For color effect and general bedding purposes here is a rose that is hard to equal. It is a robust growing variety, quickly developing into a large shapely bush that is literally covered with immense clusters of deep crimson roses which are tinted a rich lemon-white at the base of each petal. The flowers are of attractive form and borne in such profusion as to give the plant a bright brilliant display from early spring until long after the late frosts.

Killarney Queen In this fine new rose some wonderful improvements have been made over the old pink Killarney and the grower now has as nearly a perfect variety as it seems possible to secure. The flowers are massive in size, very double and liberally produced. They are constructed of better substance and are of a richer dark deep pink color than the old variety. In rapid vigorous growing habit it cannot be equalled by any other rose in its class. It seems to be perfectly adapted to soil and weather conditions in all localities and if given some care, small plants will develop into fine large bushes the first season planted, returning for the little attention an abundance of magnificent fragrant flowers. This rose is a hardy everbloomer and flowers from early spring until after freezing weather in the fall.

Climbing American Beauty The American Beauty in all its glory and fragrance, develops into a hardy outdoor climbing rose. It is a prolific bloomer, with a strong habit of growth, thriving and blooming in almost any situation. The bush growing American Beauty is rarely satisfactory when planted in the open ground, but this new climbing variety has proved perfectly hardy in any part of the United States. One plant of this new rose will produce twenty times as many flowers as the old variety. The roses growing on a single stem measure three to four inches in diameter and possess the same delicious fragrance that the American Beauty alone has. This new rose must not be classed among the old-fashioned climbers of the rambler type, as it is distinct from them in its very superior quality. It has a fine foliage that does not burn, its thick glossy leaves remaining on the bush all summer. No lover of beautiful roses should fail to plant this fine climber, as it is a worthy ornament to any garden, and its beauty and fragrance will prove a lasting pleasure and delight.

Bessie Brown This wonderful rose is indeed a crowning masterpiece and has been hailed by flower-lovers everywhere as one of the greatest rose creations of modern times. With a hardy, vigorous constitution, growing to perfection in any soil or location, it has the most magnificent foliage that is possessed by any variety. It is a tremendous grower, producing flowers profusely all through the summer on strong erect stems. The handsome flowers are of unsurpassed beauty. They are full and deep, of a totally distinct character and formed of such substance as to last splendidly when cut. The color is an exquisite creamy white, delicately flushed pink.

Nita Weldon Here is another gold medal winner, well worthy a place in the heart and garden of every flower lover. In habit of growth it is perfection. Both the canes and foliage are of such strength and vigor as to withstand without injury the ravages of insects or disease. Neither soil conditions nor location seem to effect its rapid growth or liberal blooming qualities. The flowers are of globular form, very full and immense in size. They are deliciously fragrant and pure ivory-white with edges of petals tinted the faintest blush.

Lady Hillingdon In this variety has been found every valuable feature the flower-lover could desire of a deep golden everblooming rose. After being awarded gold medals over such varieties as "Sunburst" there is no ground to question its merits. It is a sturdy, vigorous grower, producing long strong stems which hold the beautiful pointed buds upright, making them especially desirable for cut flower purposes. The buds open slowly to full deep golden bloom which hold their form and color much longer than other varieties. In the garden its rich green foliage and abundance of flowers present such a beautiful display of color that it cannot be passed by the most casual observer without an expression of admiration.

Remember These roses are all strong healthy plants on their own roots and will be sent to you by Parcel Post prepaid packed in wet moss so that you will be sure to receive them in just as good condition as when they leave the greenhouse. You may accept this offer with the perfect assurance that these beautiful ever-blooming roses will grow and develop into rare specimen beauties. If any fail to grow we hereby guarantee to replace them for you free of all cost.

Offer 672 A. For one new 15-month subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 25 cents, we will send you these six beautiful roses free by Parcel Post prepaid.

Offer 672 B. For your own subscription or renewal or extension of your present subscription for one year at 25 cents, and 10 cents additional (35 cents in all), we will send you these six beautiful roses free by Parcel Post prepaid. If you want us to send them immediately be sure to say so in your order otherwise the roses will not be mailed to you until the proper time arrives for you to plant them in your garden.

Thousands Of Dollars In Cash Prizes!

Start NOW If You Want To Win YOUR Share Of The Prize Money Which We Will Distribute Among COMFORT'S Readers This Season. Contest Is Now On So GET BUSY!

EACH AND every month of the six months beginning with November 1914 and ending with April 1915 we shall award a series of Cash Prizes to those of our readers who send in the most 25-cent subscriptions to COMFORT during each month. At the close of the contest April 1915 we shall further distribute 44 Grand Cash Prizes ranging from $5.00 to $150.00 to the 44 contestants who send in the most subscriptions during the entire six months. Also we shall pay 525 Consolation Prizes of $1.00 each to women who enter the contest and fail to win a regular monthly prize. The prizes for each month will be paid on the 8th day of the month following and the names of the prize winners will be announced in COMFORT month by month. Read all about our surprisingly liberal prize offer explained below and enter now for this month's prizes.

You Cannot Lose—You Get Your Premiums Sure

From now on any club you send in will bring you a fine premium sure and may help win a Cash Prize for you also because the same clubs you get up for any of our premiums are also placed to your credit on the Monthly Cash Prizes and Grand Prizes too, if you request it. It only remains for you to send in enough subscriptions to win a Cash Prize any one month or each month for the six months. And remember that every Monthly Prize you win puts you just so much nearer one of the Grand Prizes to be awarded at the close of the contest April 1915. And you still get your regular club premiums just the same. All this money which you may easily win if you will but make the effort is extra and in addition to the premiums which you may select from our catalogue or any issue of COMFORT and which will be sent to you immediately upon receipt of every club you send in.

How Monthly Prizes Double

If you win a monthly prize one month we pay you at once; if you win any monthly prize the next month we pay you double the amount of your second month's prize, and we will continue to pay you double each successive month that you continue to win any monthly prize. The doubling begins with December.

How Monthly Prizes Thribble

If you win the same Monthly Prize three months in succession we pay you double the amount the second month and three times the amount the third month and we continue to pay you three times the amount each successive month that you continue to win the same monthly prize. If, however, you should win the first monthly prize each month for the whole six months, then we will pay you four times the amount of that prize the fourth month, five times the amount the fifth month and six times the amount the sixth month. The thribbling begins with January.

The Consolation Prizes

In addition to the regular Monthly Prizes we shall also in November award 75 Consolation Prizes of $1.00 each, and in the months of December, January, February and March 100 Consolation Prizes of $1.00 each and in April 50 Consolation Prizes of $1.00 each to such women entering the Monthly Contests of those months and failing to win as we think worthy of reward for their unsuccessful efforts. Remember however that these Consolation Prizes do not double or thribble like the Monthly Prizes.

Opening and Closing Dates

Each Monthly Contest (after November) opens on the first day of the month and ends at midnight of the last day of the same month. If you mail Subscriptions on the last day of a month they will be counted to your credit in the contest for that month, providing the postmark on the envelope shows it. This gives an equal opportunity to all of our readers who enter these contests no matter how far off they live. The monthly prizes, each month, are paid to those who send in the most 25-cent subscriptions to COMFORT during the particular month for which the prizes are offered, the first monthly prize for the largest number of subscriptions, the second Monthly Prize for the next largest number, and so on down the list for the month.

917 Cash Prizes In All!

EVERY ONE of the Cash Prizes offered in this contest will actually be paid to the men, women, boys and girls who enter and who send in a sufficient number of subscriptions to COMFORT before April 30, 1915. No partiality will be shown to any contestant. Every subscription sent in by you will, if you so desire, be placed to your credit on the Monthly Prizes and Grand Prizes also and whatever prize you win each month will be paid to you in money promptly at the end of the month in which you win it. And at the close of the contest if there is also a Grand Cash Prize coming to you it will be paid to you immediately after the closing date. There will be no unfair treatment, no waiting, no disappointments for you in this contest. You will be given a square deal first, last and all the time. But when sending your subscriptions be sure to say you want them entered to your credit on the cash prizes otherwise we will not know that you are in the contest. How The Grand Prizes Are to be Awarded Promptly at the close of the contest April 30, 1915 we shall also award 44 Grand Prizes as published elsewhere on this page. The Capital Grand Prize of $150.00 will go to the contestant who sends in the largest number of 25-cent subscriptions from the first day of October 1914 to the last day of next April. The second Grand Prize of $100 will go to the contestant who sends in the next largest number and so on. Remember these Grand Prizes come on top of the Monthly Prizes and the premiums that you are sure of anyway. Please bear in mind that you do not have to stay in the contest the entire six months in order to win a Grand Cash Prize. In addition to your Monthly Prize you may also win a Grand Prize in a single month—the first month, last month or any other month. Several contestants have done this in our previous contests.

Small Clubs Win The Prizes

Remember that small clubs win the Cash Prizes in these contests. Contrary to what you may have believed and what some people may try to tell you, you don't have to send in big clubs and lots of clubs in order to win the Monthly Prizes and perhaps a Grand Prize also in addition to your regular club premiums. Lots of people in our last year's contest carried off prizes month after month with clubs as small as 15 subscriptions, 20 subscriptions and so on up to 25 subscriptions. You are just as likely to be as fortunate in this contest, but of course you realize that the more subscriptions you send in each month, the better will be your chances.

You May win as Much as $780

The contestant who wins the first Monthly Prize each month for the entire six months will of course also win the Capital Grand Prize of $150.00 thereby winning a total of $780.00. To this fortunate contestant we will pay $30.00 for November, $60.00 for December, $90.00 for January, $120 for February, $150 for March and $180 for April which amounts to $630 and this added to the Capital Grand Prize of $150 makes the splendid sum of $780.

Rules and Conditions

1. Send subscription clubs, large or small, as often as you like. Name the club premiums you want.
2. In mailing subscriptions intended for the prize competition, be sure to address them to COMFORT Prize Department, Augusta, Maine, or we shall not know they are for the prize contest.
3. Subscriptions mailed on last day of a month will be counted into that month's contest provided the postmark on the envelope shows it. This makes it fair for all, no matter how far off they live.
4. The prizes will be awarded on the basis of fifteen-month subscriptions, but other subscriptions will be accepted and counted in this prize contest as follows: A 50-cent three-year subscription equals two fifteen-month subscriptions. One two-year renewal equals one fifteen-month subscription. So send in either kind of COMFORT subscriptions or renewals and they will all count.
5. In case of a tie, the prize for which two or more contestants are tied will be awarded and paid in full to each contestant tied for that prize, doubling or thribbling such prize to such, if any, of the tied contestants as are entitled to double or thribble.

Mail The Coupon With A Small Club

You will earn a fine premium and you may start a Cash Prize your way also simply by sending us the coupon printed at the left along with two or more subscriptions to COMFORT. Then follow up your first club with another club as soon as possible. We will send you the premiums which you select from any issue of COMFORT or from our regular catalogue just as fast as you send in your clubs. They alone will more than pay you for your trouble. But remember that you may also win a Cash Prize every month. Start a club today. You have everything to gain and nothing to lose. You cannot possibly lose because you are SURE to get a premium anyway for every club you send in. Start now and win a March prize and a Grand Prize too.

Engraved Gold Bracelet

THIS Round Bracelet with artistic engraving and unique Spring Fastening is the most attractive pattern we have seen this season. Not too large but large enough and as it is perfectly round, it fits well and becomes all ages and wears like Solid Gold. There is a demand for bracelets of enormous size, but this style is medium large and nearly three inches in diameter; we consider it a beautiful pattern. This bracelet is the very latest style so you will want one while fashionable, and as we guarantee fit and wear, you need not hesitate to order.

Special Offer: For one new 15-months subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 25 cents or for your own subscription or renewal or extension of your present subscription for one year at 25 cents and 10 cents extra (35 cents in all) we will send you this Bracelet free by parcel post prepaid.

Dress or Coat Collar

THE new style high hair dressing demands that the collars stand very high at the back to cover the long neck line and roll away in the front. We illustrate such a collar here and it is one of the most popular designs because it is so simple and requires very little time and labor to embroider. The material is fine lawn and there is enough of it so that it can be made double as it should be to lend the required stiffness. In making this collar you should use the solid and outline stitch. We include free a sufficient quantity of white embroidery cotton for working. You can secure this collar by accepting one of the following offers.

Offer No. 714A. For one new 15-month subscription to COMFORT at 25 cents, we will send you this collar with embroidery cotton to work either free and postpaid.

Offer No. 714B. For your own subscription, or renewal or extension of your present subscription for one year at 25 cents and 10 cents additional (35 cents in all) you get this collar and embroidery cotton free and postpaid. Premium No. 714.

Wizard Water Pistol

Premium No. 716

TO all appearances this is a regular, full size, "six shooter" but instead of shooting the deadly bullet it squirts a solid stream of water 30 feet straight to the mark you aim it at. To load this pistol you stick the muzzle into water and pull the trigger three or four times. After it is loaded you discharge it by pulling the trigger just the same as you would an ordinary revolver. After it is loaded it is good for ten shots (of water) before it is necessary to load it again. Boys and girls can have loads of fun with this water pistol by giving their friends surprise "shower baths" and as it shoots nothing but water it is of course perfectly harmless to the smallest child. The "Wizard" is shaped exactly like a regular revolver; is 5 inches long, handsomely nickel plated and beautifully finished. You can obtain this water pistol free upon the terms of the following special offers:

Offer No. 716 A. For one new 15-month subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 25 cents, we will send you the Wizard water pistol free by Parcel Post prepaid.

Offer No. 716 B. For your own subscription, or renewal or extension of your present subscription, to COMFORT for one year at 25 cents and 10 cents additional (35 cents in all), we will send you the Wizard Water Pistol free and prepaid. Premium No. 716. Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

THIS LARGE CONGOLEUM RUG

Sent You Free And Prepaid For A Club Of Five!

Absolutely Waterproof—Dirtproof—Sanitary!

Water Cannot Rot It, Sun Cannot Fade It. It Lies Flat Without Nailing or Paste, Will Not Curl Up or Kick Up At The Edges, Will Stand The Hardest Kind Of Wear!

NO MORE trouble with unsightly, ill-smelling, dirt and germ laden grass, matting, fiber or fabric rugs or oil cloths. Every woman who has had experience with a single one of these old-fashioned methods of floor coverings knows how unsatisfactory they are, and expensive too, because they wear out so fast it is necessary to keep buying new ones all the time Here, however, is a rug that will actually give years of constant service—a rug which is absolutely waterproof all the way through—which is not injured or even affected by heat, cold, water or changes of temperature—which neither fades nor rots no matter where you put it in-doors or out. It is not oilcloth—it is not linoleum—it is not made of grass, fiber or fabric—it is not like any other form of floor covering in the world. It is known as "Congoleum," a combination of a special wool mixture, waterproof paint and asphaltum. When you wash the floor or porch you can wash the Congoleum rug at the same time without taking it up. You can leave it out on the porch all summer or all winter or the year round and it will not rot, fade or get that jaded look that other rugs do after exposure to sun and wear. You can use it on the bathroom floor, the pantry floor, under the refrigerator, under the stove or as an ordinary rug in any room in the house, in fact, there is not a single requirement that this rug will not fill. It is absolutely sanitary because having a hard solid surface the dust, dirt and disease germs positively cannot get into it. No nails, tacks or paste are necessary to keep it down because it always lies flat on the floor and the edges will positively not curl or buckle, thus tripping up everybody who walks over it. These Congoleum rugs cost no more and in some cases actually less than other forms of floor covering and they will wear ten times as long, therefore they are the most economical as well as the most serviceable and satisfactory rug to buy. They come in different attractive designs and beautiful combinations of shades and colors. As a premium for our readers we have selected the pattern illustrated above as the most suitable for all-round purposes. It is one and one half yards long and a yard wide. The color scheme is subdued and very charming and it will make an attractive appearance regardless of whether you use it as a porch rug or in kitchen, pantry or any other room in the house. We are positive that every woman who secures one of these rugs will want two or three more at once, therefore we worked hard with the manufacturers to get a special low price on them so that we could give them in return for a very few subscriptions. In this we succeeded as you will note by reading the following

Club Offer. For a club of five 15-month subscriptions to COMFORT at 25 cents each, we will send you one Congoleum rug free by Parcel Post prepaid. Premium No. 7205.

Daisy Pump Action Repeating Air Rifle

THIS is the new Daisy pump air rifle—a real rifle with genuine pump action. It is a repeater—you fill the magazine full of shot—pull the slide toward the stock and it is all loaded and ready to fire the first shot. You can fire the Daisy almost as fast as you can pull the trigger without taking it from your shoulder. This is why it is so far ahead of any other air rifle you ever saw. It not only looks like a real gun but shoots like one. Its shooting power is tremendous. It will shoot farther and with greater force and precision than any other air rifle made. In appearance it is a beauty. From end of stock to end of barrel it is 38 inches long, weighs 3 1-4 pounds, all metal parts are of steel with non-rusting blue gun metal finish, the stock is of genuine black walnut, hand polished, and it has adjustable sights front and rear. It is a take-down model, or in other words, the barrel may be removed from the stock which makes it a very gun convenient to carry on long trips as it can be packed in a very small space. The "Daisy" costs $3.00 in the stores, but we are going to give our boy readers a chance to get one without spending a cent for it. We will make you a present of a "Pump Action Daisy" and send it to you by Parcel Post prepaid if you will accept the following

Club Offer. For a club of only twelve 15-month subscriptions to COMFORT at 25 cents each, or six 3-year subscriptions at 50 cents each, we will send you a Daisy Pump Action Pepeating Air Rifle exactly as described above by Parcel Post prepaid. (Premium No. 72112.)

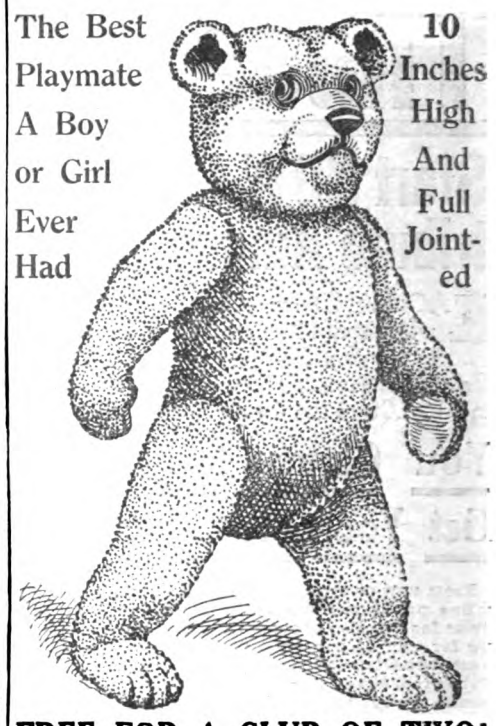
26-Piece Daisy Silver Set

Warranted For Five Years

Will Wear Like Solid Silver



Sent To You Prepaid For A Club Of Six

WE have in the past made many fine premium offers of silverware to readers of COMFORT, but this is the first time we have ever been able to offer a complete silver set in return for such a small club of subscriptions. And please don't think because we are giving away this splendid set on such liberal terms that it is the ordinary cheap silverware which is plated on a brass base and consequently changes color and has that "brassy" look just as soon as the plating wears off. This Set which we offer you here is silver plated on a white metal base therefore each and every piece is the same color all the way through and will never show signs of tarnish or wear, even after years of constant use. As shown in the above illustration there are 26 pieces in this set—6 Knives, 6 Forks, 6 Teaspoons, 6 Tablespoons, Sugar Shell and Butter Knife. Each piece is full regulation size for family use the handles are handsomely embossed and decorated with the beautiful Daisy design which is now so popular and the blades of the knives and bowls of the teaspoons and tablespoons are perfectly plain and bright polished. It is only because we buy this set in large quantities direct from the factory that we are able to secure it at a price that enables us to offer it as a premium for so few subscriptions. It is by far the greatest value we have ever offered, in fact we are so sure that it will please and satisfy all who accept our offer we are going to guarantee every Set sent out for a period of five years. We will send this beautiful 26-Piece Daisy Silver Set exactly as illustrated and described to any address upon the terms of the following special Club Offer. For a club of six 15-months subscriptions to COMFORT at 25 cents each, or three 3-year subscriptions at 50 cents each, you will receive this 26-Piece Daisy Silver Set Free by Parcel Post prepaid. Premium No. 680. Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Large Shaggy Teddy Bear

The Best Playmate A Boy or Girl Ever Had

10 Inches High And Full Jointed

FREE FOR A CLUB OF TWO!

EVERY little boy and girl wants a Teddy Bear and here is an opportunity for every father or mother who reads COMFORT to get one without expense. "Teddy" looks exactly as you see him in the picture above. He is a big shaggy fellow, nearly a foot tall, made of rich, handsome brown plush, paws lined with felt, carefully stitched and finished and his head, arms and legs are jointed in such a manner that you can place him in almost any position. He will stand up, sit up, stand on his head, go on all four feet, in fact, you can make him assume all kinds of positions that are so comical and lifelike that it makes the children scream with delight just to look at him. "Teddy" is so well made that no matter how roughly he is handled he cannot become broken and with ordinary care should last for years. Teddy Bears like this one generally cost a good round sum in the stores, but as we have imported a large quantity of them from Germany at a special low price we can well afford to give them away on terms so liberal that there is no reason why every boy and girl should not have one of them at once. We will send you "Teddy" free if you will accept the following special Club Offer. For a club of only two 15-months subscriptions to COMFORT at 25 cents each, we will send you this big shaggy Teddy Bear free by Parcel Post prepaid. Premium No. 699.

Drawnwork Scarf

67 Inches Long 16 Inches Wide

Made of PURE FLAX woven into a silver damask of superior quality, finished with heavily fringed ends

EVERY woman reader of COMFORT who wants a handsome, serviceable dresser or sideboard scarf should answer this offer at once. We have imported from Germany a large quantity of these large sized, pure linen scarfs, 67 inches long and 16 inches wide, and thanks to the new tariff law secured them at a price so low that we can well afford to give them away for less money in subscriptions than you would have to pay outright for a much inferior scarf in any store. As shown in illustration, the pattern is a large attractive zigzag drawnwork design and both ends of the scarf are finished with a handsome wide combed and knotted fringe. Being made by skilled workmen of pure flax, the texture of this scarf is such that it should last a lifetime and in appearance it is one of the most beautiful dresser or sideboard covers you ever saw. We are giving away this scarf free on the terms of the following

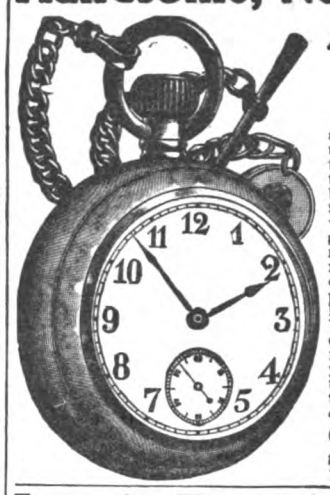
Five Different Varieties

Gorgeous Giant Flowering
GLADIOLUS

We Will Give You Five Bulbs And Every One Of Them Will Bloom This Season



WE have arranged with one of the largest flower growers in the country to supply our readers with five different varieties of the new improved type of Gladiolus. They are the most gorgeous and brilliant you ever saw and can in no way be compared with the kinds seen in the ordinary flower garden. They bloom more than any other spring planting bulbs and require but very little care. They are unequalled for cutting as they last two weeks in water. They start blooming in early summer and keep at it until cut off by frost. In this splendid collection we give you the America which grows erect flower spikes two to three feet long bearing a great number of large spreading blossoms. Its color is an exquisitely soft lavender pink, the same as seen in the most beautiful Cattleya Orchids. The Augusta is the finest white Gladiolus in existence, with blue antlers and a slight tinge of pink on the interior of the petals. If you cut the spikes of this variety before the flowers are open and allow them to open in water you will get a pure white flower. The Baron Hulot grows long graceful spikes of good size bearing well opened flowers of a beautiful dark rich indigo blue. The Canary Bird grows spikes which show eight and sometimes ten blossoms open at one time and the color is a pure canary yellow that is both pleasing and attractive. Mrs. Frances King is the finest Gladiolus for decorative purposes owing to its immense size and brilliant color. Its spikes are four feet high with from eighteen to twenty flowers on a spike, six or eight flowers being open at one time. The flowers measure from four to six inches across and the color is a handsome light scarlet. Remember we give you free all five varieties described above on this offer and we positively guarantee that every one of them will bloom this season. We will cheerfully replace free any bulb or bulbs that do not prove absolutely satisfactory. The bulbs will be ready for planting as soon as you receive them or if you prefer you can plant them at any later date as they will keep indefinitely if you put them in a dark, dry place.

BY PARCEL POST PREPAID FOR TWO SUBSCRIPTIONS!

FOR a club of two 15-month subscriptions to COMFORT at 25 cents each we will send you free by Parcel Post prepaid these five different varieties of beautiful giant flowering Gladiolus, every one of them guaranteed to bloom this season. Premium No. 7252.

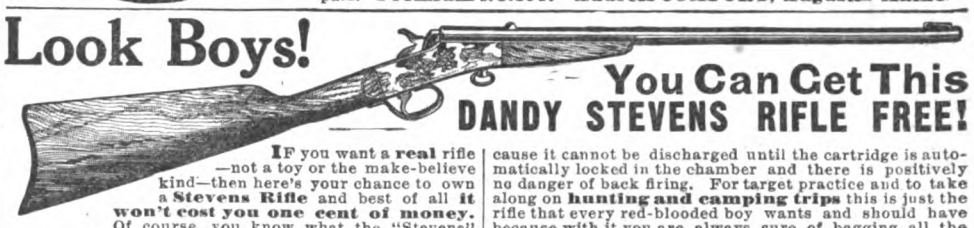
Handsome, New Style, Guaranteed Watch



A Warranted Timekeeper—Best American Movement—Stem Wind and Set.

Here is a watch that any man or boy may feel proud to carry, not alone on account of its handsome, refined appearance, but, because it is always on the dot—a splendid, dependable timekeeper that will keep as near perfect time as any watch you ever saw no matter what the price. Of course, this is not an expensive watch because it is not in a gold or silver case but for practical every-day use it is just as good as any watch costing from $20.00 to $25.00. In fact, we have such faith in this watch as a timekeeper that we send with every one a guarantee which is just as binding as that given with any watch no matter what make. It has a handsome polished nickel case with an unusually thick crystal which will stand all sorts of rough handling without becoming broken; the movement is the best American made, stem wind and stem set, the dial is pure white with large plain easily read figures on its face and, as shown in the illustration, it has the hour, minute and second hands like all high-priced watches. We have already given away thousands of these watches without having one of them returned to us or receiving a single complaint and this we think is sufficient evidence that it never fails to please and satisfy. Now is the time for you to secure one of these handsome, guaranteed watches before the price of them goes up as it is pretty sure to do in the near future. We will send you this watch exactly as described, together with a handsome stylish chain and fob, if you will accept the following

CLUB OFFER. For a club of only five 15-months subscribers to COMFORT at 25 cents each, we will send you this guaranteed watch, also a handsome chain and fob, free by Parcel Post, prepaid. Premium No.399. Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Look Boys!

You Can Get This DANDY STEVENS RIFLE FREE!

IF you want a real rifle —not a toy or the make-believe kind—then here's your chance to own a Stevens Rifle and best of all it won't cost you one cent of money. Of course, you know what the "Stevens" Rifle is. It is acknowledged to be one of the very best makes in the world manufactured by the famous Stevens Firearms Co. of Massachusetts. The rifle we offer you here is their "Little Scout" model and is the take-down pattern—that is by simply turning a screw you can remove the barrel from the stock which is a great help in cleaning the gun or packing it for travel. It shoots C. B. caps., .22 short, .22 long,or .22 long rifle rimfire cartridges, has an 18-inch round all-steel barrel,casehardened frame, blued steel butt plate, German silver knife-edge front and open rear sights, polished black walnut stock and weighs 2¾ pounds. This rifle is absolutely safe because it cannot be discharged until the cartridge is automatically locked in the chamber and there is positively no danger of back firing. For target practice and to take along on hunting and camping trips this is just the rifle that every red-blooded boy wants and should have because with it you are always sure of bagging all the small game that comes your way such as rabbits, squirrels, hawks and all kinds of game birds. She Is Dressed Like a Queen and Handsome as a Picture

She Can Say "Papa" and "Mamma" and Goes to Sleep Like a Real Baby.

This Beautiful Life-Size Talking and Sleeping Doll Will Be Sent Free To Any Little Girl For A Club Of Six!

DOLLY DIMPLE is her name and she is looking for some little girl who will love her and take good care of her. This handsome life-size talking and sleeping doll stands a foot and a half tall so she is almost as big as a real live baby and she is dressed up in a way that will make any little girl dance for joy. She wears a beautiful picture hat of the latest style, handsome lace and ribbon trimmed gown and complete wardrobe of pretty lace trimmed underwear, elegant open-work stockings and dainty low shoes with bright shiny buckles. She can talk and say "Papa" and "Mamma" just as plain as can be, she closes her beautiful eyes and goes to sleep when you lay her down and is wide awake again the minute you pick her up. Her cheeks are like two red roses, her beautiful golden hair hangs in long clustering curls and she continually shows her pearly white teeth in one of the sweetest smiles you ever saw. The picture can give you no idea how pretty "Dolly" really is. She can be dressed and undressed as often as you wish and she is so well made with a fine bisque head and strong body that she cannot possibly become broken if you take good care of her. Every mother who reads this offer should not fail to take advantage of it at once. No matter how many dolls your little one already has to play with, she will surely love "Dolly Dimple" better than all the others.

How You Can Get Dolly Free!

for coloring, a mixture that he had been unable to dispose of by drinking it himself. This he handed to the dumfounded Saul Barber.

"Why, yes," he drawled, his eyes twinkling, "he left this here for you."

"I—I'm shore much obliged, Berry," stammered Barber. He turned, stumbled, and walked away rapidly.

Half an hour later he stopped in a grassy dell surrounded by pines and blooming laurels, a spot as beautiful as it was isolated. He sat down jerkily, with the strange jug between his knees. His mind, alert and cunning in its own peculiar way, began at once to work over the problem. For some ten minutes he wrestled with the mystery; then the jug itself became of more interest than the problem connected with it. He drew from it the corncob stopper, a pleased expression gradually taking place of the puzzled look that had been on his uncomely face. He put one bony forefinger into the handle, tilted the jug on his elbow, and drank deeply.

Thus passed the remainder of the day.

"Preacher, I wouldn't go to yore blamed old meetin'-house if it was to save yore life!"

The sound of Saul Barber's voice, rasping and hoarse, awoke him. His face felt thick, his lips heavy; his eyes flashed with specks like tiny sparks of fire, and his head swam. He looked upward without moving a muscle except those in his eyelids. It was night, and all was still save for the forlorn cry of an owl somewhere in the distance, and the mournful whispering of the stately pines that stood about the dell. In the firmament above majestic Orion was dancing a jig, as though to the tune of his fiddle. He looked about him, and shuddered at the figures in ghostly white that beckoned unceasingly—then he knew that it was only the heavy, snowy bloom of the laurels, and he laughed at his nervousness. He went unsteadily to his feet. The earth sprang up and struck him in the face. He rose again, and a stately pine leaped from its rooting place to give him a blow across the temple.

He lay back down, and silently, absently, gave himself over to further contemplation of the dancing of majestic Orion.

But soon the unsteady lights of the heavens were hidden by the advance of a great, dark bank of cloud, and the long, low rumble of thunder came ominously. Saul Barber knew a mountain storm was coming, and he had no wish to brave its fury. He went to his feet, this time with more care, picked up his fiddle, and, ignoring the half empty jug, made tor an old trail that ran past his tumbledown hut. He found the dim road after crossing and recrossing it half a dozen times; and he required its full width when he set out for his temporary home.

"Better luck'n I expected," he drawled sluggishly when the dark shape of a cabin loomed suddenly up at his left.

The wind had sprung up, and the door had been blown open. Barber went up the rotting steps on his hands and knees, zealously guarding his fiddle, and entered the black room. He felt for a match with which to light the stub of a candle; he had no match, and he swore. He tried to guide himself to his crude bed by following a wall; but things came in his way. After five minutes spent thus, his left foot caught and he stumbled, bringing his right foot down so hard that it went through the saprotted edge of a thick floorboard; his whole weight lurched forward, driving the foot on down between a pair of closely, round joists, and bruising his ankle seriously.

He cried out at the sudden twinge of pain. His old violin clattered down beside him. He tried to liberate himself; but the limb was held as tightly as though clamped in a vise. He felt for his jack-knife, with which he meant to cut the wood away; he had lost the knife. The bruised member became numb, and he sank back, face upward, and quickly fell into a troubled, throbbing slumber.

The wild howling of the quickening wind and the savage threshing of the hemlock boughs on the roof awoke him before he had been asleep an hour. He sat up, involuntarily drawing at the tightly pinned limb; but a keen streak of pain caused him to remember and to desist. Somehow the beating of the rain outside, the shrieking of the wind, and the slashing of the tree-branches, were depressing in the extreme. He reminded himself of some marauding animal caught in a trap. Then a dim flash of the stormlight showed him, on the log wall before him, something that sent tinges into his cheeks.

He rubbed his eyes, and riveted them on the spot, waiting for another flash to come. A strange fear possessed him. He shivered to the marrow and unconsciously began to wring his thin, bony hands. Soon there was a protracted lighting of the valley—it seemed almost as though the storm had done it for Barber's especial benefit—and Saul Barber the scoffer saw painly that which to him was as the handwriting on the wall to Belshazzar the reveler.

He saw a Man being mocked by the rabble!

A Man whose face was filled with a compassion that outweighed His own suffering; a Man who was toiling wearily yet bravely up a long hill upon the brow of which three crosses, two of them inverted, stood out in sharp relief against the darkening of the world! And in bold letters beheath shone forth these words:

"And when they had mocked Him, they took off the purple from Him, and put His own clothes on Him, and led Him out to crucify Him."

Saul Barber saw it all in the long, ragged flash. He uttered a strange cry, a cry that seemed to his ears not to have come from his own throat, and sank back on the floor, pallid, like one who has suddenly felt the finger of death on his heart.

When he became conscious again, the night had passed and the storm had gone. He lay still, his eyes closed, remembering little or nothing of the events that had taken place during the twenty-four hours just past. He heard the sweet, incessant twittering of a wren somewhere near; a little farther away he heard a pair of mating yellow hammers haying a love quarrel. Then he opened his eyes, and looked about him.

He saw first a broad shaft of silent, golden sunlight that seemed a herald of peace on earth, lying aslant on the log wall before him. Then his gaze wandered above the yellow bar, and he saw with a wild throb in his breast a large Sunday School chart, and on it a picture of the Lord ascending the Hill of Calvary——

Saul Barber gasped, as though for breath to live. He knew he had gone the wrong way when he had found the old trail the night before. He had come, not to his tumbledown hut, but to Preacher Primrose's log church, the holy place he had sworn he would never enter while life dwelt within him! And he was a prisoner there!

He reflected gloomily, and a number of unpleasant facts came before him. The church stood in an isolated spot, and no shout he could give would reach other ears save by the barest accident. The trail that led past the old cabin was never frequented except on Sundays, when the people of the valley turned out to hear Primrose preach. And if his attempted damaging of the minister's character took root, there was a smart chance that even on Sunday no one would come.

Truly, it seemed that he had woven with his own hands the rope of his execution.

The day passed with leaden slowness, every minute of it dragging heavily, wearily, silently. The picture on the chart became indelibly imprinted on the mind of the helpless man, and the shutting of his eyes brought no relief whatever from the burning accusation the beautiful, compassionate face threw over his sinful spirit. He was usually slow to regret; but he now regretted that he had done what he had done.

The night and the day that followed were to Saul Barber eternities of shadow and light; they were far too long to be classed within the common divisions of time. He had tugged hard at his bruised and swollen ankle, much as the action had hurt him, all to no avail. He had shouted as loudly as he could shout; but there had come no answer to his piteous appeals for help.

Another eternity of blackness came and dragged soddenly past, and morning came once more. The prisoner in the poor, crude house of the Lord was now delirious. His tongue and lips were swollen and parched from thirst; his dry throat seemed full of sand; his pale blue eyes were bloodshot, and filled with queer lights that came and went irregularly. Just as the golden bar of sunlight, herald of peace on earth, broke aslant the wall, Saul Barber cried out thickly to the picture of the Man whom the rabble mocked:

"Save me, Lord—me, who has bore false witness ag'inst my neighbor—save me, Lord!" He held out his hands.

His eyes failed in their work of seeing. The atmosphere between him and the picture became hazy, then purple, then dark—dark—dark. He was sinking, he felt, into some bottomless, silent pit. And then his imagination showed him a wonderful thing:

He saw an old, sweet-faced woman sitting beside an open fireplace, with the firelight playing caressingly over her gentle features. In her hands she held an open Book, from which she was reading the first verse of the Twenty-third Psalm to a barefoot boy who knelt on the floor at her knee. He was the boy. The sweet-faced woman was the little mother whose early going to the mystic bourne had been largely responsible for his undoing. Again he stretched out his arms. The picture faded, even as the other had faded.

His sight came back suddenly. Some forgotten chord within his soul had been set to throbbing. Instinctively he caught up the violin, his mute companion for so many painracked hours, and put it under his beared chin. The other hand took up the bow. He had pleased others with his playing—perhaps——

Out of the violin's heart he drew a weird, nameless whirl of sound, a sound that was his failing life's tribute to the Man in the picture.

But he stopped playing before a minute had passed. It seemed so little to do in acknowledgment of his faith. As he put the instrument down, there came the sound of footsteps at the door, the footsteps for which he had waited centuries and centuries. He peered around the corner of the pulpit; he saw Preacher Primrose walking slowly up the aisle, his hands behind him, his head bent dejectedly. And in this attitude of dejection Saul Barber read the fact that his attempt to belittle the minister had taken root in the minds of the people of the valley.

The deep feeling of guilt that came at the sight caused Barber to stifle the cry for help that came to his lips. He knew that he had played the part of an utter villain, and he was ashamed. But his suffering was great, and he called tremulously:

"Preacher?"

Primrose went straightway to the prisoner. His kindly old face filled with the light of pity as he gazed down upon the haggard features, upon the parched and swollen lips, of the man who had so basely and so wantonly wronged him.

"Water!" begged the scoffer, and he sank back weakly.

The minister caught up a small pail from its place on a corner of the pulpit, and ran to a brook that flowed nearby. When he came back, he took Barber's head upon his knee, and helped the poor, weak hands to hold the precious liquid to the swollen lips. Then Primrose found a short-handled axe, and, after half an hour of plying it, set Barber free.

"Preacher," began Barber, the water sending a new life into him, "it was me who—done it. I put them thar two jugs under yore cabin floor I——"

"You!" Primrose straightened.

"Yes, me, the low-down dawg that I am," said Barber. And he hastily told it all.

Primrose's eyes were watching the old trail. Suddenly his face became grave; he stooped, caught Barber under the arms, and dragged him into the shelter of the boxlike pulpit.

"What's the matter?" gasped the man in the frayed Prince Albert.

The minister did not say. He frowned down toward Barber and mutteerd. "Be still!" and began to walk toward the doorway.

But Barber was not long kept in ignorance. A score of stamping feet entered the log church, and the big voice of Bill Lindsey boomed out angrily:

"We give you two days to leave this here community, Primrose"! Why hain't you went? If you was a young man, Primrose, we'd hang you right here!"

"Yes," added Sam Dorsett's voice, hoarse with anger—"acause thar hain't no man can come into this here community and pull the wool over our eyes and git away with it unless he's too old to hang! Why, you old moonshiner, you had us all a doin' without things to eat, and without clo'es, to help keep you and this here church up—and you a sellin' licker!"

"I've told you," said Primrose, quietly, "that I never done no sech a thing."

"Then how can you explain them thar two jugs o' moonshine—and watered moonshine, at that—which we found hid under yore floor?" demanded Bill Lindsey.

"I never put 'em thar," said Primrose.

Saul Barber gasped. Plainly, the old minister was trying to defend him! Saul Barber knew that the angry men would not feel disposed to spare him if the truth became known. And how a man could defend one who had wronged him was a thing that was dumfounding; Barber hadn't thought it possible.

"All the same, they was thar," snorted Lindsey. "Now you gether up yore baggage and light out o' this here community, Primrose. This is yore last warnin'."

"And if you ever try this here combination o' preachin' and sellin' licker ag'in——"

Saul Barber himself interrupted Sam Dorsett. He crept from his hiding place, pitifully haggard, and cried out:

"Stop—stop! He never done it. I put them thar jugs thar."

The crowd of men eyed the uncouth figure in amazement. Slowly it sank into their understanding. Bill Lindsey, an oath on his lips, started for Barber, with the other angry men at his heels.

But Norris Primrose blocked the way, his arms raised, his face firm.

"Hold on, Brothers!" he exclaimed. "You've wronged me, and I ax that nobody harm this man in return for that wrong!" He continued, seeing that his words had a great effect: "Come back tonight, everybody. Thar'll be preachin' here at early candlelight."

Then he helped him who had been a scoffer to his home and to his own bed, where he cared for him as though he had been a near and dear relative.

IMMIGRATION FALLS OFF.—Immigration for 1914, according to the report given out by the Commissioner, fell off 601,410 or 45 per cent. During 1913, arrivals numbered 1,334,914 persons, of whom 1,163,993 were aliens and 170,921 returning American citizens. During the year ending, arrivals were only 733,504, and of these 573,675 were aliens and 159,829 citizens. In July, 1914, arrivals at New York were 50,546 against 108,909 in July, 1913. Immigration officials explain the falling off in immigration aside from the war, which is the chief factor, to the curtailment of work in the United States and to foreign countries' efforts to restrict emigration.

RING TRAVELS 6,000 MILES BY FREIGHT.—In order that his ring might not be damaged, a freight handler in the employ of a Chicago corporation removed it from his finger and hung it on a nail inside the car which he was loading with freight. He forgot the ring until after the car had been sealed and had started on its journey to the Pacific coast. He wired to officials of the railroad company who set tracers at work and recovered the ring which was sent back to him, after having traveled more than 6,000 miles.

Crumbs of Comfort

A bad tempered dog must be tied short.

Every wife is the architect of her own husband.

Love, unrest and sorrow always journey together.

Old acquaintances are better than new friends.

Many wish to be pious, but few wish to be humble.

He who stumbles and falls not should mend his pace.

Better paddle your own canoe than owe for a motor-boat.

Every person is at times what he should be all the time.

We please others oftener by our defects than by our virtues.

The hand never tires of writing when the heart dictates.

Marriage is a treaty in which the conditions should be mutual.

Matrimony doth shape our ends, rough hew them as we may.

Good to hear is the laughter that opens the lips and the heart.

An indifferent agreement is better than carrying a cause to law.

To be happy is not to possess much, but to hope and to love much.

Man alone is born crying, lives complaining and dies disappointed.

It would be better were we as slow to give advice as we are to take it.

He who boasts of his descent boasts of that which he had no part in making.

To blame a young man for being in love is like blaming anyone for being ill.

If you put all your eggs in one basket you should put your basket in cold storage.

The lives of some people remind us we can make our own sublime by doing different.

Flowers that come from a loved hand are more prized than diamonds from any other.

When death consents to let us live a long time we pay for the privilege by giving up to all those we have loved.

Geneva's Easter Bonnet

By Lydia M. Dunham O'Neil

GENEVA WILSEY loved beautiful clothes as some women love flowers, and others, jewels;—for their own sake; not merely because they enhanced her own attractiveness, for she admired them on others as much as on herself; and not for the desire of public approval, for on the stormiest days, when she remained indoors, or even when convalescing from occasional illnesses, she was as critical in the arrangements of ribbons and laces as if she were about to be presented at Court.

The saying that pretty babies grow up homely did not apply to Geneva, for from earliest infancy she was dainty and winsome. Even at the awkward age, when the hair is gradually going up and the skirts gradually coming down, and one's hands and feet are constantly thrusting themselves into notice, Geneva gracefully typified Longfellow's "Maidenhood."

It was but natural that Geneva's father and mother should endeavor to provide a suitable setting for so charming a picture, and from the beginning of her existence she was clad in the finest and daintiest materials, carefully designed, and made to express her individuality and personal charm.

When Geneva was five years old the firm of Warren and Wilsey failed, and Mr. Wilsey, for many years a semi-invalid, fell a victim to nervous prostration as a result of worry over his financial losses. Death claimed him shortly afterward, and his widow found that she and the little daughter were nearly penniless.

Realizing full well the strain of providing the child with impractical, however beautiful, garments, she procured a number of sturdy little dresses in ginghams and percales, made for hard wear and much laundering. Geneva, always charming, was still a beautiful child in the plain, sensible frocks, but her fairylike daintiness was gone, and the alteration was so radical that the tender mother-heart could not endure it. The percales and ginghams were laid away, and thereafter, though it cost Mrs. Wilsey many a sacrifice, Geneva wore her customary organdies and dimities and pongees, and laughed and played her baby way through life as though she were indeed a carefree fay.

The handsome residence of the Wilseys was sold, and an unpretentious little cottage secured in an unassuming section of the town. Part of the furniture was retained, and among other treasured possessions was the beautiful and costly piano. Later, when affairs had been straightened out as well as possible, and Mrs. Wilsey could calmly face the future, she decided to utilize the instrument and her own musical ability for the support of Geneva and herself, by giving piano lessons and preliminary vocal training.

Her venture proved successful, and she was enabled to carry out her cherished plans for Geneva's education. The child's every whim was gratified; hers was the prettiest bouquet when she graduated from grammar school; hers was the costliest gown, when the high school honored her as valedictorian; hers was the most extensive wardrobe of elaborate toilettes, at college; and all without the slightest effort on her part. Naturally she grew thoughtless,—even somewhat selfish; but the affection between mother and daughter was so great that neither realized the injustice to the other.

At college, Geneva developed a certain amount of literary talent, and a few compliments from the learned professors set her brain whirling with dreams of being the Charlotte Bronte or the George Eliot of the future.

So when college days were over, and she had returned to reside with her mother, one of the first things she did was to purchase a bright new typewriter, which was an inspiration in itself, and "go to work."

Hours upon hours she sat with her chin between her dimpled white hands, thinking out plots: and hours upon hours she spent in shops and parks, at ball games and matinees, seeking material and studying types.

And now, for the first time, she began to observe her mother's labors. The "one, two, three! One, two, three!" and the "Do, re, mi," sometimes set her nerves on edge, and she thought how patient her mother must be to listen to it day after day, week in and week out. Pursuing this line of thought, she began to consider what an expense it must have been, to provide her with so many pretty hats and gowns and slippers, and all the accessories of dainty apparel, which had been lavished on her from earliest childhood. Housekeeping, too;—if she wanted strawberries in January, she had but to express her wish and they were set before her. Naturally, somebody paid for those luxuries; and naturally, that somebody was—Mother.

Geneva was grateful, certainly; and now, repenting her former thoughtlessness, she resolved that the proceeds of the very first story she sold would go to mother, for mother's own use. And having thus disposed of her troublesome reflections, she turned to her typewriter again.

At last that miracle did come to pass; a story was accepted, and a check forwarded—quite a generous check, too. And Geneva, in her ecstasy, remembered nothing save a "love of a dress," hand-painted in rosebuds, with slippers and buckles to match, which she had seen displayed in a shop-window a few days previously. It was so expensive that she had not dared to look twice at it; but now she could buy it, with her very own money! And after all, there would be other checks.

So there were; and though she frequently remembered mother on these occasions, and bought her some pretty gift, or generously presented her with the check itself, there were so many pretty and costly things that a girl must have—actually must have—that Geneva's intentions of relieving her mother of the burden of maintaining the household were never fulfilled.

Easter Sunday, the formal beginning of spring, was Geneva's gala day. Then, like the blossoming orchards, she was at her sweetest and daintiest, in new and beautiful apparel, in the freshness of her child-face and rosebud mouth.

Easter, when all is again made new! When the lilies nod their waxen blossoms, and the shy violets peep forth from the tender blades of grass; when birds begin to carol, and skies grow bluer, knowing it is spring! And when people gazed on Geneva Wilsey's sweet face and graceful, girlish figure, gowned in pretty, new apparel, they could not help regarding her as a personification of spring, and smiling appreciatively and indulgently.

This Easter, she wanted to look particularly charming—for Victor Scott was expected home from Europe. When the great war had broken out, a prominent magazine sent him abroad as special correspondent, and he had remained there ever since—now following the armies, now in the great capitals, delving into the depths of diplomatic intrigue—here and there and everywhere.

But his father, Doctor Scott, pastor of the church which Geneva attended, had suffered a slight stroke of paralysis, and feeling that his days on earth were nearly numbered, had asked his son to come home. So, on Easter Sunday, Dr. Scott would preach his farewell sermon—and Victor would be there to hear him.

Her heart quickened a little, as she wondered if he really cared for her. He had written her some charming letters from Europe—a few of them very tender in tone; and yet—! She rested her dimpled chin in her dimpled hands and wondered.

At any rate, if he admired beauty—as what man does not?—he would have to admire her! For she had in mind one of the most exquisite frocks imaginable—all pink and white, like a drift of apple blossoms, with the quaintest and prettiest poke bonnet in the world, that matched the dress perfectly. So costly were they that even Geneva had hesitated; but when she thought of Victor she forgot all about the number of dimes in a dollar, and resolved to wear that frock and bonnet on Easter Sunday morning.

* * * * * * * * * * *

"Of course you'll go to hear Dr. Scott's farewell sermon on Easter morning, mother; you and he have been friends for years and years."

Mrs. Wilsey flushed a little. "I think I shall wait and attend the evening service," she said quietly.

"The evening service! But there's to be a new minister at the evening service!" And then Geneva, in a flash of comprehension, flushed a great deal.

She had been spending a lot of money lately—all she had earned by her literary work, and some that her mother had earned by teaching one-two-threes and do-re-mis. And—now that she paused to think about it—it had been ages and ages since mother had bought even a moderately dressy gown. Mrs. Wilsey had pride—ever so little, but still it was there—and it would be too embarrassing for her to attend the morning service with Geneva—the daughter fashionable and beautiful—the mother in garments that dated from year-before-last.

All this Geneva realized in an instant. She said no more on the subject, but later in the day she surreptitiously examined Mrs. Wilsey's wardrobe. She was amazed, astounded. The gowns were so out-of-date as to be conspicuous, and shabby as well; and as for the cloaks and hats!

She went to her desk and took from it two checks that she had received a few days previously. She fingered them lovingly, as she thought how surprised her mother would be. Before her eyes rose a vision of a dress like a drift of apple blossoms, and the quaintest, prettiest poke bonnet in the world; but she shook her head impatiently, as if the thoughts were a troublesome insect, and straightway went forth to shop.

She did not stop until she had spent every penny represented by those two checks. Then, happier in her self-sacrifice than she had ever been in the gratification of her own desires, she walked serenely homeward. She had put away resolutely the thought of the rose-pink gown and the old-fashioned poke bonnet, and if now and then a thought of Victor obtruded itself, she told her heart that she didn't care whether Victor cared or not, so there!

When Mrs. Wilsey woke on Easter morning, she reached sleepily for the lavender housegown that should have hung on the chair beside her bed. Instead, her fingers encountered something unfamiliar, and she sat up in surprise—surprise that grew to amazement when she saw the things that hung on the chair and lay on the shirt-waist box.

There was a soft silken gown, of a shade that matched perfectly the deep blue of her eyes; a wrap that seemed as if it must have been designed expressly for her; a hat that could not have been more becoming had it been made to order; and all the dainty accessories that such an outfit required—new gloves, handkerchiefs, neckwear, shoes—even a corsage bouquet of violets.

"Geneva!" she called, "Geneva!"

"Yes!" answered Geneva, in the adjoining room. "A happy Easter, mother!"

She entered her mother's room a moment later, smiling brightly, but with a guilty flush on her cheek.

"So!" said Mrs. Wilsey. "Your face betrays you, Geneva! You bought all these things for me—with your own money!"

She said it so sternly, as if it were a crime, that Geneva burst out laughing.

"Why, yes, mother, I did. And you want to know why I didn't tell you? Why, because, in your unselfishness, you'd have sent them all back. And it's only your due, mother, that you should have pretty things for Easter—and always! I've been thoughtless and selfish, and I'm sorry. Now, dress quickly, and we'll be away to church."

"Geneva, I'll warrant you spent all the money you received from the Continental magazine—yes, and from Lister's Monthly, too! You did! I see that you did! Now, what are you going to wear?"

"I'm going to wear that lilac frock I had made last summer—it's as good as new. If I had thought of it, I'd have got a new hat, but as I didn't think until I'd spent all the money, I just took my old spring hat and put a new flower and bow of ribbon on it—and now it's as good as new, too."

As Geneva and her mother entered the church, people turned their heads a little. People always looked for Geneva, and at her; but now—they openly stared. Pretty, as always; but surely they had seen her in that gown before! And certainly that hat was not of this year's design! Geneva's cheeks flamed, knowing their thoughts; but she held her head high, and appeared unconscious of their whispered comment.

They walked side by side, Geneva and her mother; and a few, noting Mrs. Wilsey's new toilette, understood and murmured a blessing on Geneva's pretty head; others, not so well acquainted with the Wilseys or their circumstances, secretly wondered.

The little church was crowded, and the usher had some difficulty in finding a seat. He preceded them up the aisle until they reached the Scott pew. Victor was there, and as they approached he rose and made place for them, with a smile and nod. Then, he, too, for a moment stared, and Geneva told herself again that she didn't care whether he cared or not, so there!

Throughout the service she felt that his eyes were fixed upon her, but now she really did not care. She wondered whether every Easter service and the clear, sweet voices of the choir-boys, had been so beautiful as this, and if so, why it had never seemed so before. Why had the music, never before carried so direct an appeal to her heart? Why had Dr. Scott's sermons never before seemed so earnest and convincing? Why had her soul never before been touched with the true inward beauty of the day? Was it because she had, as she herself admitted, made it a day for dress parade?

When the service was over, and people were departing from the edifice, after a few words with the retiring minister, Victor Scott, in the vestibule, found himself surrounded by friends who were anxious to greet him after his long sojourn in troubled Europe. Geneva had no opportunity to converse with him, but as she passed out she gave him a friendly smile as she murmured, "Welcome home!"

It was a beautiful day to Geneva, though she scarcely realized that her own beautiful unselfishness had made all the difference.

In the afternoon the bell rang, and answering it, she found Victor Scott at the door. She was surprised, for she had not expected him to call so soon. His modest recital of his European adventures charmed both Geneva and her mother, but when Mrs. Wilsey excused herself and left the room, in order to look after some household arrangements, Victor rose and crossed the room, seating himself close to Geneva.

"That's enough about the war, Geneva—now I want to talk about you. First of all, I want to apologize for having entertained an erroneous and unflattering opinion of you. To be candid, I always thought you were a selfish little prig! Sweet and lovable, and I couldn't help loving

"A Sacrifice to Love"

By Hapsburg Liebe

is a grand story of noble, rugged manhood that commands admiration, of woman's devotion and fortitude such as glorified the martyrs. Though it sounds the depths of pathos in a sacrifice of what is dearer than life for what is dearest of all, the somber shades are relieved by a bright thread of tender, charming romance, and the interest in the narrative is intensified by thrilling incidents and startling situations. It is a story of 4500 words, but we shall print it

All Complete In May COMFORT

After half a century the animosities engendered by our Civil War have been so far replaced, both North and South, by sentiments of mutual respect, confidence and friendship that the survivors of two armies that had fought each other at Gettysburg met there a year ago last summer, as guests of the State of Pennsylvania, to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the great battle, and last year the representatives of the G. A. R. and of the United Confederate Veterans with President Wilson and other government officials assembled in the great National Cemetary, at Arlington, to dedicate the majestic monument there erected in honor of those who gave their lives for the "lost cause." May COMFORT will contain an interesting account of the impressive ceremonies in which the President took part, extracts from the inspiring addresses, and a description and full page picture of the monument showing its beautiful sculptures in detail. And there will be a lot of other fine things in May COMFORT.

Beware of Adulterated Bread

ARE you eating ground plaster in your bread? Not if you know it, of course, for nobody would eat it knowingly. Yet finely powdered plaster of Paris is one of the adulterants that some people are eating in their bread and don't know it, according to Dr. James O. Jordan's investigation and report to the Boston Board of Health.

Dr. Jordan reports that in the mixing room of a large Boston bakery he found a bin containing between 200 and 300 pounds of a mixture called "A. B. C." flour composed of plaster of Paris, salt, ammonium chloride and flour in the following proportions:

Plaster of Paris	24 parts.
Salt	24.9 parts.
Ammonium Chloride	11.6 parts.
Flour	39.5 parts.

In the basement of the bakery he found 5180 pounds of this mixture in bags, and he was informed that it was used in bread-making; one of the officers of the bakery company claimed "that it aided in breaking down the gluten in the flour, that it saved yeast and also gave an added bloom to the loaves."

Dr. Jordan says it appears to be a fact that loaves of bread prepared with plaster of Paris and ammonium chloride are much larger and lighter than would be obtained from the same quantity of flour not combined with these materials.

He speaks of an investigation of two bakeries in a city in an adjoining State and the discovery of more of the "A. B. C." mixture.

He urges that these conditions necessitate the enactment of a State law to give the Board of Health oversight of the substances kept in bakeries for bread-making.

Dr. Jordan is professor of chemistry at the Massachusetts College of Pharmacy and is regarded as one of the best analytical chemists in Boston, especially with regard to food, milk and drugs. His investigation and report were made at the request of the Boston Board of Health.

The Doctor is certainly right. Not only Massachusetts but every State ought to have a stringent law to prohibit the manufacture and sale of fraudulent bread and adulterated bread materials, including impure baking powders.

Pure cream of tartar is one of the chief constituents of high-grade baking powders but, as it is costly, you can't expect to find much of it in the cheap ones. The latter are likely to contain some inferior substitute, even alum which we believe to be unwholesome. We have known cream of tartar to be heavily adulterated with alum. Buy the pure article and see that you get it.

Dope Habit Hard Hit by National Law that Regulates Sale of Opium and Cocain

AT last our government has learned a lesson from China which for some years past has prohibited the sale of opium and even stopped the raising of the poppy from which the drug is obtained. On the first day of March the United States government assumed control of all opium and cocain in the country, so that on and after that date opium and cocain cannot be imported, manufactured, kept, distributed, sold or given away in any manner or form in any part of Uncle Sam's dominions except under the very strictest government supervision and regulation. It is the most thorough-going law of that kind ever enacted by Congress and undoubtedly will accomplish the beneficent purpose for which it is designed.

The use of habit-forming narcotic drugs, especially those derived from opium and cocain, has grown to alarming proportions in the United States and has become an evil of magnitude second only to the liquor habit.

The efforts to mitigate it by State laws have proved disappointing in their results. The previous legislation by Congress prohibiting the importation of these drugs except for medical purposes and requiring the per cent of either of them contained in any remedy to be printed on the label has fallen far short of accomplishing its purpose.

Opium smuggling flourished, Chinese opium joints in the cities throughout the land persisted not only in serving their Asiatic votaries but also in dragging down to the lowest depths of degradation an ever increasing legion of American victims of the irresistible opium pipe, and besides these the drug-stores were supplying cocain, morphine, codeine and various other preparations and derivitives of coca leaves and opium to hundreds of thousands of poor wretches who in one way or another had become slaves to the dope habit.

While drinking is a social vice and the drunkard makes himself conspicuous, the use of dope is indulged in secretly so that the extent to which it prevails and the evils it results in are not generally known. The habitual use of any of the various forms of opium or cocain ruins the health, destroys the will power, weakens the mind, dethrones conscience and subverts morality. The dope habit is more difficult to cure than the liquor habit, and is more disastrous in its consequences. Most drunkards have intervals of sobriety between drunks, but the dope-user's constitution soon becomes so affected that he has to keep himself continually saturated with the drug and to increase the dose as time goes on; if deprived of it for a short time he suffers crazing agony that often impels to suicide.

The law which went into effect the first day of last month requires every person who imports, manufactures, keeps, sells, gives away, compounds or distributes coca leaves, cocain, opium or any preparation or derivative of either, to register his full name and place of business with the Collector of U. S. Internal Revenue for the district in which he resides and pay an annual tax of one dollar; and they are all required to make an inventory and report the respective quantities of these drugs on hand on the first day of March. This applies to doctors, dentists and veterinary surgeons as well as to retail, wholesale and manufacturing druggists; all must be registered and report.

None of these drugs can now be imported, compounded, sold, dispensed or given away except for legitimate medicinal purposes. Sale or delivery of these drugs is not permitted, even by one registered dealer to another, except in pursurance of signed orders made out in duplicate on government order blanks furnished by the Internal Revenue Department at one cent each. The purchaser and seller are required each to retain a duplicate of every sale order and keep it on file for two years to enable the government to keep track of every bit of cocain and opium products in the country.

The druggists are not permitted to sell or dispense cocain or opium in any form to the public except to fill prescriptions issued and signed by physicians, dentists or veterinary surgeons registered as required by this law, and are obliged to keep the prescriptions on file for two years after they are filled. Each prescription must be dated the day when issued, must bear the registry number of the physician, dentist or veterinary who signs it and the name and address of the person for whom it is given, and it can be filled only once.

Physicians, dentists and veterinary surgeons registered under this law may dispense these drugs to their patients provided they make and preserve a record showing the quantity of the drug, name and address of the patient and the date when dispensed.

The law does not require officers in charge of Federal and State medical departments and institutions to register or pay the tax for purchasing and keeping these drugs in the performance of their official duties.

Liniments and ointments for external use, though containing opiates, and internal remedies containing certain small specified portions of opium or its derivitives are permitted to be sold freely as heretofore.

The penalties for violation of this law are very severe, and its terms are so stringent and far-reaching as to give strong promise of being effective in banishing the cocain, opium and morphine dope evil from the United States.

The noticeable feature of this law is the completeness of the control that the National government has assumed over the manufacture, sale, distribution and use of opium and cocain. But it is equally interesting to those versed in the intricacies of constitutional law to note how this is accomplished by an application of the taxing power of the government. None but a lawyer would dream of classing this as a tax law, and yet it is as a tax law only that Congress has the constitutional power to make and enforce it, except as to interstate and foreign commerce. If the little one dollar registration tax and the one cent tax for the order blanks were cut out all the rest of this law applying to manufacture, sale and distribution within any State would be null and void.

The power to prohibit or directly regulate any business within a State belongs to the State legislature and not to Congress. But Congress has the power to tax, and so when it wishes to regulate business within the States it does so indirectly by imposing a moderate or even trifling tax and making the regulative features incidental to the assessment or collection; and when it wishes to drive out of existence a business or manufacture that it cannot directly prohibit, it accomplishes that object by the thoroughly effective means of imposing a tax so excessive as to be absolutely prohibitive. By taxing it to death Congress rid the country of the dangerous yellow phosphorus match, and the same method was employed to abolish the issue of currency by State banks.

I have discussed these interesting points of law to bring out clearly the proposition that Congress Can Establish Nation-Wide Prohibition of Liquor by the Exercise of its Taxing Power

IT appears to have been erroneously assumed by the friends of temperance that an amendment of the Constitution of the United States was necessary in order to empower Congress to prohibit or assume control of the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquor throughout the country. Therefore they have been laboring for the adoption of such an amendment, which is a slow and difficult task requiring for its accomplishment favorable action by a two-thirds vote by both branches of Congress and acceptance by the legislatures of three-quarters of the States.

The resolution for a prohibitory amendment introduced and urged in the last Congress by Congressman Richmond P. Hobson, of Alabama, was favored by a majority vote in both the Senate and House of Representatives but failed of a passage because it fell a little short of the requisite two-thirds.

Now here is the vital point. While it requires a two-thirds vote of Congress to submit a constitutional amendment for consideration by the States, and then a long delay with the final action of the States in doubt, only a bare majority of both Senate and House (without reference to the States) is necessary to make a law that becomes immediately effective.

It must be assumed that the senators and congressmen who voted last winter in favor of the prohibitory amendment were sincerely in favor of nation-wide prohibition and would have voted for a law designed to accomplish that object, and therefore had it been a proposed prohibitory law, instead of a constitutional amendment, it would have been enacted and we should now have nation-wide prohibition.

Let us not wait for the slow, tedious and doubtful process of a constitutional amendment, but rather let us demand that Congress, at its next session which begins in December, make a law whereby in the exercise of its taxing power the National government shall prohibit the sale of liquor for a beverage and shall assume full and effective control of the manufacture, sale and distribution of alcohol and alcoholic liquors and restrict their use to mechanical and medicinal purposes.

Now that Congress has strangled the dope evil it should immediately attack the greater demon, alcohol, by a law similar in its design but somewhat different in detail.

How many of our readers will give their active support to such a campaign by circulating petitions to their Congressmen and Senators if COMFORT will lead the fight and supply the ammunition?

I would like to hear from you, to get your views on the subject and to see whether enough are interested to make it worth while to launch the movement through COMFORT.

In the million and a quarter homes that take COMFORT there are enough to make a big army and exert a powerful influence if you will enlist in support of this cause. I shall be grateful for a letter or a post card in reply.

An American Woman's Success in England

By Clara Berwick Colby

Copyright, 1915, by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

Thirty years ago Mrs. Mary B. Wilson was left a young widow in Indianapolis, Indiana, to face the world with limited resources, and a son to educate. She pondered long, considering what course she should pursue—whether to give her son or herself the first opportunity at college. She had graduated with honor from the Indianapolis High School, and had before her marriage been a successful teacher in that city. But she had always had a great longing for a University training. This had never left her during her married life. She could now put her son at some paying employment, use her money to put herself through College and thus not only realize her day-dream but be in a better position to help her son through College afterwards. Ah, but if he once felt the charm of money-making might he not lose his desire for a higher education. This thought decided her, and she sent her son to Cornell while she resumed the work of teaching to support herself and him.

The young man graduated in 1892 and the autumn of that year saw Mrs. Wilson enrolled among the students of the scientific and medical departments of Cornell University, while the young man took his turn as a breadwinner. After five years study Mrs. Wilson graduated from both departments, remained another year for post-graduate research and the practise of her chosen work as an oculist. Then she continued her studies abroad taking clinical work at the hospitals in Berlin, Paris, and other cities. In 1900 she went to Moorfields, London, for the same purpose. This is the oldest and the largest Eye Hospital in the world, and she found such opportunities that she remained nineteen months as clinical student under the senior surgeon. Leaving for a visit to her old home she was offered if she would return, the position of chief clinical assistant in this great hospital. Such a position had never been held before by an American, not to say by an American, woman, and coming to her unsought it was a marked recognition of her ability. For the honor of her country, and especially to demonstrate woman's capacity for a responsible position, and one requiring unusual skill and stability, Mrs. Wilson determined to serve seven years. During this time, although her services were, like those of the staff surgeons, rendered without any payment, she was never absent or tardy and had a record of more than one hundred and five thousand cases that had passed through her hands. The fascination of the work and her attachment to her co-laborers who like herself were putting their talents freely at the disposal of those in need, grew upon her so that she has remained twice as long as she had planned, making it possible to give her services without remuneration, by other work outside of hospital attendance.

I had long intended to visit my fellow-countrywoman at her work, and the morning I happened in was a favorable time for her staff-surgeon was absent; and she had full charge of his clinic. There were about five hundred patients that morning, and a fair share of these were attended to by Mrs. Wilson. (Surgeons in England are not called Doctor, but simply Mr. or Mrs.) As I was presumably a student I was able to follow Mrs. Wilson to the dark room where she critically examined the eye to its innermost parts with the opthalmoscope; to the testing room, and to the operating chamber. I noted the gentleness and certainty with which she handled the various cases, and that many of the patients waited long rather than be treated by another. Her whole mentality was concentrated on each patient as she quickly and skillfully attended to the case; yet as she told me afterwards, she was very sad that morning, as she just learned of the death of a friend who had for many years been in charge of a clinic at an Eye Hospital in Philadelphia. Mrs. Wilson used to spend her Cornell vacations studying with him, and he gave her the first encouragement to enter the profession, she said with emotion.

Moorfield's Hospital is attended by students from all parts of the world. The morning I was there men were present from Egypt, India, Australia, Canada, and the United States. A California doctor whom I met elsewhere expressed his regret that he had spent so much time at clinics on the continent when he could learn so much more from Mrs. Wilson.

Mrs. Wilson's career is an encouragement to other women not to be afraid to take up a profession after early womanhood has passed even though that profession be one that requires long and arduous preparations. Dr. Wilson was the mother of a grown son when she began her special education, and now after twenty-two years of training and experience she feels her life-work is still before her. It is not the fashion for women to grow old nowadays. They may not live longer than women used to, but while they do live they are alive to what is going on, and if they wish to beguile what would otherwise be the tedium of old age by taking up a new pursuit or some line of education there is nothing in conventions, or in public opinion to prevent them. I know a woman who after sixty, entered a medical college, and entered upon a successful career after graduating; and another friend of mine attended the University of Wisconsin after she was eighty years of age, and nobody laughed at her, but all appreciated her pluck, and as she said of herself, she was having the time of her life. There is nothing like getting hold of new knowledge to fill a vacant or to cheer a sorrowful life, even if no other practical use is made of such acquirements.

A Man Who Paints Under the Ocean

Oddities, of no matter of what kind, have always appealed to the great majority of people, so that paintings representing odd subjects painted in odd places attract much attention. But to Walter Pritchard of California must be given the credit for doing the oddest work and in the oddest place.

Mr. Pritchard is a marine painter, but quite different from the ordinary marine painter, who merely paints the usual ocean scenery. Mr. Pritchard paints under the ocean. In a sort of a diving costume he remains under the water twenty minutes at a time, standing on the bed of the ocean, getting impressions of the clear sea which will be true reproductions.

Mr. Pritchard uses solid oil pencils on a canvas of solid oiled leather, secured to a heavy iron easel, when working in the ocean.

He has produced some wonderful views, full of irridescent color, of the hidden beauties of the sea.

Another artist that is attracting attention for his odd work, is Earl Durant, an Englishman who is studying art in Rome.

His specialty is doing night scenes. His work is all done in the night, and represents scenes by moonlight or by artificial illuminations. He introduces women into his pictures in order to secure extraordinary effects of different lights on the skin and the complexion. Each light, he believes, changes the color and appearance of the skin and complexion as well.

The Bolometer

"You don't know what a bolometer is, do you?" inquired the professor party when somebody has been talking about thermometers. "No? I thought not. Most people don't, but it is very useful to science just the same and science is doing a while lot for most people, though as a rule it is very quiet about it. All of you know what a thermometer is and that it measures heat in degrees and none that you ever see in public make it any finer than one degree, but the bolometer is different. It measures heat, but not by mercury in a glass tube out in the weather. On the contrary it must be carefully protected from the air by a case. Its gauge is a strip of fine platinum wire acted upon by electricity and it is so sensitive that it will measure to one hundred millionth of a degree. A lighted candle brought into a room with a bolometer will have a noticeable effect upon it and the heat of the hand several feet away will be registered. So sensitive is the bolometer that it can be used only at night when few or no people are moving about and when there is nothing likely to disturb it."

Against Desecration of Flag

A bill has just been passed by the senate which provides a fine of $500 for desecration of the American flag, the coat of arms or other insignia; by use in advertisements, trade-marks, labels, etc. Also, the person who tears down, tramples upon, treats with indignity or destroys wantonly the flag or coat of arms would be guilty of a misdemeanor.

This Department is conducted solely for the use of COMFORT sisters, whereby they may give expression to their ideas relative to the home and home surroundings, and to all matters pertaining to themselves and families; as well as opening a way for personal correspondence between each other.

Our object is to extend a helping hand to COMFORT subscribers; to become coworkers with all who seek friendship, encouragement, sympathy or assistance through the interchange of ideas.

Any abuse of this privilege, such as inviting correspondence for the purpose of offering an article for sale, or undertaking to charge a sum of money for ideas, recipes or information mentioned in any letter appearing in this department, if reported, will result in the offender being denied the use of these columns.

Do not ask us to print letters requesting patterns, quilt pieces, etc., for the purpose of, or with the expectation of receiving the equivalent in return, for this is not an exchange column.

Do not ask us to publish letters requesting money contributions or donations of any sort. Much as as we sympathize with the suffering and unfortunate, it is impossible to do this as we would be flooded with similar requests.

Do not request souvenir postals unless you have complied with the conditions which entitles you to such a notice. See postal request notice in another column.

We cordially invite mothers and daughters of all ages to write to COMFORT Sisters' Corner. Every letter will be carefully read and considered, and then the most helpful ones chosen for publication, whether the writer be an old or new subscriber.

Please write only on one side of the paper, and recipes on a separate sheet.

Always give your correct and full name and address, very plainly written; otherwise your letter will receive no attention.

Address all letters for this department to MRS. WHEELER WILKINSON, Care COMFORT, AUGUSTA, MAINE.

THE selfish mother—nine times out of ten that means YOU, even though you heartily deny it and say you do everything in your power for your children and right there you convict yourself. You do too much, for in the fullness of your mother love you run here and there doing for the different members of your family what they should learn to do for themselves and thus plant the seed of selfishness which will be the cause of unhappiness when the child is among strangers who do not see with your eyes. The mother who continually gives up her own time, money and strength for the gratification of her children, teaches them to expect it. If the mother wears an old dress or coat that the daughter may have new ones, she is fostering a spirit of vanity that may be the cause of sorrow later.

As a general rule the mother has more care and anxiety than any other member of the family and neither husband nor children will love her any more for sacrificing herself to their comfort—perhaps they will appreciate it but that appreciation is likely to come too late. She should be just to herself. I do not mean that she should make slaves of her children any more than they should make a slave of her. Children like to be useful and feel they are a help, and if a little praise, with occasionally a small amount of money, is given them they will learn to enjoy the work for the pleasure of helping mother and of earning spending money for themselves. Thus the mother has time to devote to study and can keep abreast of the times and be able to converse intelligently on matters of current interest. Remember that "Unselfish mothers make selfish children."

LYNN HAVEN, FLA.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:

May I come in a few minutes to tell you how delighted I am with this corner? I will tell you some of the things I wanted to know about Florida and could not find out till I came here.

First, so many people have the idea that it is expensive living here. It may be in the eastern part of the state but here in the western part the land is good for farming, back a few miles from the Gulf and bays of which I think Florida has her full share. Good farm land can be bought from ten to twenty-five dollars an acre; much of the land that is not cleared can be bought for five dollars an acre.

People coming from the North learn by bitter experience that farming methods differ here and the crops one raises here are different. There is no reason why one may not make a good living on twenty acres here easier and better and with much less work than on a sixty-acre farm in the North. I can speak from experience for I was born and reared in Michigan, and then the difference in the amount of fuel and heavy clothing in one year more than makes up for the expense of coming here.

Fruit will grow here but don't make the mistake of thinking that it is plentiful now for it is not, as this is comparatively a new country and must be considered as such. However, as soon as the fruit is planted it grows just as fast as anywhere. Apples are about the only one of the old home fruits we cannot grow here.

Lynn Haven is one of the new cities of Florida, on St. Andrews Bay and is sixteen miles from the pass out to the Gulf of Mexico so while we have the salt water of the beautiful bay and fine bathing beach and the air from the Gulf we are away from the storms and breakers.

I fear my letter is too long now so will close by saying to any that want reliable information about homes here I will write if they will send me self-addressed, stamped envelope. I have no land for sale, but know of some that is cheap and good as any in Florida on a good, rolling ridge with water in abundance, and in a good community.

I wish the COMFORT staff would come and go fishing with me this morning, just pin on your sunhat, put on a jersey jacket for a wrap and we will have a mess of trout in short order.

Success to COMFORT'S staff and love to all the sisters. MRS. M. E. PARTRIDGE.

Mrs. Partridge. I am relieved to learn that I am not the only follower, among the sisters, of Izaak Walton and wish it were possible for me to accept your invitation, as fishing is a favorite sport of mine and I always join my children on their fishing trips whenever my work will permit and, to be perfectly truthful, sometimes when it doesn't. All the sisters tell of their work, which we want to know about, but why not tell of your play and amusements also, for a certain amount of the latter is conducive of better results in the former—do you not agree with me?—Ed.

REDWOOD, VA.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND COMFORT SISTERS:

Will you admit a lonely blind girl into your social circle just for a little while? Although I am blind I am a subscriber to COMFORT and it is a great pleasure to me to have my mother read your interesting letters.

I will describe myself so you may have some idea how I look. I am five feet four inches tall, black hair, blue eyes, fair complexion and weigh about one hundred and thirty-five pounds.

I live in the country on a farm with my mother, father and two brothers.

Sisters, my life is a very sad one. I was stricken blind at the age of seventeen years, after a long spell of sickness. I have been blind just half my life, seventeen years. While I was very sick I awoke one morning and everything was in darkness to me. I asked my mother to light the lamp. She told me the sun was shining brightly. I could not believe it and told her to light the lamp and bring it to my bedside. She brought it and when I felt its burning blaze I said: "Oh, mother I am blind."

It was a great grief to me and my people to know I was blind just in the bloom of my girlhood, and it was a long time before I could be reconciled to God's will. I would weep and my sadness is beyond expression. I often think how bright and beautiful the world is, but everything is all darkness to me.

I went to the blind school at Staunton, Va., but stayed only two weeks. I grew homesick and went home. I suppose it would have been better for me to have stayed in school but I missed my dear mother and the loved ones at home so much I could not.

Sisters, I have a good home and one of the best mothers in the world.

Although blind there are many things I can do to pass away the lonely hours. I can sweep the floors, make beds, wash dishes and wait on myself. I play the organ, violin and banjo. My music is a great comfort to me. I was once a jolly girl and very fond of music and dancing.

Sisters, I could tell you much more but guess this will be enough this time.

My birthday will be the 25th of April. I will be thirty-four years old. And if any of you wish to send me a card or a letter it will be greatly appreciated.

I think I know how to sympathize with the lonely shut-ins. My best wishes to all.

The lonely blind girl, JOSEPHINE DUDLEY.

Josephine Dudley. Your lot is indeed a sad one, but you have many blessings, a home with loved ones to care for you and the memory of seventeen years of the world as it was before your misfortune. So many blind people can form no correct idea of even the simplest of nature's wonders, that they are to be doubly pitied. By this time you, no doubt, have received my personal letter, explaining that your letter came too late for insertion in the March issue and that I was taking the liberty of changing your birthday to a month later. I feel that your appeal will meet with a ready response from the kind-hearted, noble women who are links in this chain of friendship which extends across the continent, and beyond, and with whom I feel it an honor to be editorially connected.—Ed.

Comfort's Sisters' Recipes and Everyday Helps

SCALLOPED OYSTERS.—In a buttered baking dish put a layer of rolled crackers, cover with a layer of oysters drained, sprinkle with pepper, salt and small pieces of butter, moisten with a little of the liquor mixed with milk; then another layer of crumbs and so on until the dish is full, having crumbs on top; beat an egg into a little milk and pour over the whole, sprinkle with small bits of butter and bake half an hour, then remove cover and let brown before sending to table.—Ed.

FRIED OYSTERS.—Dip oysters in egg, well-beaten, then roll in fine cracker crumbs. Fry in sweet lard or drippings, have enough to cover them, very hot, and brown nicely on both sides.

ITALIAN SPAGHETTI.—One and one half cups of grated Roman cheese, one fowl cut in cubes, one quart tomatoes, one quarter of a cup chopped parsley, one medium-sized onion, four cloves, garlic; season with cinnamon, nutmeg, salt, pepper and two bay leaves. Brown the fowl in butter and oil, add onion, garlic, parsley and spices; let all brown and add tomatoes; cook slowly for two hours. Pour over the paste which has been cooked and to which add the grated cheese.

MEAT ROLLS.—Take thin slices of lean meat, cover with parsley and a little garlic chopped fine; season with salt and pepper, put on a small thin slice of fat-back and roll, tie with white thread; brown in butter. When almost done, put in small potatoes. If it gets too dry add a little water. Should cook about three hours, slowly.

MRS. ANDREW DABOVICH, Virginia, Nev.

MOCK DUCK.—Take a round of beefsteak, salt and pepper either side; prepare bread or crackers with oysters, or without; lay your stuffing on the meat and sew up. Roast about one hour.

MRS. BERTHA STOVALL, Freeburg, Mo.

WHITE SAUCE.—One tablespoon of butter, one tablespoon of flour and one cup of milk or cream. Melt the butter and blend the flour into it, adding slowly the heated milk or cream. Cook thoroughly but do not boil.

EGG SAUCE.—Make same as White Sauce and add two hard-boiled eggs, sliced. This is particularly good with fish.

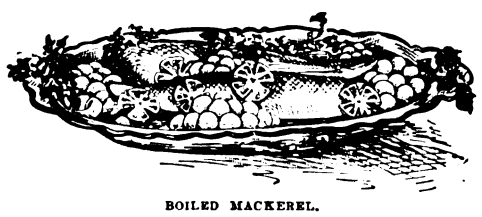
SALMON SALAD.—Put a can of salmon into boiling water and after boiling a quarter of an hour, remove from the can; sprinkle with pepper and salt after draining off the oil; cover with vinegar and let stand twenty-four hours, then remove from vinegar, add a head of finely chopped lettuce, pour over all a salad dressing and sprinkle ground walnuts over the top and garnish with lettuce leaves and serve.—Ed.

GRAPENUT SALAD.—Put two cups of grapenuts in a dish, cover with hot water and let stand till soft; dissolve one package of gelatine, when cold, add grapenuts, walnuts, orange and pineapple, and bananas, chopped into small pieces, one tablespoon of sugar; serve with whipped cream.

MRS. ETHEL ROGERS, Aberdeen, S. Dak.

BAKED BEETS.—Wash and put into a pan; set into a moderate oven and bake slowly; when cooked soft, remove the skins and dress to taste.—Ed.

FRIED GREEN BEANS.—Have your green beans broken into small pieces; take a slice of good bacon, cut into small dices, fry. Put your beans into the skillet, pour in water until the skillet is full, let water boil out, and let beans fry in the bacon and fat, salt and pepper, of course. It takes about half an hour for them to cook. We think them better, than when boiled, and in a quicker way.



MRS. RUDOLPH SCHLEIN, Garden Valley, Cal.

SCALLOPED CELERY.—Fill a baking dish with alternate layers of white potatoes and chopped celery, using potatoes for top layer; add salt, pepper, butter and cover with sweet milk, and bake until brown on top. If too much celery is used it will curdle.

MRS. F. HANDEL, Holtwood, Pa.

BROWN BREAD.—One cup of corn-meal, one cup of graham flour, one cup of sour milk, one cup of warm water, one half cup of molasses, one teaspoon of soda, one teaspoon of sugar, a little salt; steam two hours and serve while hot.

BOILED MACKEREL.—Cook mackerel in enough water to cover to which has been added salt and lemon juice or vinegar. Salt gives the necessary flavor and lemon juice or vinegar keeps the flesh white. Place on platter and serve with potato balls and garnish with parsley and slices of lemon cut in fancy shapes.

CORN BREAD WITHOUT EGGS.—Two cups of cornmeal, one cup of flour, two cups of milk, two tablespoons of melted butter two tablespoons baking powder, and two tablespoons of sugar.

DYSPEPSIA BREAD.—One pint of graham flour; dissolve one half teaspoon of soda in two thirds of a cup of home-made yeast, and add to the mixture one cup of molasses; add sufficient water to make it somewhat thinner than flour bread.—Ed.

GRAHAM MUFFINS.—One cup white flour, one cup graham flour, one egg, one teaspoon salt, one quarter cup of sugar, one teaspoon melted butter, one cup of sweet milk and four level teaspoons of baking powder.

MRS. CHRISTOPHER ROHRER, Waterford, Ohio.

RICE CROQUETTES.—Take cold boiled rice, add three eggs, with sugar and lemon to taste, also a little grated nutmeg if preferred, make into small round cakes, dip in egg and rub in bread crumbs and fry in butter. —Ed.

POTATO CROQUETTES.—Three cups mashed potatoes, two cold boiled eggs and one medium-sized onion, cut fine, salt and pepper to taste. Mix all together thoroughly and shape. Dip in beaten egg, roll in cracker crumbs (or flour or bread crumbs may be used) and fry in hot fat. Serve warm. This recipe makes croquettes sufficient for three people.

CORA CLINE, Potter Place, N. H.

CREAM CHOCOLATE PIE.—Two cups of sweet milk, four tablespoons of sugar and four of chocolate or cocoa and two of flour; mix with a little of the milk until smooth then add to the boiling milk. Beat the yolks of two eggs light and beat in the last thing with a teaspoon of vanilla and a little butter. Put in a baked crust, use whites for top or if preferred whipped cream is very nice.

MRS. G. GUNDERSON, Sandford Dene, Sask. Can.

ORANGE PIE.—Three quarters cup of sugar, a little more than a cup of milk, three heaping teaspoons flour, juice of one large orange or two small ones and a little of the grated rind, three eggs, leaving out the whites of two for top. Cook and fill baked crust.

CUSTARD PIE.—Use a plate about an inch and a half deep, with not too flaring edge. Roll out crust an inch larger than the plate, turn the edge under, first being sure that no bubbles of air are left between crust and plate, and pinch the crust into a fluted rim. Heat three cups milk, beat yolks of three eggs with one half cup sugar till light, add one half teaspoon salt and a little grated nutmeg, if you like it; add the hot milk and the whites of eggs beaten only until foamy. Beating the whites separately may seem unnecessary, but it gives a more uniformly browned crust of fine grain, like that of nice cake, instead of the blistered patches of brown over a yellow, uneven surface which is often seen. Brush the under crust with a little white of egg left in bowl; dredge lightly with flour and then strain the custard into the dish, adding the last portion after setting the dish in the oven if it seems to be too full. Bake slowly till it puffs up all over, and a knife inserted in the center will come out clean and not milky.

WOODFORD PUDDING.—Take three eggs, one cup jam or preserves (it is best to use something with small seeds, such as gooseberries or raspberries), one half cup sugar, one half cup butter, one and one half cups flour, one teaspoon soda dissolved in three teaspoons sour milk. Flavor with vanilla, cinnamon and nutmeg, and bake slowly.

SAUCE.—One cup sugar, butter size of an egg, one tablespoon flour, one cup boiling water. Flavor with vanilla. Pour the sauce over the pudding and serve while warm.

MRS. C. M. HILL, 1121 Guerrero St., San Francisco Cal.

PERSIMMON PUDDING.—(Requested). One quart persimmons, one quart flour, one quart sweet milk, one cup sugar one egg, one teaspoon soda, one half teaspoon salt, butter size of an egg; flavor with nutmeg. Rub persimmons through colander to remove seeds. Bake forty-five minutes in bread pan. Let pudding get perfectly cold and cut in squares.

MRS. STELLA SHOLDERS, Ablong, Ill.

DYSPEPTICS' PUDDING.—Boil a cup of rice till soft; then take two eggs, a cup of sugar, and a cup of milk, stir all together and add to the rice; pare six cooking apples, slice small and place in bottom of pudding dish and pour the above mixture over them. Bake until the apples are thoroughly cooked. To be eaten warm, with or without cream.

CHOCOLATE PUDDING.—Cream three tablespoons of butter, adding gradually two thirds of a cup of sugar, and one egg, well beaten. Mix and sift two and one fourth cups of flour, four teaspoons of baking powder, each a little more than level, and one fourth teaspoon salt. Add to the creamed mixture with one cup of milk, then add two and one half ounces of chocolate, melted. Turn into greased mould and steam two hours. Serve with Cream Sauce.

CREAM SAUCE.—Cream one fourth cup of butter and add gradually one teaspoon vanilla and one fourth cup heavy cream beaten until stiff.—Ed.

FIG PUDDING.—One quarter pound figs, chopped fine, one quarter pound bread crumbs, one quarter pound brown sugar, one quarter pound suet, one quarter pound candied lemon peel and citron, one half nutmeg, grated and five eggs; mix thoroughly, put in mold and boil or steam four hours.

CHOCOLATE PUDDING.—Scald together one quart of milk and three ounces of grated chocolate, and set aside to cool; then add two thirds of a cup of sugar and yolks of three eggs; bake and when done spread whites on top, beaten stiff with sugar and brown.

MOLASSES PUDDING.—One cup of molasses, one cup of sour milk, one cup of chopped suet, one cup currants and raisins, one teaspoon of soda, a little cloves, allspice, cinnamon and enough flour to thicken. Steam from one and a half to two hours.

HARD SAUCE FOR PUDDINGS.—One cup butter, three cups sugar, beat very hard, flavoring with lemon juice.

Strawberry Sauce.—Rub half cup of butter and one cup of sugar to a cream; add the beaten white of an egg and one cup of strawberries, thoroughly mashed. Various other fruits may be substituted with equally good results.—Ed.

DRIED APPLE CAKE.—Two cups dried apples, soak in cold water over night, then chop; one and one half cups molasses, one and one half cups brown sugar, three quarters cup butter, one cup sweet milk, two cups currants, two eggs, one teaspoon soda, one teaspoon cloves, one half teaspoon mace, one tablespoon cinnamon. Make stiff with flour. Bake slowly.

POTATO CARMEL CAKE.—Two thirds cup butter, two cups sugar, one cup mashed potatoes, hot; one half cup milk; one cup grated, unsweetened chocolate; one cup chopped walnuts, one teaspoon cinnamon, cloves and nutmegs; four eggs, two teaspoons baking powder; two cups flour. Cream butter and sugar; add yolks, milk, potatoes, spices and chocolate. Sift baking powder with flour and, lastly, beat whites stiff and add. Then the nuts just before putting in to the oven. Bake in a moderate oven one hour.

ICING.—One cup sugar, five tablespoons of milk, two teaspoons of butter, two tablespoons of chocolate. Beat well and boil seven minutes.

ROCKS.—Two cups sugar, one cup butter, creamed; then add one cup nuts and one cup raisins, chopped; one and one half teaspoons soda dissolved in one quarter cup boiling water; three eggs, well beaten, and three cups flour. Mix in one tablespoon spices and drop. Bake in quick oven.

MRS. ANDREW DABOVICH, Virginia, Nev.

WHITE CAKE.—Two cups of sugar, two cups of flour one cup of lard, whites of three eggs, one cup of water, one teaspoon flavoring, two teaspoons of baking powder. Bake in layers MRS. F. HANDEL, Holtwood, Pa.

ONE EGG CAKE.—Cream one quarter cup of butter, one cup of sugar and one egg. When very light add one half cup of milk, then one and two thirds cups of flour and one and one half teaspoons of baking powder. Stir and bake in a quick oven.

MISS WILHELMINA STRAHL, Danville, Ill.

SUBSTITUTE FOR WHIPPED CREAM.—Add a sliced banana to the white of one egg and beat until stiff. The banana will entirely dissolve and you will have a delicious substitute for whipped cream.

MRS JOHN W. NOONAN, Leo Valley, Nebr.

BUTTER SCOTCH.—One cup of sugar, one quarter cup of molasses, one tablespoon of vinegar, two tablespoons of boiling water, one half cup of butter. Boil ingredients together until they will become brittle when tried in cold water. Turn into a well-buttered pan and when slightly cool, mark into squares.

VINEGAR CANDY.—Two cups of sugar, one half cup of vinegar, two tablespoons of butter. Put butter into kettle, when melted, add sugar and vinegar. Stir until sugar is dissolved and cook until mixture becomes brittle when tried in cold water. Turn on buttered tin to cool. Pull and cut same as molasses.—Ed.

ALMOND CREAM.—Two cups of sugar, enough water to cover, teaspoon of vinegar or a little cream of tartar (one half teaspoon). Cook until it ropes in water. Pull in chopped almonds. Can pull chocolate instead of almonds. MRS. ANDREW DABOVICH, Virginia, Nev.

ELDERBERRY WINE.—(Requested.) Pick berries, mash and let set for three days; strain, to juice add four gallons of water to one gallon of juice. Put one and one half pounds of sugar to the gallon of liquid. Dissolve sugar in water before mixing with juice. When it works, skim three or four times a day.

MARY BOYD, Crofton, R. R. 2, Ky.

DEVIL'S FOOD CAKE.—Two cups of suger, one half cup of butter, one half cup of thick sour milk, three eggs, one and one half teaspoon of vanilla, one level teaspoon of soda, three eighths cake of chocolate, dissolved in a cup of hot water. About three cups of flour for stiff batter.

FROSTING.—One cup of unsalted butter, one teaspoon of vanilla, and one cup powdered sugar. Mix and spread on cake; cover with one tablespoon of sweet cream, mixed with powdered sugar enough so it won't run when spread. MARGARET FISCHER, Lakefield, Minn.

GINGER CAKE.—Four eggs, one cup of milk, half cup of lard, one teaspoon of ginger, one cup of molasses, one cup of sugar, enough flour for a stiff batter. Pour into a well greased pan and bake.

MRS. STELLA STATON, Greenville, S. C.

Ask the Man

If you don't know the right Baked Beans, ask the man of the house to compare them. We promise you he'll pick Van Camp's.

To men's taste the difference is enormous. Van Camp's are whole and mealy. None are crisp, none hard, none broken.

The sauce, exclusive to Van Camp's, has a wondrous tang and zest.

The tinge of bitterness left in most beans is removed by the Van Camp process.

But the greatest difference shows an hour after eating. Underbaked beans then seem heavy. Van Camp's are half-digested. For we bake them for hours, in small parcels, by super-heated steam under pressure. Even the hulls are mellow.

VAN CAMP'S
PORK & BEANS BAKED WITH TOMATO SAUCE

Also Baked Without the Sauce

10, 15 and 20 Cents Per Can

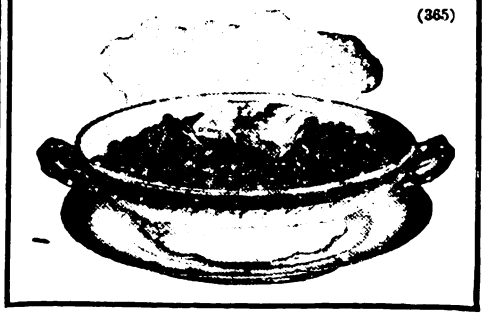
No need to compare them with home-baked beans. They are impossible if you seek easy digestion. No home oven half bakes beans.



The question lies between ready-baked beans. And the masculine world has chosen Van Camp's. Today thousands of restaurants which cater to men are serving Van Camp's alone.

This dish will change your standards on baked beans. It will lead you to serve this nutritious dainty oftener. It will save you many an hour of cooking. It will make bean dinners more attractive to the man.

Van Camp's has done that in a million homes. Now it's your turn. Try it.

Buy a can of Van Camp's Beans to try. If you do not find them the best you ever ate, your grocer will refund your money.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

John Weston, old and wealthy, knowing he has but a few days to live, sends for Richard Burdon, his lawyer. Remembering a debt he owes Charles More, he revokes a will in favor of a younger brother's child and makes a new one, disposing of the lives and hearts of two, and leaves it for Mr. Burdon to carry out his bequests. The banker is found dead the next morning. Sixteen years later Sir Cyril More with wealth squandered and no aim in life, finds himself at Lucerne, Switzerland, where he meets Edna Weston, who has only Aunt Martha. Edna inquires of Sir Cyril if he knows Richard Burdon. Her father, on his death-bed charges her to go to him the first of the following September. Edna and her aunt board at the Pension, a Swiss boarding house and Sir Cyril leaves the Grand for the Pension Petre, where he gives his name to Edna and her aunt as Harold Payne. Seated in an arbor Cyril hears voices and recognizes Mr. Howley Jones, who admits being a chum of Cyril More, who has completely gone to the dogs, squandering all his money on Glitters. Edna listens and questions if he knows Sir Cyril and is it all true? He admits he has heard of him. Later Cyril meets Miss Glitters and requests her not to tell he is there. Passing on he sees Edna who has witnessed his greeting with Glitters.

A few days later, Aunt Martha, Edna, Sir Cyril and others go by train to the top of the Rigi. Returning, Cyril and Edna decide to walk down. A mist, preventing them from following the path envelops them, and rather than have him leave her to find the path, she would rather die. Cyril clasps her in his arms.

CHAPTER VII.

IN LOVE'S LIGHT.

IT was in no dream this time that she heard those words, "Edna, my darling, my darling!" It had come true, that hysterical fancy of hers, and he did love her; love!—what did it mean?

She raised her head slowly and shyly, and slowly found courage to look up at him. It was a goodly sight, for there was that on Sir Cyril's face that had never been there before, and that made him look more than handsome—noble; it was the glow and light of an honest, passionate love.

"Edna—my Edna! you threw the cotton away because I should not leave; do you—can it be possible that you love me?"

She draws her head back, and with her hands resting—pushing against—his breast, looks up at him curiously, almost breathlessly; her lips slightly apart, eyes soft and tenderly dreamy, a delicious languor settling on her whole face—a bewitching face truly to have so near one's own.

"Do I love you?" she repeats slowly, a beautiful blush coloring her loveliness; "do you love me?"

"With all my heart and soul!" responds Cyril in a low, deep voice. "Oh! tell me, Edna—little fairy—do you really love me?"

She shakes her head slowly, and answers softly:

"I do not know. How can I know? Tell me."

Cyril draws her closer to him, and gently forces her cheek against his heart; she resigns herself with a sigh, and looks up at him expectantly.

"My child," he says—whispers almost, for this sweet innocence of hers is so sacred to him—the worldworn, pleasure-sated man—that he feels as if he were communing with a spirit in some holy place.

"My child, do you not know? Why did you not want me to leave you? You were not afraid to be left alone?"

She shakes her head.

"I was afraid for you; we may be near some dangerous precipice—you might fall;"—she shudders—"No; I could not let you go, could I? But tell me, do I love you? What is love? I feel so strange, so—so happy? Is it like a dream? Oh, if I knew!"

Cyril's eyes devour her with a lover's eagerness.

"Do you love me?" he says; "let us see. Tell me, Edna, the truth—nothing but the truth—and I will answer the question for you. My darling, you are happy, you say; is it because I am here?"

A rapt, wistful look came into the eyes upraised to his.

"Yes," she answers, "I think so, I am sure; I have never been so happy before—no, never. I am always happy when you are near me, and I feel so lonely and restless when you are away. Is that love?"

There is a pause of a moment; Cyril will not speak—will not, by word or movement, break the exquisite delight of her artless confession.

"How long is it since we saw each other? Not long, and yet it seems years and years ago! Oh, what did I do before you came? All that time—before, I mean—seems so dark, so long ago. Do you remember how we sat and looked at the lake, and I told you about all my life, and what we were to do, Aunt Martha and I, in London? What made me tell you? It seemed as if I must, did it not? Did I love you then?"

"God knows! Perhaps," whispers Cyril.

"And you listened, and spoke so gently; I liked to hear your voice even then. I did not mind talking to you—it was good to be sitting near you, and to look into your kind face! And then you came to the pension. Did you come because of my being there—oh, did you come for my sake?"

And a vivid blush glows upon her eager face.

"For whose else, sweet?"

"For mine," she repeats, with dreamy content, "and I never knew it! Yet I was glad when you came; it was like an old friend, and yet quite, quite different, when you came in at the door and I was glad that you sat near me. Did I love you then, I wonder? Ah, no!" with a swift, intense look, "perhaps I was growing to—was I? How strange it is! Yes, I was beginning to—if I do really love you now—for the days all seemed brighter, and at night, when you said good night, and used to hold my hand, it seemed so nice to think that I should see you in the morning—that you would be sure to be at the garden door waiting for me—for you always waited for me, did you not?—and that the flowers beside my plate were yours. I kept one bunch on the pillow beside me one night; they smelled so sweet, and they made me think of you."

"My darling!"

"And then came that dreadful crowd, and when I seemed sinking, sinking under a horrible sea, some strong arm bore me up and carried me away. Through it all—when I had lost all—the crowd—that horrible man—I knew you were near, and I was happy! And now, when the mist came, I did not care; I laughed, did I not? Ah, yes, I should laugh if I were on a rock, and the sea rising, if you were near; I could not be afraid or sad at anything if I could hear your voice, touch your hand—Is that love—do I love you?"

Cyril drank in the fervent gaze of her questioning eyes.

"What do you think, yourself?" he asks, with a smile. "Tell me, Edna?"

Her eyes dropped as she thought for a moment, then she raised them bravely.

"I think it is love," she answered, "and that I do love you."

Rapidly, boldly, as it descended, the mist rises, and in great clouds of vapor is gradually disappearing.

While the two have been communing, Pilatus has reappeared—the lake, at first gloomily and darkly, throws back the reflection of the hills; then, from the far west, streams outward a fan-like radiance from the dying sun, and slowly, gradually the sky clears.

Slowly, happily, hand-in-hand the two, for whom that mist has brought so much of new and wondrous joy, descend the narrow path.

They are silent now, but each has for the other more than words in the close clinging of the hand, the lingering tenderness in the glances that meet and part to meet again. It is all dreamland as yet, but to them it seems as if there would be no waking.

The king of day, sinking slowly but surely, throws his arm upward with a gesture of defiance, and covers the near and distant hills with his purple mantle—then dies. It is twilight; before long it will be dark, and they are still far from home.

Edna looks down the path.

"There is the last of the sun—for today; happy day! It seems to me as if everybody must know, and that they will all stare at me when we meet them—if we do," and she laughs a low, contented laugh.

"We must," says Cyril, "or the steamer for Lucerne will be gone, and we shall be left on this desert island."

"Like Robinson Crusoe. I can walk faster. Oh, no, I am not tired.

But her face belies her words; nothing is more fatiguing than excitement, and of that surely the child has had full measure and running over.

"I could carry you," suggests Cyril, longingly.

"It would only be a fitting termination," responds Edna, with a blush and a smile. "I can go much faster—poor auntie, what a state she will be in; perhaps they have already started a hue and cry; she will be so delighted to see us, and," with accented inflexion, "so surprised."

Cyril pulls his mustache. He had been so wrapt in his happiness that he had forgotten Aunt Martha. Edna's speech aroused him.

Certainly Mrs. Weston would be surprised, but would she be pleased?

The question did not receive a very satisfactory answer; the more Cyril considered the position, the less hopeful did it seem.

Edna looked up at last and pressed his arm.

"How silent you are—are you thinking, and of what?"

"Of you," says Cyril, pressing her arm.

"Of me; what an unsatisfactory subject. Of what are you thinking? Are you thinking," with a sudden questioning glance, "that it would have been better after all if we had gone down with the Robinsons?"

It is so difficult to believe that this great, handsome giant can really love her.

"Oh, sweet, silly goose," responds Cyril. "I was thinking—hoping, rather, that you hadn't any money; that you were quite poor, you know, as poor as I am."

Edna laughs. Real poverty she has never known, so it is easy to laugh.

Edna, will you marry me?

The Curate gabbles over the ceremony after the approved fashion and Sir Cyril More and Edna Weston are one

Leaving her victim like a flower bruised and crushed, upon the cathedral steps

"Dispel all doubts," she says, lightly; "we are as poor as mice, Aunt Martha and I. Oh, quite poor."

"Come," says Cyril, "that's good so far."

"But I can't see why you should rejoice in our poverty," replies Edna, stroking his ulster, which she still has on.

"Can you not?" says Cyril. "What a little ignoramus it is! Let us suppose for an instant that you were rich—an heiress, in fact—don't you think that would make some difference?"

"Oh, yes," she says, with a half sigh, "it would be so much nicer. Ah, I wish I were rich; it would be so sweet to bring it all to you, and say, 'See, here is some more rubbish to go with the other rubbish,' meaning me."

Who can resist the arch, innocent face, the eyes in which the tears of a new-born love-tenderness are trembling?

"All that is very well, as far as you are concerned," says Cyril, with a slightly rueful look; "but you don't suppose they'll let me have you—your people, you know?"

"Would they not?" says Edna, quietly; "then I am glad I am poor. There is nothing to come between us."

"Nothing shall!" says Cyril, and the quiet determination of the tone calls up the color to her cheek.

"I like you when you speak like that," she murmurs.

There is silence for a moment; Cyril is still looking to future and probable impediments to the free course of his first true love.

"And is Aunt Martha to be told all tonight?" he asks, bending down and kissing the pale little forehead.

Edna nods.

"Why not? Why should I not make her happy? There has never been anything between Aunt Martha and me."

"Do I not know that, my darling?" responds Cyril, with an inward thrill of gratitude at the spotless purity of her young life. "But, this is a strange, cold kind of world, of which you know so little, birdie, and I who know too much of it, am looking for the enemy, for there is generally a battle to be fought before one gets such a prize as my Edna. Do you really think Aunt Martha will be as pleased as you pretend to be, little one?"

"Why not?" says Edna, thoughtfully. "Auntie is always happy to see me happy; she has never denied me anything since—since I was born. Oh, no!" Then she stops short and looks up at him with a swift glance of apprehension. "Of what are you thinking? Do you think that something will happen when we go to London—at the lawyers—to come between us!"

She has put his half doubt into words, and Cyril nods.

Edna stands pale and almost breathless.

"Don't look so frightened, my darling," he says, reassuringly; "but I wish I knew more about this coming interview. You see I am not altogether a suitable sweetheart for anyone; perhaps, who knows, there may be something in these coming revelations that may render me less so than ever."

He has been following out the train of thought more to himself than to her, but she listens, wrapt in a kind of apprehensive terror. Instinctively her clasp on his arm grows tighter.

"Do you really think so—do you mean——" with a little stare and smile of incredulity—"that anyone would think you were not good enough!"

"That's it!" says Cyril, with humble emphasis. "Ah, you see, I know the world better than you do; Edna; it's a queer world, but"—with a sudden fervor—"it shall never part us little darling! say that, Edna, my Edna!"

"Yes, I am yours," she says, looking up at him, "and—and it shall never part us."

Cyril looks down at her, as he holds her to him, wistfully.

"Edna," he says, "I am not satisfied yet; some uneasy demon seems to whisper evil prophecy in my ear. Give me tonight to think over matters—one clear night—then let me tell Aunt Martha in the morning!"

All Edna's love asks for at present is an opportunity for displaying obedience. She inclines her head dutifully to her lord and master.

"If you wish it, you shall tell Aunt Martha in the morning. Dear auntie."

Talking as only lovers and such lovers can talk, they reach Weggi's at last, and find an anxious, curious and not altogether amiable group awaiting them.

There is not much time for questioning, for the steamer is puffing and snorting at the quay, and the passengers are already hurrying on board; and Miss Robinson, who looks very tired and frigid and disagreeable, finds time to say, in a mock sympathetic voice:

"So sorry for you, my dear Miss Weston—so very sorry! Of course, it was an accident, but no one will ever believe it. It is quite dreadful to think of—all the afternoon alone, quite alone, with a comparative stranger! I know how dreadfully you must feel it."

It is not the only stab or claw from talons pushed out beyond the velvet, but Edna makes no retort or defense—all the spiteful little arrows which those of the party who are of her sex let fly at her strike aslant and roll from her as water from a duck's back; she nestles under the wing of Aunt Martha, too glad to have regained her to think of reproaches or questions even, and is silent.

As for Cyril, he offers no explanation of the simple truth, and takes himself and a cigar to the other end of the vessel.

It is close upon dusk when the steamer reaches Lucerne, and Cyril, though he gets as close as he can to the landing gangway, and succeeds in securing Enda's hand, cannot put in a word; for Aunt Martha has suddenly awakened to a sense of her responsibility and the danger that may attend this too close companionship of handsome strangers, and does not give Master Cyril a chance to hedge in a whispered word. Indeed it almost seems that he has seen the last of her for that day, for Aunt Martha requests that the tea for herself and niece may be served in her own room; and Cyril, as a last resource, takes to watching under the balcony—that balcony on which he first saw her—on the chance that she may divine his presence by the instinct of love—or the aroma of his cigar.

One of the two does attract her; for just when Cyril has smoked his third cigar, and is inclined to retire in despair, the window opens, and a voice, soft and musical, whispers:

"Are you there? I have come to say good night."

"Good night!" echoes Cyril, with dismay. "Are you not coming down again?"

"No, not tonight," she replies, with a little sigh; "auntie is tired, very tired, and has a bad headache—all my fault, and I am to stay up-stairs and be scolded." Another sigh. "Is it beautiful and cool out there?"

"Yes," says Cyril.

"I wish I were there, but no—no—I must not. Hush! that is auntie's voice. Good night," and she bends with lithe grace over the iron railing of the balcony.

Cyril looks round for something to stand on, sees and drags forward an old block and stands on tiptoe. He can just reach her hand to kiss it, and she, with a bright flush, kisses the fingers he has kissed, as she turns at the door and looks down upon him for the last time that day, with the ineffable tenderness of first love. Now Cyril has time to think, though it is not to be done here, for from the open window of the drawing-room comes Mr. Howley Jones' weak voice, straining at "The Vagabond." Why will all small, weak men choose great baritone songs? Cyril goes down to the lake, and with the inevitable cigar, without which men, it seems, never can accomplish any brain work, sets to work.

Phew! what a task lies before him in the morning! It is worse than taking a stiff hedge with a ten-foot ditch on the other side; it is worse than that terrible meeting of creditors which he had to face when the smash came; it is worse than an interview with his brother Edward, and as Cyril contemplates it, he asks himself, ruefully, what good can be expected to come of it?

"First of all, I suppose," he muses, "I shall have to tell the old lady my right name, then she'll ask me why I concealed it? Cropper number one! Then she'll most likely have heard of some of my foolery, for most people know Tom Fool than Tom Fool knows evidently, and will probably request me to leave the room. If by some lucky chance the ill-odor of my name has not reached her nostrils, she will want to know the extent of my resources. Cropper number two. And then, why, of course, at the very best, she will ask us to wait until she has seen Burdon, and, in fact, there will be an end to the whole thing."

As the probable results settled upon him with the persistence of conviction, Cyril's frank, careless face grew strained and uneasy. This was the turning point of his life—if he had but known it—if he had but known it! But when does our good angel whisper in our ear any such useful information?

The more Cyril looked at the prospect the darker and less promising it grew, and, at last, as he flung his cigar away, thrust his hands into his pockets, he muttered wistfully:

"Jove! I never thought I could have been so hard hit as this! Do I love her? I'd give up all the world for her. I wish we were married off-hand. Ah!" and he stopped short in his talk with a sudden flush, "I wonder whether she would marry me at once—straight off! That would end it all; and where would be the harm? The dear little angel is no heiress to run away with. Why wait until the whole thing has got complicated, and have to wade through an acre of explanations? Oh, Edna, little Edna! if you were only my little wife—now at this moment."

CHAPTER VIII.

MISS GLITTERS SPEAKS.

"Edna, will you marry me?"

It is the next morning, and they are standing on the brow of the hill on the spot where Edna saw her lover for the second time. She is leaning her sweet head, with its wealth of golden hair smoothed down in thick coils, against his heart, her hands clasped round his arm, her heart in her eyes as they look over to the snow-capped hills.

They have been talking of that sweet yesterday which seems so long, long ago, and now Cyril puts the question which has kept him awake the whole night.

Edna starts and looks at him with a surprised, almost fearful intensity.

"Will—I—marry—you? Oh!"

"Yes, my darling," he says; "will you marry me?"

Her eyes droop and a timid smile curves her delicate lips.

"Who knows? perhaps I may, some day," she murmurs softly.

"I don't mean some day," says Cyril, "I mean now—next week!"

"Next week!" she echoes, starting in earnest this time and turning a vivid crimson. "Are you joking?"

"I never was more serious in my life," says Cyril, and he puts his arm round her waist.

"Why next week—why so soon?" whispers Edna, a delicious thrill running through her at the idea, absurd as it is.

"Because," says Cyril, "if it can't be as soon, if it should not be next week, it may never be at all!"

At the unwonted gravity, at the horrible plainness of the assertion, she pales suddenly and draws her head back to look at his face. No, it is still tender and loving, though anxious and perplexed.

"Listen," says Cyril. "Today I am to go to Mrs. Weston and tell her all, to ask her to give you to me; shall I tell you the answer? It will be 'no!' All I can say will not alter that, all we could do will not prevent our being separated. She will take you to England, obstacles will arise—remember that meeting at the lawyers on the first, darling!—and we shall be parted."

Edna's face grows pale with an intense look in her eyes, and her grasp on his arm grows tighter.

"It is Heaven's own truth," says Cyril, with a touch of the earnestness which has recently discovered itself. "I know it, I feel it, as certainly as that we are standing here. What can we do? They will say 'wait,' and I cannot wait with the chance of waiting forever! Once married we are safe—you are mine, my very own—you will not have to face this mysterious revelation alone—alone, my poor little birdie—but with me by to protect and guard you. Be my wife, Edna, my darling! Why should you not?"

"Why not?" she asks, in a faltering voice, her eyes filled with tears; "Oh, why not! How can you ask? How could I leave Aunt Martha?"

"Do not leave her," says Cyril. "Do you think I'd have you desert the best, the only friend you have! Steal away with me one morning to Basle—there is an English church there; I will make all arrangements. Oh, don't look so frightened, my darling! I have thought it out, all of it, and though I'm not strong at the headpiece I can see my way quite clear—quite! We shall disappear for one morning—and then we will come back for Aunt Martha and take her with us wherever you like to go. It sounds worse than it is, my child! far worse. You will marry me some day, you say; you have said that nothing shall part us; let us put it out of the way of anything to step in between. If you knew how I loved you, you little witch! If you knew how you have changed my life with your sweet little face, with those great eyes of yours; if you knew how I'd give up all the world, if I had it to give, to be able to call you mine now, you wouldn't hesitate. Only be my wife, Edna darling, it is all I ask."

"It isn't much!" murmurs Edna, with a little plaintive smile, that is broken by a sob.

"It is more than all the world to me!" says Cyril, straining her to him. "Ah, it is a poor sort of thing I offer you, my sweet darling!" he added, with a half groan; "perhaps it would be better if you put it aside." His face grew grave and mournful as it looked down on hers. "For all your sweet, pure beauty and spotless youth, what have I to offer in exchange?"

Edna looks up at him, her face aglow with rapt devotion.

"Yourself," she says, with a sob. "What was I before yesterday? What was my life till you came and showed me how much of joy it could possess? Oh, my love! my love! you say you love me, but I tremble when I think how much I love you! If we were to be parted, if you were to go from me, I should die! I could not live; it makes my heart stand still and turn to ice to hear you hint at it. I love you so that I must do what you will; I must marry you if they will not let me keep you without!"

"You will marry me soon—at once!" exclaims Cyril, almost mad with delight.

The girl looks up at him with a sweet, solemn gaze of devotion, her lips half parted, her hair pushed off her forehead by his caressing hand, her face like a sculptured saint's.

"Yes, I will marry you soon—at once!"

* * * * * * * * * * *

It is a warm morning, and the curate in charge of the little Protestant church at which the English and American visitors to Basle came during the season to worship their common God, and stare at the new bonnets, draws his surplice over his head with a sleepy yawn that is a tolerably eloquent protest against the adverse fate that compels him to perform the marriage service for a mad young English couple, instead of lounging beside the Rhine, with a book in his hand and slumber under his eyelids. It is hard that English people cannot stop at home and be married, he thinks; and the pew-opener, a little Swiss woman, whose knowledge of English is as limited as it is unintelligible, agrees with him. Now that there is much to grumble at in this case, for the bridegroom is not only a handsome, but a pleasant and a liberal gentleman, who has paved the short, few yards of the road to matrimony with gold—has heavily tipped the pew-opener before the ceremony, and promised her a still heavier guerdon after its consummation.

And now, as the little bell is swung slowly to and fro, producing a tintinabulation more like a dirge than a marriage peal, a modest fly crawls, after the manner of its species, to the little gate, and a fair, tall gentleman, with handsome eyes and a mustache of tawny gold, gets out and assists the bride to alight. She is wondrously pretty, although there is a complete absence of the usual paraphernalia—no white satin dress, no pearls, no white veil, no wreath, no attempt at anything bridal in the way of costume, from the simple, pretty little hat on her silken hair to the equally little shoon. One white rose she wears at her bosom, but that might be worn by any maiden going a-shopping, and reveals nothing.

The bridegroom himself is clad in a well-cut and undeniably useful traveling suit, and he, too, has nothing about him suggestive of a wedding. But that they have come to be married there can be no manner of doubt, for the gentleman draws

Childhood Adventures on a Texas Ranch

By Adele Steiner Burleson

SYNOPSIS OF WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE.

"Toughey" is a true story in which the author narrates the actual exploits and adventures of her three children and her own experiences during a summer, some dozen years ago, happily spent in rusticating on her ranch in a remote and somewhat wild part of Texas, far from their city home. This large domain, known as Steiner Valley, was inherited by Mrs. Burleson from her father, Dr. Steiner, who as surgeon in the U. S. army served with distinction through the war with Mexico which added Texas and an empire besides to the territory of the United States.

In mentioning herself and her husband (now Postmaster General, but then member of Congress) in the story she has modestly assumed the name of "Deering" which our readers are at liberty to change to Burleson.

The ranch, which is several miles in extent, is in part cultivated as a cotton plantation and the rest is used as a range for Mr. Burleson's great herd of Hereford cattle. The plantation is worked entirely by convict labor supplied by the state in return for a certain per cent of the crop, and besides the manager's house and the owner's summer cottage there is a cluster of buildings called "the camp" occupied by the convicts and guards.

All this is new and of somewhat startling interest to the children who are accustomed to city life.

According to the habit of the family, the two younger girls, with only a year's difference in their ages and being fast friends and playmates, are classed together under the generic designation of "the children." The eldest daughter, who, though only twelve years old, is several years their senior and bears herself toward them with a patronizing air of elderly dignity and wisdom that at times is somewhat galling to the little girls, is nicknamed "Toughey." This pet name had been conferred on her in babyhood by a college girl aunt in admiration of the child's coolness, grit and self-reliance manifest even at that tender age.

Len, the manager's son, is a bright boy and proves a faithful and efficient guide and assistant on excursions and outdoor sports.

CHAPTER VII.

MOUNTAIN CLIMB IN QUEST OF LOST GOATS.

TO turn the goats from the big pasture, where they remained during the day, into the inclosure about Pecan Hollow, steer them safely across the creek bottom and past the sorghum stacks and into the little coral behind Isum's cabin, where they were penned for the night, was a privilege sometimes claimed by the children and readily yielded by the old negro.

In the morning Isum would turn them again into the big pasture, at which time his duties would cease and Monte's begin. From morning until early evening the Mexican stayed with the goats. All day he followed them up the steep sides of the mountains, guided them around impossible cedar brakes and through entangling thickets whose reaching hands had the grip of steel on the long hair of the Angoras. By his presence he protected them from wolves, and now and then he would arrive home with a lame doe on his back or a puny kid under his arm.

In the evening, after he had rounded up his flock and turned it over to Isum, he would go to his little log house by the roadside, where he might be seen any evening preparing his supper of cornmeal cakes at an outside fire and with the help of a few hot stones.

Toughey and the children had learned to say "Buenos dias" and "Buenos noches" to him, but beyond a civil response to their greeting the white-haired old fellow had little to say. Even Mr. Deering's efforts to draw him out failed and his hopeless taciturnity was now recognized and respected.

Frequently Toughey and the children would leave on his doorstep a basket of fresh eggs or vegetables, and at their next visit would find it filled with wild plums or grapes, or as the season advanced a few early pecans, with now and then a whistle made from a willow twig.

So that through these expressions of mutual good will, there grew up between the old Mexican and the little girls a real friendship. His arrival on the Plantation in the wake of the goats had seemed at the time like a providential answer to their pressing need of a herder. Drifting there, apparently without motive, his faithful service had satisfied abundantly the expectations of his employer.

One evening, early in September, Toughey and the children, returning from a brisk canter on the turning row, found Isum carefully counting the goats as they squeezed one by one through the big gate. The little girls watched him with interest, for while they had many times witnessed this same scene, they never tired of it.

"They're not all here," said Toughey suddenly.

The old negro shook his head.

"Not mor'n haf," he said, "an' dey cum up scatterin'."

"Where's Monte?" asked Toughey in surprise.

"Dunno," answered Isum.

"Perhaps he's sick," suggested Toughey looking towards the cabin, which was set in plain view of the gate. "We'll go and see," she said.

"Yo' won't fine him," said the old negro slowly, "I done ben thar."

"Well, we'll go anyway," she said and followed by the children she rode in a lope to the cabin. There was no sign of Monte. Riding close to the half open door she peered in and then pushed it wide open. The room was empty. They all shouted his name but got only echoes in response, until, after a strained attention they discovered the faint sound of a goat's bell far up the mountain. The little girls began to get excited.

Returning to the gate they found Mr. and Mrs. Deering there, discussing with Isum the possible reasons for Morte's absence.

"Yo can't tel nuffin' 'bout Greasers," said the old negro with mysterious shakes of the head.

The children thought he might have been eaten by wolves, but withdrew the suggestion under fire of Toughey's gibes.

"We will never see him again," predicted Mr. Deering. "When a Mexican gets ready to quit your service he usually does so without any formalities."

Toughey and the children now volunteered to go up the mountain and drive down the goat whose bell they were sure they had heard.

Slipping from their ponies, they raced towards the big hill, beginning the ascent just behind Monte's house, which was built in its shadow. At the steeper parts they pulled themselves up by the cedars which here grew thickly from base to summit. Arriving at the top, they paused to regain breath and to listen for the sound of the bell.

"Let's be Indians," suggested Toughey, appreciating the value of discipline and silence throughout the expedition. The children looked at each other and hesitated.

"I'll be the big chief," explained Toughey, "and you will be young braves on your first war path."

The children still looked dubious.

"Why it's the very thing," urged Toughey, "your sandals are just like moccasins, and if here aren't our war feathers!" she exclaimed delightedly, pouncing upon two crow feathers which fate seemed to have provided on the spot for her benefit.

"You know Indians always wear feathers when they are on the war path," she said. "The enemy, you see, are the goats and we'll ambush them; that means we'll slip up on them before they know it and then we'll rush down upon them with blood-curdling war whoops and scalp some and take the rest prisoners and lead them back to our camp fire for torture."

Won by this enticing picture, the children were about to yield and become braves when Toughey stuck both feathers in her own hair. This was too much for even the most downtrodden of small sisters! They flatly refused to be braves without feathers. Toughey argued, then stormed, then gave in.

"All right," she said finally, "if you will be greedy I can't help it."

Arming themselves with stick tomahawks, they were soon threading their way stealthily among the cedars, stepping in each other's tracks in order to make but a single trail.

All went well until the Braves began to lose their feathers. They would slip out and then the young warriors had to stop and try to put them in again, and then race after the chief, who kept steadily on, and try to act as if they had been right behind all the time. Once they fell so far behind that they gave a frightened call for "Toughey," which brought back upon them such a wrathy chief, so full of mighty talk that they began to wish they had never seen the feathers which they had finally succeeded in sticking through mats of tangled hair at the back of their little heads.

"If you're going to be Indians, be Indians," said Toughey who liked to do thoroughly whatever she undertook.

"We do want to be Indians," insisted the children miserably, conscious that they were not coming up to the standard in spite of their feathers.

"When Indians get separated, they call to each other like some bird or animal," said Toughey. "Now if you should lose anything"—with a wicked smile and glance at their bedraggled head ornaments—"and have to stop, and get lost from the chief, you must—must—caw like a crow," she ended with sudden inspiration. The children felt their spirits rising again.

"Now you understand?" questioned Toughey, "you are to caw twice and I'll answer with one caw. Indians never talk except in council."

Laying her finger on her lips in final warning, Toughey started forward again, the children following in silence.

For sometime they proceeded rapidly in the direction from which came the sound of the bell, now quite distinct.

It was evident that at any moment they might expect to come upon some of the scattered goats, and Toughey turned to show her followers, in pantomime, what they must do with their tomahawks to the enemy. The children answered with such vicious swings of their weapons that Toughey again gave the precautionary signal for silence before proceeding at a stealthier pace in order to take the foe unawares.

At this fateful moment both feathers fell from the loosened knots of hair, a sandal buckle dropped off, and the Braves were reduced to the necessity of stopping and applying themselves to the task of repairing the mischief and putting themselves in fighting shape.

Toughey with a glance backward went on. After a few more turns among the cedars, she found herself approaching the margin of an open glade across which she saw something that made her shrink into the shadow of a friendly cedar.

Hanging from the limb of a tree, head downward, was a goat. Underneath, three wolves circled and leaped savagely at the carcase, vainly endeavoring to bring it down but succeeding only in touching it occasionally.

Before Toughey could recover from her astonishment, there was a slight flurry and the wolves disappeared so swiftly that she might have wondered if she had really seen them, but for another vision that altogether diverted her thoughts.

Fom the brush on the opposite side of the glade emerged two mules, each ridden by a Mexican. Toughey started forward as she recognized Monte on one of them, and a moment later cowered to her knees under the low sheltering branches of the cedar. The other man was the young convict who had broken Bruce. They rode straight to the goat, and Monte drawing two knives from his blouse handed one to his companion, while with the other he cut the thick cord by which the goat was tied. Dismounting, the Mexicans tore the skin from the animal and began to cut off long strips of the smoking flesh.

Just then two quavering "caws" broke the silence. Toughey started. This was the call of the Braves. She hardly breathed as she watched Monte wrap the goat flesh in the long hair of the Angora and thrust it into his blouse.

Again came the cry of the crows, this time high and insistent.

The convict glanced in the direction from which the sounds came, and Toughey felt suddenly cold. She now saw the Mexicans hurriedly remount and ride swiftly away into the brush. They were hardly out of sight when two indignant Braves, cawing vigorously, burst upon the trail and fell upon her with their tomahawks. She received the attack so soberly, at the same time hurrying them away from the spot, that the children became suspicious and stopped to ask if there was anything the matter.

"There's no use going any further; the bell's stopped ringing," explained Toughey, with a nervous glance over her shoulder, and seizing the children's hands she began to run. To their half frightened questions she would only answer, "Wait 'till we get home," and presently they were speeding along at such a rate that when they reached the mountain's edge they could not stop and went tumbling over and down its steep side so recklessly, the loose, shaly soil raining along with them, that mamma, watching from the big gate, was horrified and papa was sure that he had never seen the goats make better time. They reached the bottom without mishap, however, and a few minutes later Toughey was pouring forth her story to a little group of attentive listeners.

After Isum had been dispatched to the Camp to inform the Manager, it began to dawn upon the children that they had been cheated out of an adventure that could very properly have served them a lifetime. Toughey was to blame. She had seen everything, they had seen nothing. If she had only answered their "caws," they would have been witnesses to the thrilling drama.

"Did you want to see a poor little kid cut to pieces?" asked Toughey.

"Yes, we did!" retorted the children, indignantly.

"Oh!" said Toughey with a shrug, "I thought you had some feeling."

This made matters worse. The children were sure that they had just as much feeling as anybody, but they were not mean and selfish and didn't go around the country seeing wolves, and run-away convicts and goats with their throats cut, and never tell her.

"Didn't I tell you?" asked Toughey.

Didn't she tell them indeed! Yes, after it was all over! But when they ran across any of these things they would never, never tell her.

"I don't want you to," said Toughey, with a smile that made them realize the emptiness of their threat. But Toughey was really sorry that the children had missed all the "fun" as she now began to term the occurrence, and she finally succeeded in partially reconciling them to their disappointment, with a promise to take them the next day to see what the wolves and buzzards had left of the dead goat.

* * * * * * * * *

Although the Manager made every effort to capture the Mexicans, he never succeeded in finding even so much as a trace of them. The dogs, trained to trail men, were unable to follow the track of a horse or mule. The sheriffs of adjoining counties were notified, and rewards were offered, but to no purpose. The Mexicans had disappeared.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING EVENTS.

Alice and May Weston receive an invitation to a farewell reception, given to William Curtis Marchmont, the adopted son of Roland Fletcher, who is engaged to Alice, and is to enter Yale College. Alice is to study law with Judge Ashburton, whose daughter was the wife of Roland Fletcher. Her health failing their daughter Olive is sent, when a baby, to her grandfather, Judge Ashburton, living then in Philadelphia. Imogen Ingraham's mother, Mrs. Farquahar, marries Judge Ashburton. She dies, and Imogene, as the widow of Robert Ingraham and homeless, is invited by Judge Ashburton to accept a home with him and care for Olive. She conceals the birth of her child.

Roland Fletcher, assisted by Olive and Imogen on his left, Judge Ashburton and Will on his right receive their guests. Imogen and Olive, jealous of the attentions given to Alice, ignore her half-extended hand. Mr. Fletcher mortified and displeased receives her most cordially and welcomes her to Castleview. Later he leads her in a quadrille, after which they go into a long corridor. Stopping before a painting Alice learns it is the portrait of Mr. Fletcher's wife. He wishes nothing better for her, than she may be as happy with his boy, as he was with his wife. Will joins them and Olive passes without a word of greeting. Mr. Fletcher follows Olive and requests that she be more courteous to her guests. Will goes to Yale. Judge Ashburton opens his office in town with Alice as his clerk. May is busy. Olive and Imogen out driving. Olive proposes they call for her grandfather. Imogen orders Buxton to drive to the office. Olive takes the lines, Judge Ashburton insists that Alice, who is suffering from a headache, shall ride home. A newspaper caught in the wind, frightens one of the horses and both spring forward. Olive drops the lines and Alice, with rare presence of mind secures them and controls the horses. Judge Ashburton and the driver take Alice home. He reprimands Imogen and Olive for their indifference and failure to thank Alice and realizes a phase in Imogen's character, hitherto concealed. Mr. Fletcher calls upon Mrs. Weston and Alice and expresses his gratitude.

Will's last vacation comes. Judge Ashburton arranges a little excursion which includes Alice and May Weston. Arriving at their destination, they meet Arthur Stamford, in love with Alice Weston, his father Sir Arthur Stamford, Mr. Tom Radcliffe and his sister, Miss Grace. Tom Radcliffe proposes a visit to the caves. Alice Weston and Grace Radcliffe become separated from the party. Alice stopping to tie her shoe Grace goes on. Alice's candle goes out. She feels a grip on her arm and a gruff voice inquires if she knows a woman by the name of Ingraham who lives at Castleview and requests her to send a letter, which he thrusts into her hands. Arthur Stamford returns to find Alice and asks her to be his wife. She admits her love for and engagement to another. In the meanwhile Sir Arthur evinces unusual interest in Will Marchmont and learns to his astonishment that his middle name is Curtis. His mother, Mabel Randal Curtis, was Sir Arthur's second wife, whose first husband was the second son of Lady Marchmont—the Marquise of Leith. A visit to Lady Marchmont confirms Will's parentage and his right to Marchmont Court. He visits Alice, assuring her that nothing can part them and in one year she will be his wife, the future Marquise of Leith. Lady Marchmont exacts much from the future Marquise of Leith, and at her grandson's suggestion she writes a note to Alice, inviting her to come to Leith for a week preceding a reception she is to give in honor of Will and before his departure for Yale College. In the meanwhile Olive is invited to visit at Marchmont Court. She resolves to win Will at any cost, and to his astonishment and regret admits her love for him. Imogen, receiving the letter, given to Alice, by the mysterious stranger, determines to accomplish the union of Will and Olive, and plots to place Alice in a false position before her hostess. Nellie, Mrs. Marchmont's maid, discovers the loss of sixty pounds. Alice, in packing her trunk notices an unusual disorder. Lifting some clothing she finds the missing money and valuable jewelry. Speaking to May, she requests her to call Lady Marchmont and Will, and admits to them where and how she finds it. Lady Marchmont looks amazed. Her attention is drawn to a piece of braid, convincing her that Alice is innocent. Taking the money and jewels to her chamber she discovers strands of silk caught in her jewel box and picks up a tiny bangle. Left alone with Imogen, Mrs. Machmont produces evidence of her guilt and her determination to ruin Alice. The guests return home, Alice and May riding in the Marchmont carriage. As it turns toward Beechcote a shabby-looking man recognizes a piece of luggage and believes that one of the two girls is the missing baby. Will returns to Yale and Alice to her work. A prize is offered by a woman of New York, prominent in society who claims that sex makes no difference in mental capacity and solicits applications from both sexes to take part in a law debate. Judge Ashburton, anxious for Alice to compete, invites her and her sister to accompany him to New York. A few days is spent in studying up the questions involved and they sail for New York. Alice is chosen as one of the contestants and wins the thousand dollar prize. Judge Ashburton is called home by a cablegram from Mr. Fletcher, who has important documents stolen from his safe. He reports the loss to the proper officials. Failing to find them Mr. Fletcher is arrested upon the charge of treason. Imogen visits Roland Fletcher in the jail. If she can give him back his freedom, restore his good name and the respect of his fellowmen will he make her his wife. Declaring it impossible to call another woman wife Imogen realizes she has lost all and refuses to help Mr. Fletcher. The court opens; the third day Judge Ashburton is taken violently ill; he insists that Alice shall continue the case. Thoroughly posted on every point she takes up the argument of her opponent and reduces it to insignificance. Will arrives and conducts Alice to Castleview. The next morning Alice detects a man climbing over the railing to Imogen's window, preparing to let himself to the ground.

CHAPTER XVII.

THE STORY OF THE STOLEN PAPERS.

ALICE was very quick to think and arrive at conclusions. The familiar voice; the stealthy movements of the man who had evidently come from Imogen's room; the fact that the woman had made her boast that she had some knowledge or suspicions regarding the stolen papers upon which Mr. Fletcher's vindication depended; the memory of the man whom she had encountered in that underground passage the previous year and who had forced her to mail a letter to Imogen, all flashed like lightning through her mind, and, blending into one chain of circumstatial evidence, instantly aroused the suspicion that, possibly, the key to the whole situation lay almost within her grasp.

She was as quick to act as to think.

Slipping noiselessly out of her room she darted down-stairs with the swiftness of a deer.

She met the butler in the hall.

"William, the gardner, is just outside," she said, in low, rapid tones, "I want you both to come with me to the west wing. Be quick, be brave, for we have a burglar there and maybe he is the man who should be where your master is now."

The man needed no second bidding.

He was out of the house like a flash.

"Come, Jack, there be a proacher around 'ere," he said to the gardener who was weeding a bed just opposite the entrance, whereupon he sprang to his feet and both men sped toward the end of the west wing, Alice leading the way, and where, sure enough, they found a somewhat disreputable party just in the act of touching the ground after a laborious descent of the waste pipe.

A curse, loud and deep, burst from the man as he realized that he was caught, and at the same time convinced Alice of his identity as the person she had met in the cave.

The next moment the butler and gardener had seized him. "William, hold his hands behind," Alice commanded in a resolute tone, "and Jack, you take care of his legs, while I go through his pockets and see what I can find."

She could not have adopted a more efficacious method to prove her suspicions correct, for the man at once began to swear lustily and to struggle fiercely with his captors.

"Stop that, now," said William, as he gave his wrists a wrench that made him groan with pain, while Jack, with a dexterous and powerful blow from behind, brought him to his knees, where he was powerless in the hands of the two men.

"Now, miss, go fur 'im," said the gardener, with a nod and a grin of satisfaction.

With gleaming eyes and rapid movements the girl searched every pocket in his coat and vest, and finally, with a cry of joy, drew forth from the inner receptacle of his vest the very package of papers which she sought and which, one quick anxious glance showed her was still unopened; that their secrets were safe.

"William!—Jack!—your master is saved!" she cried, in triumphant but tremulous tones.

"Thank the Lord, miss!" was their almost simultaneous reply.

"Now, take your captive to the stable and bind him securely with some stout rope," Alice continued, "then put him into the carriage and both of you must also go to the courthouse with me, to testify against him; be quick, too, for it is getting late."

"All right, miss," the men replied, respectfully, and hurried their man away to do her bidding.

Alice was sorely tempted to go to Judge Ashburton and tell him the glorious news, but she was not sure that he was awake, and she decided that it would be best not to excite him; the good tidings would be just as welcome an hour or two later, and he would not be kept in a state of suspense while awaiting the action of the court.

Neither Olive nor Imogen had heard or seen what had occurred, as the dining-room was in the east wing and remote from the scene just described, and Alice would not take the precious time to go and explain the situation to them; they also could wait, she thought.

It was later than she wished when the carriage drove to the door, the butler and his prisoner, the latter securely bound, occupying the front seat, and Jack riding on the box with the driver.

Alice sprang in and took the back seat and told the coachman to put his horses over the ground lively.

But with all their speed, it was past the hour for the court to open when they arrived, and Will was outside impatiently awaiting the appearance of his betrothed and fearing that some accident had detained her.

She hurriedly explained what had kept her and begged him to see that the thief was safely delivered to an officer, then she hurried inside.

The judge had just risen to address the jury as Alice, with a flushed and eager face, passed to her place and signaled him that she had something to say.

He paid no attention to her, however, but put the question:

"Gentlemen of the jury, have you agreed upon your verdict?"

"We have, my lord," the foreman replied.

Again Alice attempted to attract the judge's attention, but he continued, without heeding her:

"What is your decision?"

"We do not find the evidence against the prisoner sufficiently sustained, and recommend that he be discharged," was the reply.

Roland Fletcher's head sank upon his breast. The result was even as he had feared, and yet he was not prepared for it. He was to go free, but he was not cleared—a cloud would always rest upon his hitherto untarnished name—the blight of doubt would blast his whole future.

Alice caught the look of despair that overspread his face and she could bear no more—even at the risk of being charged with contempt of court for interrupting his honor, she must speak.

"Your lordship, the defendant is guiltless! the papers are found!" she cried, in clarion tones, as she held the package aloft and thus made a striking picture with her gleaming eyes, her scarlet cheeks, her slender, graceful form drawn to its utmost height.

Instantly the entire audience was thrown into the wildest excitement. Cheer after cheer rent the air; hands were vigorously clapped; handkerchiefs were waved and every face beamed with delight over the glorious but unexpected news.

Roland Fletcher alone sat pale, trembling and silent, hardly daring to credit the evidence of his senses.

As soon as order could be restored the judge demanded an explanation of this wonderful denouement; whereupon Alice briefly related to the now breathless throng when and how the papers had been found.

In order to make the links in the chain of our story complete, we must take the reader back to the night on which Mr. Fletcher was called away from home, and on which, also, the papers that had been committed to him were stolen.

Olive was also away on a visit to a friend in London, and thus Imogen, except for the presence of the servants, was entirely alone.

She sat reading in the library until about half-past ten, when she retired to her own room, where, as the evening was chilly, she had ordered a fire to be made in the grate.

She was not sleepy and the room was so cozy and cheerful she pulled the heavy draperies across the windows, turned the lights low and sat down before the glowing fire, where she soon fell into deep thought.

Evidently her reflections were not altogether pleasant, judging from the frown upon her brow and her tightly compressed lips. She sat there a long time, and was finally aroused to a sense of lateness of the hour by hearing the hall clock strike twelve.

She immediately arose, and, turning up the lights, began to prepare for bed.

Suddenly she paused.

"I wonder if I fastened that window in the library," she muttered, a shade of anxiety sweeping over her face as she remembered having opened a window to fasten a swinging shutter.

She stood irresolute for a moment; then, lighting a candle, passed out of her room, noiselessly and swiftly threading the corridor and the long flight of stairs leading below.

The house was very still, and an unusual feeling of loneliness swept over her as she proceeded toward the library through the solemn silence and darkness of the great hall below.

A pang of angry bitterness shot through her heart as she thought of her desolate condition with no one there to keep her company. No one in all the world appeared to give her thought, beyond a certain comfortable reliance upon her because of her efficiency to direct the household in an orderly manner. There was no one whom she could claim, as her very own, to love, and no one to claim kinship with her; no one to care whether she were happy or miserable or to be concerned if she were left solitary and alone, as she was tonight.

Pausing, with a sigh, as she reached the library door, she softly turned the handle and entered the room.

A muttered oath fell upon her startled ear as she did so, and a figure, crouching in the farthest corner before Roland Fletcher's safe, sprang to his feet and confronted her and bearing in his own hand a lighted candle.

For the moment she was too frightened either to speak or move; but she instantly recognized the detective and human sponge who for many years had been such a thorn in her flesh.

"Ha! so it is you who have caught me!" the man observed, and instantly recovering his self-possession, as he realized who had discovered him there. "Well, I'm glad it was not one of the servants, for then, most likely, there'd have been a row or—something worse. On the whole, I'm rather glad to see you, Mrs. Ingraham. Sit down and make yourself comfortable—you are looking a trifle pale and upset," he concluded, shoving a chair toward her with his foot.

"Why are you here?" Imogen now found voice to say, although she was trembling violently.

"Well, you see, I got short of cash again and, as I knew I shouldn't be able to squeeze very much out of you, I concluded—knowing that the coast was pretty clear—that I'd help myself to a little loose change, if I could find it handy," the man returned, with bold effrontery, as he glanced back at the safe which he had just closed as she entered.

"But you couldn't get into the safe," Imogen retorted in a confident tone.

"Couldn't I?" sneered her companion, with a chuckle; "you are slightly mistaken there, my friend, for I happen to be familiar with about a hundred combinations—I'm something of an expert at mastering them, and this one proved to be as easy as a-b-c to me; only I didn't find much of any swag to pay me for my risk and trouble," he concluded, with an air of disappointment.

Imogen heaved a deep sigh of relief at this latter assurance, for she had known that Mr. Fletcher had had a large sum of money in the house only a day or two previous. Now she knew that he must have deposited it before he went away, and she was very thankful.

"Did you take anything from the safe?" she demanded.

"Yes, all the money there was; two or three pound notes and a little loose silver," responded the detective, with apparent frankness.

"Anything else?" Imogen questioned, sharply.

"What else should I take! It is money that I want," was the somewhat sullen reply. "And now," he added, "rather than keep you up any longer, I'll take myself off."

"How did you get in?" she inquired.

"Somebody was thoughtful enough to leave a window unfastened for my accommodation," he returned with a significant laugh, "and lest I bring you another visitor of the same kind, I think I'd better retire by the way I came."

He walked to the window which she had neglected to fasten, and quietly raised it.

He threw one leg over the sill, and then paused and looked back.

"Don't you dare to make any row until I'm well out of the way," he said, with a wicked look; "if you set anybody on my track, you may be pretty sure that I'll make things hum for you; and, by the way, I may as well tell you that, at last, I have got track of that other young one."

"Oh!" gasped Imogen, in voiceless anguish, as she thus realized how thoroughly in the power of this bad man she was. But her proud spirit rallied almost immediately.

"I don't believe you," she cried, scornfully.

"Don't you?" he composedly returned, "belief never changes facts, you know, and I could lay my hand on a certain extension with a perforated top tomorrow, if it became necessary—it isn't so far from Castleview as you might imagine, either."

Imogen's heart sank within her, for too well she knew that he spoke the truth. How the web of fate seemed to be closing about her, and she was powerless to protect herself against, or retaliate upon him; for she was sure the moment she showed a disposition to thwart him in any way, he would betray her terrible secret.

She was stricken dumb by his last fling at her—her strength almost forsook her and she stood white and trembling while he deliberately made his exit from the window and softly closed it after him; then, waving her a mocking adieu, he disappeared in the darkness.

She tottered feebly to the window and fastened it, after which she examined the safe to ascertain if it was locked; then she dragged her trembling feet up to her room and sank weak and faint upon her bed.

She was too spent even to undress, but lay there, just as she was the whole night through, never once closing her eyes in sleep until day began to break, when she sank into a heavy stupor, from which she did not awake until the middle of the forenoon.

When she went down-stairs, at lunch time, she found that Mr. Fletcher had returned and Olive with him.

She longed to tell him about the visit of the burglar of the previous night, yet dared not; but her consternation may well be imagined when he came to her, later, and told her of the loss of certain documents which contained important state secrets, the revelation of which would ruin him utterly.

Of course she knew instantly who had taken them; but she was obliged to simulate astonishment and distress. It was not all simulated, either, for it really was agony to her to witness Mr. Fletcher's dismay.

His loss seemed to age him almost in a moment, and his pale, haggard face, his anxious eyes and nervous excitement were a continual reproach to her.

On the morning of his arrest it seemed to her that she must go mad. Once or twice she was on the point of confessing what she knew, but fear kept her dumb, while she argued that he would soon be released, for no one could believe him guilty of wrong in view of his irreproachable past.

She knew that he cabled at once for Judge Ashburton, and this led her to hope that there would be some speedy settlement of the affair, upon his return, and then there would be no need to compromise herself.

But when she learned that the man whom she so madly loved had been committed to jail and refused bail, after a preliminary examination, when she witnessed Olive's wild grief and shame over the fact, she had another struggle with herself more terrible than all the rest.

And yet, even then she yielded to the tempter who whispered:

"Wait until the trial—he will be proven guiltless and all will be well."

CHAPTER XVIII.

IN A CRITICAL POSITION.

When the judge returned from America, Imogen was greatly relieved. He was a bulwark of strength—someone to rely upon, someone to talk the matter over with—and, as he had always been so successful throughout his career, she now hoped that he would readily find a way out of the present difficulty.

But, as day by day went by, and the man's face grew grave and careworn, his manner preoccupied and depressed, it seemed to her as if the strain upon her nerves would drive her mad. Every night upon his return from his office she would eagerly inquire if he had been able to gather any favorable evidence during the day—if he had any more hope that he might win Roland's case.

The man marveled at her absorbing anxiety—marveled to see her so deathly white and growing so thin, at her waning appetite and lack of interest in everything, save the approaching trial, and his old-time suspicions that she loved his son-in-law with a deep and absorbing affection were revived and a feeling of tender sympathy for her was awakened in his heart.

Thus the time went slowly by until the evening before the trial arrived, when Imogen, who for weeks had been revolving in her mind various plans by which she could save the man she loved, and still shield herself, paid her visit to Mr. Fletcher in the jail. She had finally decided upon a desperate move, believing that if she was once his wife, no matter what he might learn regarding her past, it would be his duty to protect her.

At any rate, she would then have it in her power to pay the detective sufficient hush money to keep him silent. If she could once obtain Mr. Fletcher's promise to marry her she would immediately bargain with the man for the papers, for she knew he was still in the neighborhood, and Roland would be saved. Then she would be such a faithful, loving wife to him that she must eventually win his affection.

With this purpose in her heart, she went to the jail to see him, and with what result we already know—she failed, utterly, in her object and returned to Castleview in despair. She retired immediately to her room, locked herself in, and, after exchanging her street costume for a loose wrapper, threw herself into a low rocker, buried her face in her hands and tried to think what she should do next.

She knew that, after what had just occurred, if Roland should be released, as she felt sure he would be, even though he might not be fully exonerated, she could no longer remain at Castleview. She had sealed her own doom in that respect, and the thought was keenest agony to her, for if she went away she must be separated from Olive and the renunciation of her child, after having given the best portion of her life to secure for her, through crime and deception, a high social position and a fortune, and a home for them both under the same roof, was like sundering soul from body.

"Oh! is life really worth the living, with these impending misfortunes and the failure of all schemes?" she asked herself, with an almost overwhelming sense of weariness and despair. "Would it not be better to blot myself at once out of existence?" True, Olive could remain where she was and still continue to reap the fruits of her mother's sin, but this thought was small comfort to the selfish woman, in view of the future of loneliness and remorse and constant fear of detection that lay before her.

At length, utterly worn out with the conflict of emotions, she retired to bed, where, after an hour spent in bitter weeping, she finally sank into a heavy sleep.

The next morning she dressed herself with great care and repaired to the courthouse to be present at the trial.

Olive would not go. She had behaved very badly throughout her father's trouble. She had, from the first, maintained an air of sullen injury. She felt shamed, personally aggrieved and resentful that she should have been subjected to the humiliation of having her father committed to jail, like a common felon. She had flatly refused to visit him there, and had sent him no word or message of love or comfort during his imprisonment, and had held herself aloof from everyone in a chronic state of pouting and sulkiness.

Judge Ashburton was out of all patience with her for the first time in his life, although during the last year or two he had felt greatly disappointed in her in many ways.

"Have you no love or sympathy for your father, Olive?" he had questioned, sharply, when upon one occasion she had refused to go with him to visit Mr. Fletcher. "Don't you suppose he suffers and needs all the comfort that his loved ones can bestow?"

"Oh, of course!" Olive sniffed, with an unlovely frown, "but just think of the shame of it all; of how—how he has disgraced us all."

The judge turned and left her without a word, both grieved and angry over her utter selfishness.

A $4.25 Guaranteed Bicycle Tire for $2.48 Smooth Tread
$2.75 for Non-Skid

$2.75 Each for Non-Skid

Other leading makers still ask you an average of $4.25 for a quality bicycle tire. Now here is offered you the famous "Goodyear-Akron" single-tube Bicycle Tire at $2.48—a tire of genuine Goodyear quality through and through.

Why This Low Price?
These tires are made in the world's greatest tire plant. An output of up to ten thousand pneumatic tires a day has brought the cost down and down. We are content with a small profit. Thus you get the two-fold advantage of smallest profit and largest output.

GOODYEAR AKRON

Others can make lesser tires—but poor tires are not worth while. No man knows how to build a better tire than Goodyear. And here at $2.48 you get a guaranteed tire of beauty, durability and service at about half the regular standard price of such quality tires.

How To Get Them
The Smooth Tread, size 28 by 1½, costs you $2.48 per tire. The Non-Skid, sizes 28 by 1⅜, 1½ or 1⅝, at $2.75. Ask your dealer for them. If he hasn't them, and you insist, he will get them from our nearest branch. Remember this when you go to buy.

The World Needs Faith

An Easter Sermon—By Uncle Charlie

Copyright, 1915, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher, Inc.

THE two great festivals of the Christian year are majestically silhouetted against the broad expanse of time.

Like two towering lighthouses standing on two mighty promontories, their beams flash radiantly out over the dark and troubled waters of life. Theirs is a light that never dims and never fades. They are like two inspiring beacons that keep hope alive in the human breast. No fog and no mist can for long obscure their piercing rays. They are the polar stars of faith. To them the magnetic needle of all Christian aspirations eternally points.

The first is the joyous light of Christmas, the second the clear lustrous rays of glorious Easter; by the aid of which we are enabled to glimpse the shining shores of the better land.

In our journey o'er the watery wastes of this transitory life, in which the waves of adversity, sorrow, sickness and poverty sorely batter the creaking timbers of our frail and tiny craft, we are dashed hither and thither in our course and almost despair as we watch the dark and ominous clouds that loom around us. Hope almost vanishes, the waters threaten to engulf us, the seas grow more mountainous and more angry. Suddenly there appears a faint glimmer of light that grows momentarily brighter until its rays illumine the entire heavens. The waters subside and the murmuring of the tempest is hushed. A great calm settles down upon all, and as with amazement we note the great and wondrous change, upon our ears fall the enchanting strains of celestial music and voices of exquisite sweetness are heard singing the inspiring anthem: "Peace on Earth, Good Will to Men."

We have reached the Christmas lighthouse, care and sorrow are forgotten and we rest, feast and are merry. Heaven has taken compassion upon us, and the Carist Child has come to gladden the hearts of men with a new hope. Refreshed we start once more on our journey, and again the waters are troubled and the clouds loom overhead. Our hearts sink within us. The angel voices are still. We seem to be drifting we know not where.

Perhaps that first light was only meant to deceive and create a false hope. We are ready to listen to the words of false counselers and drift hither and thither aimlessly, discouraged and disheartened. We reproach God for betraying us. We forget to pray. What is the use?

Suddenly the clouds part, the waters are stilled and our weary eyes perceive a great light, and again our ears are ravished by the sound of heavenly voices singing: "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and He shall stand upon the latter day upon the earth, and though the worms destroy my body yet in my flesh shall I see God."

Then the heavens resound with the triumphant chorus: "Christ is risen! Christ is risen! O death! where is thy sting? O grave! where is thy victory?"

The clouds have gone, the troubled waters are stilled, the beautiful isles of somewhere burst enchantingly upon our vision, and the fronded palms lift their emerald heads in the balmy air. We have voyaged through the valley of the shadow and are reminded of the immortal lines:

"I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care.

"And so beside the Silent Sea,
I wait the muffled oar;
No harm from Him can come to me
On ocean or on shore."

We have reached the Easter lighthouse and the thin partition which veils that brighter world, has been rent apart by the risen Savior. We know now the location of those magic isles, and what is better still, we know how to reach them for the Master has said: "Because I live, ye shall live also."

Easter is the complement of Christmas, the fulfillment of the hope which dawned upon the world with the coming of the Christ. The message of Christmas was, and is this: "Immanuel, God with us." The message of Easter is this: that God continues to be with us through all the ups and downs, the painful vicissitudes, the mingled joys and sorrows, failures and successes, defeats and victories of our life in this often bewildering world of ours; and that He is still with us as we enter upon that mysterious journey, so dreaded by many, which lies through the "Valley of the Shadow." Thus the star which arose to shine over Bethlehem that cradle of a new humanity, was not quenched by the hands of time; it still shines in the sky of Christian faith and consciousness "more and more brightly unto the perfect day." This is the truth that Christ brought to the wondrous captive soul of man pining away in the suffocating atmosphere of its dark, dark prison, the truth that God is with us and in us, that He loves us, is profoundly interested in us, and means well by us intensely and continuously.

"Ye shall know the truth and the truth will set you free," said Jesus. Until Christ came the soul was like a caged eagle, madly and vainly beating its wings against the unyielding bars, or now drooping dejectedly in its galling, hopeless confinement. It was a prince reduced to beggary and rags, yet not wholly forgetful of his royal lineage. And the very thing that the soul hoped would set it free loaded it with fetters. Religion instead of being its sanctuary of peace, its temple of freedom, had become its dungeon, the charnel house full of dead hopes and terrorizing fears and black despair. Like some bewitched victim of sorcery the soul saw all things falsely; it saw God as a dread judge, itself as the condemned criminal without hope of mercy. It despaired or fell into indifference. In either case, the future was dark and full of foreboding, and not to be thought of more than was possible.

But ah, what a difference there was when Christ came. "He who is from above" addressing himself in a spirit of comradeship to publicans and sinners, the dregs of society, with the sweetest speech that ever fell upon hungry ears, and looking into their sin lined faces through the kindest eyes that ever saw and understood and sympathized with them. "Come unto Me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." He said to them. "Him that cometh unto me I will in nowise cast out." He spoke not of a judge who severely punishes the wrong doer; not of a wrathful Deity who demands some terrible sacrifice before His vengeance will spare us. He spoke of "Our Father" who loves all, who sends His rain and sunshine upon the evil as well as the good, and who himself provides for us the great sacrifice by which "the sins of the whole world" were to be borne away. He tells us we ought also "to love our enemies, to bless them that curse us, to do good to them that hate us, and to pray for them that despitefully use us and persecute us." Why? His answer is, that we may be "perfect even as our Father which is in Heaven is perfect."

Sinful as we are, we are not looked upon by Jesus as criminals in a court where some stranger we call God is our pitiless, angry Judge. No! never! We are not even looked upon as more or less rebellious subjects of a monarch called God. We are regarded by Jesus—the worst of us—as children of Our Heavenly Father, very imperfect, very sinful, very far off from being what we ought to be, but still children for all that, whom our Father loves and always will love, whose highest permanent good He seeks in a hundred ways unknown to us, and will always seek. His is the "love that will not let us go." Yes, we are all His children; that is the fundamental truth about you and me, about every son of man the wide world over. As Phillips Brooks once said: "Man is a son of God on whom the devil has laid his hand, not a child of the devil whom God is trying to steal." There is a blasphemy against God, which makes Him out to be little better than an Almighty Devil, intent on sweeping countless hordes of our race into hell with the broom of his wrath. But such was not our Master's teaching, who said He would not break the bruised reed, nor quench the smoking flax, nor is it the teaching of the inspired apostles to whom "God is love," "God is Light," "The Father in whom there is no darkness at all."

There is also a blasphemy against humanity, which degrades our race to a level lower than the beast by making us the children of the evil one. Against these twin blasphemies the entire course of Christ's life and teaching was a steadfast protest. Was Christ correct in thus representing God as our Father, and ourselves as His children? St. John answers that question: "The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth come by Jesus Christ."

When the full significance of Easter is brought home to the average indifferent human the slumbering soul wakes up to the fact of its divine birthright, and its owner realizes he is a child of God. The Christian life is the progressive realization of the privileges, the duties, the hopes involved in this relationship to an all loving Father. The really awakened soul, is a soul set free "with the liberty wherewith Christ makes us free." Free from false and fear filling ideas of God. Free from the desire to backbite and scandalize, free from envy, hate, malice and all uncharitableness. The thought of God is now fraught with peace and joy and true happiness. Now we realize that "God is Love" and "Light" and all that is kind and true and beautiful. He is free from fear according to the measure in which he gives entrance into his consciousness of "the love that God hath to us" as St. John says. "Herein is our love made perfect that we may have boldness in the day of judgment." There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear. He that feareth is not made perfect in love." But there are other sources of fear than the judgment day from which a man is freed when he begins in earnest to live his days out based on the growing realization of God's fatherhood and his sonship. Life brings the Christian as well as others trials and tribulations, sorrow, material loss, disappointment, defeat; a hundred ills may lurk in tomorrow or the day after, ready to spring out upon him. What then? It is his to realize in these times of storm and stress the Easter proclamation of God's continuing presence with His children. "Thou Lord art a very present help in trouble." St. Paul's days were spent in perilous times and long was the list of calamities that befell him, but through them all he tells us he was "never dismayed." "We know," he says in another place, "that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to purpose." Purpose? Yes; God's purpose for you and for everyone of us. None can hinder that purpose, none but yourself or myself. That was why the grave opened at Easter, and the Master left it. Because there is a divine purpose in human life which is never completed on earth, hence we "cannot be holden of death." We must make our way through the grave to the world of eternal life in order that God may bring to pass all that He has decreed concerning us. The awakened soul lives therefore in the strength-imparting consciousness that its life is held in the firm grasp of a Divine design which all the omnipotence, all the omniscience, and all the infinite love of God are pledged to carry out.

As we advance in this experience of life thus "perfected in the love which casteth out fear," we become able to appreciate and rejoice in that other deep saying of the Master, "If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." Anxiety is eliminated; "the peace of God which passeth all understanding" becomes the armed sentinel at the door of the mind to keep our thoughts safeguarded from the invasion of things foreign to the heart that has found its center of rest in the love and the will and the pledged word of God. The great lesson of Eastertide makes it unceasingly possible to live up to His exhortation. "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." Faith, religion becomes a more direct or intimate experience of one's own spiritual consciousness. Christ in us is our source of strength for the duties and the varied fortunes of the day as they come and go. We are thus made able to "cast our care upon God, knowing that He careth for us," to cease from being anxious, our restless misgivings dissipated by the steadying assurance that our "Heavenly Father knoweth" and will see us safely through the stormiest days that may ever befall us.

Have we any signs by which we can judge whether we are God's children, any proof of the Spirit of Christ in us, in you, in myself? Doubtless many who will read this Easter sermon have lost faith in the church and its teachings, and are too honest to pretend to believe. Well, in spite of diminishing faith, and a growing indifference to things spiritual they are God's children. One proof has already been referred to, the fact that we all owe our creation to God. Here are a few other proofs, not all because I have only space for some. As a rule you expect to find and do find, in a child some trace or traces of his parentage; the color of his hair, eyes, complexion, or the general features of the face or build of the body, and also some resemblances of mind, disposition and so forth. Well let us apply the same rule to ourselves. "God is Love." Haven't you some resemblance to His in this respect? Deep down, carefully tucked away in one special corner of your heart haven't you a bit of love, probably a very big bit for someone, for father or mother, brother or sister or friend? Of course you have, and no doubt before the world got hold of you, when you were a boy or girl, innocent of evil, you had a heart full of love for those around you, even for the horses and dogs, the cats and birds. Where did that love come from? You didn't make it and certainly the powers of evil didn't. It was put into your receptive young heart by the Heavenly Father, who is love, and though wordly and corrupting influences may have done their work of attrition and made that tender and sympathetic organ a mere piece of mechanism, sluggishly driving the unholy streams of improvidence, envy, malice, sloth and extravagance, through a body now grossly material, nevertheless just a wee bit of the old sweetness clings tenaciously to the cog wheels of selfishness, and the tiny spark that keeps the worn, creaking machinery of life in motion is ready to burst forth into a mighty flame, resurrecting the old and noble impulses inherited from the Father, if you will but let the genial zephyrs of Easter fan its slumbering embers. Then again God is good. You may not profess to be good, but you respect genuine goodness when you see it. Whatever of goodness you may possess, God gave it to you. You inherited love and the desire and respect for goodness from your heavenly Father as surely as a boy inherits say a broad back or a square jaw from his earthly father. You also respect and value truth. You don't trust and you don't admire a person who is given to lying. If you sometimes are guilty of lying yourself, you would be ashamed and angry to be proven a liar. Now God is the God of all truth. So again in this respect you bear a resemblance to the Heavenly Father. You have a conscience, everybody has until they succeed in stilling it, and therefore you know the difference between right and wrong. When you do right, conscience is quiet, when you do wrong conscience is up in arms against you, and you feel pretty miserable, unless you have succeeded in killing conscience. I can very clearly see why we have a conscience. Conscience is God's voice in man's soul, approving us when we do the right thing and reproaching us when we do wrong. Even non-professing Christians have in themselves plenty of evidences that they come from God, plenty of resemblances to the Father who is Love, Goodness, Truth and Righteousness.

Wake up then this Eastertide to the splendid fact that you are a child of God, still loved by your Father, still sought after by Him that He might give you freely the great gifts of pardon, peace, joy, hope, purity, and finally heaven! Don't any longer be content to be a sulking or an unfeeling child who remains away, far away from your true home. Say like the Prodigal Son in the Gospel, "I will arise and go unto my Father," and not only say it but do it. Then you will be on the upward way indeed the shining way that leads by and by to the "excellent glory" of the soul's homeland above. Meanwhile you will enter here and now upon the peace of God which is a sure balm for all the wounds we meet with in the grim battles of mortal life.

Easter looks beyond this life; across the grave it looks into the eternal world. It says man does not end in the grave, he inherits eternity. Ought we not, if we would be wise, to adjust life on earth to that fact? If we labor, as we must, for the bread that perisheth shall we not also labor (by prayer and obedience to God's will, as it is made known to us) for the blessings that endure? As man is an eternal being, it is the maddest of all follies that he strive to count his chief or only riches in gold or lands, or anything else, things that after a few years he must leave behind him forever. It is what you can take with you into the world beyond that counts. Millions dragged to the rim of the grave, won't even buy you a camp stool in Heaven. The amount of faith, goodness, kindness, truth, love, purity that you and I have are the riches which are ours here and hereafter, now and always. Of these none, nor death, nor any other happening can rob. In other words not what we have about us, but what we have in us, what we are, counts when the little day of earth is over. Many a man has the secret of earthly success who fails lamentably in the vastly more important issue. Everything he touches turns into gold, but he himself is dross. He has made a success of everything except himself. He has not prayed, he has not sought to know or to do the will of God, he has done nothing to help men to a higher plane of living or thinking, he has been self centered and selfish. In the revealing light of eternity such a man is seen to have made a tragic failure of life. Aim higher this Eastertide, my brothers and sisters. "He builds too low who builds beneath the sky." Don't let yourselves be cheated of the riches of Eternity by the delusive riches of a world which we must all leave in a very few years. He is a poor man indeed who when he "shuffles off this mortal coil" has nothing to take with him into Eternity but a miserable, starved, neglected, naked soul.

Thus if looked at sanely this earthly life is our great opportunity for developing those qualities of love, goodness, purity and the like with which we all start out, and which if cultivated, will fit us for the larger, happier life of the hereafter. We start life here with some soul capital. One has ten talents, another five, some only one. That doesn't matter. What does matter is how we trade with our capital, how we employ our talent or talents. We come into the world with so much love, with so much goodness, with so much piety, with so much sympathy, and so forth. This is our soul capital. God says trade with it, increase it, don't bury it, don't lose it. The use or misuse of it will mean a great deal of joy or pain to us in the future. If in trouble who will help us? God will. Do we need strength? He will give it to us if we seek it of Him. "As thy day so shall thy strength be." Do we need advice? It is to be had freely of Him. "Thou wilt guide me with thy counsel." If we mean business, real soul business, God will be our partner and such a firm is bound to prosper. "Everyone that asketh receiveth" the needed help in this business of the soul. The only person that can hinder your blessing is yourself. You have the real enemy—yourself. The measure of God's ability to bless you with every necessary blessing is the measure of your willingness to be blessed, and of your capacity to hold the blessings. You can't make an unwilling horse drink, and you can't put a gallon of water into a pint pitcher. God is not limited in Himself, but He is limited in us. "Open your mouth wide and I will fill it." He says, and He means what He says, only remember when you open your mouth, broaden your intelligence also. We all know at least a few beautiful souls still in the flesh, men and women of a very tender graciousness of spirit and readiness and depth of sympathy, so kind, so gentle, so sweet in all their ways. They are the ones we would go to in our troubles, or send for in our sicknesses. Why are they so lovely? Because, just because they gave God plenty of room in their lives, and He has therefore been able to fill them with some of the fullness of His own beautiful loving, sympathetic gentle, sweet spirit. You feel that if there is no heaven for such saints and angels of goodness there ought to be, nay there must be and the Father is calling unto you through such lives. Easter shows us there is. My brothers, my sisters. "Come unto me, my child, walk with me day by day, and what I have done for these I will also do for you." Begin now to live in the strength and peace and joy of the love that lasteth. It is God's desire that we should possess His very own qualities of heart and character. "I am come," said our Lord, "That ye might have life and have it more abundantly;" and by this He meant that the abundant Eternal life of the Father was to be fully given to all and to any who in sincerity opened their hearts that He might fill them. "In this was manifest the love of God toward us, because that God sent His only begotten son into the world that we might live through Him."

Never was there a greater need for a spiritual awakening than now, when seas of blood are being shed to gratify the dynastic ambitions of divine right monarchs, drunk with autocratic power, foolishly conferred on them by their servile, caste-ridden, gold-laced, drum-and-trumpet, lick-spittle, gilt-and-brass worshiping subjects. To all of you who in the presence of a divine light that ever points onward and upward, prefer to sit in darkness, let these Easter thoughts sink deep into your hearts and minds and give you a broader vision of this life and of the brighter life beyond. Let there be a resurrection of those nobler qualities of love, truth, honesty, sincerity, charity, purity and virtue which lie dormant in the worst of us, and seldom find much expression in the best of us, for we live in a sordid, man-made environment that is not conducive to spiritual growth.

To aid you this Easter in the resurrection of your spiritual self and to help you keep your feet strongly planted on the highroad of immortality, let me beseech you, as you daily battle with the problems of life to bear these golden truths in mind. At the end of this brief earthly career, we shall not be asked how much pleasure we had in it, but how much service we gave in it; not how full it was of success, but how full it was of sacrifice. Not how happy we were but how helpful we were, not how ambition was gratified, but how love was served.

At 8 o'clock,

after clearing away breakfast and washing the dishes she puts the clothes to soak with Fels-Naptha Soap in cool or lukewarm water.

At 8.30

she starts to do the washing, after making the beds and getting the children off to school.

At 11.30,

the washing done and on the line, she starts to prepare the noon meal.

At 3 o'clock,

the clothes dry and sprinkled down, she irons a few of the plain pieces, so that tomorrow's work may be lightened.

At 4.30

she lies down for an hour's rest before dressing and preparing supper.

At 6.30

a happy family and a rested mother eat a wholesome, nicely prepared meal.

What Fels-Naptha Soap did for this woman it will do for every woman who has an average wash.

Why not buy Fels-Naptha to-day and do your housework and washing the easy, Fels-Naptha way.

HUP up onto my lap and snuggle close. These are hard times, times when one feels like drawing a little closer to one's neighbors for help and sympathy. This winter has been the most terrible I've ever experienced in this big city of New York, and I do want to beg and beseech all of you who live in the country (and my heart and my interests are largely with country people) to stay in the country no matter how hard conditions are, for if you go to the cities, you will only find things infinitely worse. One can hardly walk the sidewalks of New York without stumbling over the furniture of dispossessed families. Summary eviction proceedings against more than fifty thousand families were filed during the first six months of 1914. That is at the rate of two thousand families a week. If that rate held through the year it would mean one family out of every ten turned out on the street without home or protection. There are very many thrifty people in New York, but tens of thousands of these have fared as badly as the thriftless and shiftless, for with that credulity and stupidity which seems to enter so largely into the makeup of the average human, foolish people will put their pitiful savings into private banks, hole-in-the-wall affairs, which sooner or later, with a few exceptions seem determined to smash. No less than eighty thousand families in New York have had their savings wiped out by the failure of a number of east side banks, within this last few months. New York has the finest savings banks in the world, banks that nothing but an earthquake could bust, but eighty thousand of its poorest families insisted on ignoring these substantial institutions and placed their money with questionable concerns only to have it swept away. Scores of poor wretches who lost their little all have committed suicide, and the suffering and misery that has resulted from these failures staggers the imagination. The smashing of hole-in-the-wall banking institutions is a feature of city life, and the wretches who bring about these failures seldom if ever see the inside of a jail, while if the hungry victims of one of these rascals steal a loaf it is the iron bars for them on the double quick.

New York's attempt to handle the question of the unemployed has been utterly disgusting. Sleek, well-paid, overfed officials meet, talk, quarrel, plan and then adjourn to investigate. After they have investigated, they investigate some more. These investigations cover weeks and what is the result? Nothing or next to nothing. The bread lines and the soup kitchens work overtime, and so the weary month of anguish and suffering in which more than half a million of workless people are involved, drag along until spring comes, when nature and the warm sun remove the edge of suffering, and the question of the unemployed is dropped until winter comes round again. The well to do take a perfunctory and half-hearted interest in the unemployed in the winter, because their soft fingers are occasionally nipped by the icy blasts, and they are made to realize after a fashion that it must be kind of uncomfortable for the poor to be cold. Unfortunately the weather never punishes them with hunger and so the torture of a gnawing stomach suggests nothing to them during more agreeable weather of the agony others are enduring. And so when spring comes and the official body ceases to shiver, the whole question of the unemployed is dropped. I want to take off my hat to ex-President Roosevelt. He visited our municipal lodging house and saw poverty and misery that touched him deeply, so deeply that he took the leading part in a meeting in which the hat was passed round for the unemployed and to which he himself contributed ten thousand dollars. Commissioner of Charities, Katherine B. Davis recently said: "New York is a poor place. There is little money in sight for the city poor. They have begun to build an eighteen million dollar court house for the men, while some of my old women are wrapping newspapers round their legs in lieu of stockings. It is for that reason I want the New York women to get the vote, they may help me out."

Of course an eighteen million dollar court house will mean lots of work for a large number of men, but a revival in every line of industry would have to be brought about before half a million people could all find employment. On this island of Manhattan where half a million people don't know where the next meal is coming from, there is a very small region, the richest in the world, in which fifteen thousand persons have a total annual income of over a thousand million dollars. Well has it been said that New York is a city of millionaires and paupers. The world is full of violent contrasts. Every few days I scan my papers, I note the passing of some man whose name is utterly unknown to the masses of the people and yet whose fortune is as great as that of the Kaiser, whose hundred million dollars easily makes him the richest man in Germany. The other day one of the many Standard Oil magnates passed away. He is estimated to have left the comparatively moderate fortune of from $80,000,000 to $100,000,000. If you figure out a hundred million dollars at five per cent you will find this income averages $416,666 a month, $95,886 a week, $13,698 a day, $570 an hour and $9.50 a minute.

These figures give cause for sober thought, as do the statements of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., that his father has donated the prodigious sum of $250,000,000 for educational and charitable purposes. If Rockefeller had less to give, there would be less need of his gifts and less need for giving. The government has been investigating the Rockefeller and other philanthropic foundations. There would be no need for this investigation if the Standard Oil interests would take a hint from Henry Ford the automobile king. After ten months' operation of the profit-sharing plan, the Ford employes in Detroit have bought homes on a contract basis valued at five million dollars. On these homes they have paid sums aggregating one million two hundred thousand dollars. They have also insured their lives to the tune of three million dollars, and every man on an average has saved forty-eight dollars and seventy-six cents a month. That is equivalent to twelve dollars a week, and twelve dollars a week is more than the average worker earns.

There are nine thousand two hundred Ford employes receiving benefit from the profit-sharing plan. As a result of this generous treatment a great number of the Ford employes of foreign birth have become naturalized citizens. Habits, morals, health, mentality of all have greatly improved as a result of the higher standard of living that increased incomes have brought about. Bank deposits increased one hundred and thirty per cent. Homes owned eighty-seven per cent, life insurance eighty-six per cent. Henry Ford is doing unto others as he would have them do unto him. That is practical Christianity, that is bringing Christ into industry, that is socializing religion, bringing it out of the moth balls of the church edifice and putting it into the mill and the factory. No man has to be watched or driven in the Ford works. The only trouble there is to see that they do not do too much, and Ford isn't losing any money by the application of justice and real Christianity to business. No man ever does and no man ever will. Now don't rush to the cities with the idea that you will strike any Henry Ford factories. There are few men who have the heart, wisdom and good sense to follow in the fotosteps of this far-seeing man who is anxious to have his employes share in the wealth they create. If Standard Oil would imitate Ford there would be less poverty, less unrest and less towering fortunes to menace democratic institutions.

And there is another reason apart from unemployment why you should keep away from the cities. The loss of life in industrial pursuits is much greater than in agriculture. New York State has now an admirable workman's compensation law. The powers that be have at last recognized that the man who is injured at his work is entitled to proper compensation, and he should not have to fight an uphill fight with some gigantic corporation, pitting his pitiful pennies against their all-powerful millions. Hitherto an injured workman could hope for little except lots of litigation and a big lawyer's bill.

But all this has been done away with in New York State. Under the present law the employer pays a certain sum yearly in proportion to the number of men employed. The funds thus raised are administered by the government for the benefit of the injured. There is no one to cheat the workman and no one desires to cheat him. Here again we have Christian ideals applied to business. In the first twenty-three days of the operation of the new law, forty-eight men were killed outright and from eight hundred to a thousand a day were injured. Eleven thousand injured in about half a month in one state! In the building of the New York Aqueduct by the way 283 men lost their lives and 8,000 were injured. These are the victims of industry.

Every worthy man desires a home of his own. This ambition is usually realized in the country but seldom in the cities. In New York in 1900 only one in every twenty-five owned his home, and ten years later in 1910 only one in thirty-five. Stay where you can be an owner and not a renter.

Work in the cities is scarce, or rather not to be had. When it is to be had it is too often dangerous. Stay in the country and be a producer instead of a city consumer. Millions of acres of land have been fenced off and held for speculative purposes. There are 20,647,000 acres of land in the United States owned by 29 foreign landlords and foreign syndicates. One man in London owns 700,000 acres of American land. Try and get your state legislators to see that this land is placed under cultivation. Try and get some of it for yourself. You may not grow rich but with care and hard work you may become independent and independence is far more to be desired than riches. In a vast country like this, where there is so much to be done, there should be work for everybody and everybody should be at work.

The labor commissioner of Pennsylvania estimates the annual cost from unemployment in the Keystone State alone at $250,000,000 a year. Using these figures as a basis for computing the loss caused by national unemployment it is estimated that the United States loses three billion dollars a year (twice the amount of the national debt) by not keeping its workers employed. It is one of the difficult problems that must, and in time will be solved.

All can be had free as premiums: the Book of Poems or the Story Book in ribbed silk stiff covers, either one for a club of four subscriptions; the Song Book or the Story Book in handsome paper covers for a club of only two subscriptions. See full particulars at the end of this department. These three books are a library of endless joy and merriment, the best medicine to drive away the blues.

Now for the letters.

LYONS, MO.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:

I have been a reader of COMFORT for years, and I would like a little advice from you, as I am an orphan girl of nineteen years. I am the youngest of five children. I want to know if there is any harm for a girl to stand at the gate and talk to a boy after he has seen her home from church at night? The gate is only a few steps from the door. Do you think that it is doing wrong to stand five or ten minutes. I would like your advice on that as I have no mother to ask for advice. Now Uncle don't you scold me for my poor writing and spelling for I never had any chance. I never went more than sixteen months to school. I hope Billy the Goat won't eat this letter for I believe that you will give good advice that may help some other girls as well as myself. I will bring my letter to a close, by wishing you all that is good and may the good Lord bless you in your work.

From your friend, MOLLIE.

P. S. Please do not give anyone my name or address.

Mollie, as long as there are young heads and old heads in this world, mothers and fathers and daughters, experience and inexperience, there will be more or less friction. How many times in my youthful days do I remember the fights I had, and the heartaches I had, over the gripping iron of parental authority. Many a girl has said to me when we have been wandering under the stars: "Mother didn't want me to come out tonight. She makes me tired. She's always fussing if I want to go out with anybody." Then of course I replied as all other men reply under such circumstances: "Don't take any notice, all mothers are like that. You bet mother had a good time when she was young and why shouldn't you?" Then the girl who promised faithfully to be home at nine o'clock, guesses she won't get home until ten, and when ten comes the fellow has persuaded her to make it eleven, while the anxious mother worried to death, sits at home waiting for every distant sound to herald the approach of the headstrong daughter. Well may parents worry. They have every reason to worry. Once upon a time there was too much repression. Then parents loosened up the strings and the young folks had liberty. Now most parents don't give a darn what the young folks do and we have license. You have doubtless seen a family move. You've seen the house piled with furniture just as it is thrown off the wagon, everything topsy turvy, and nothing in its proper place. Now that's exactly the condition of society today. Order is the great law of the universe. Order is of God, chaos and disorder of the devil. We are living in chaotic, therefore devilish times. When we were in the dark we stood still because we knew if we moved we would be liable to break our necks. Today we have a little light, and the novelty of it has caused the empty headed to run wild. We haven't however, enough light or enough sense to see where we are going, and being naturally careless and naturally stupid, we are floundering into all sorts of holes and pitfalls. In such a condition as society is in today, where there is no system, and life at the best is but a sordid chase for dollars, and the struggle for existence is so keen that ideals and virtue, chastity and righteousness are daily trampled underfoot in the mad race for the things we must have in order to live, there is little time for education, less for moral training and no time at all for character building. The most precious things in all the world are a woman's virtue, purity, chastity and honor, and these have also become commercialized and are probably the most marketable of all products. Everything that can be commercialized has been commercialized, even the Holy Spirit itself has not escaped. Think yourself mighty lucky then you young girly geese when there is somebody who cares enough for you to hold the reins tight. Not one in twenty of you girls has been reared properly. At the best you've only been dragged up, not brought up. The education of a child should begin several generations back. All you girls get at the best, is a little church, a little school, and a whole heap of scolding. Scolding always rubs the fur of our feelings the wrong way, and that's what most parents hand out, as few know how to reason, guide and instruct. Soon we shall bring order out of chaos, and the real age of chivalry will burst upon us in all its glory. The libertine and the debaucher will pass out of existence, for chastity will no longer be a marketable commodity and sex knowledge and a higher standard of immorality wil lhave directed passion into its legitimate channels. Until that day comes the right kind of a father may well feel that even a high gate a few steps from the family door, is at times insufficient to protect his daghter. In Mollie's case I'm inclined to think the father knows things about this particular young man that Mollie doesn't know or won't listen to. Mollie has only told us her side. If we heard the father's side it would probably throw an entirely different light upon the subject. Of course father may be, as fathers often are, merely grouchy and boorish, loving to boss merely for the sake of bossing. Probably too he thinks if Mollie married he would have to engage a salaried housekeeper, and many a man would rather keep his daughter in slavery all her life than do that. The world is full of selfishness and full of tight wads and petty tyrants, and until we get more evidence Mollie, we had better suspend judgment. Meanwhile for the sake of peace and quietness cut out the confab at the gate. Mollie says she never had a chance. I could write a million sermons on that text. It should be the first duty of a nation to see that everyone gets a chance, but society is built today along lines that give all the chances to a few and deprive the majority of human beings of any possible hope of being more than mere drudges from the cradle to the grave. This condition will be altered just as soon as people begin to think, but most of them would rather drink than think, and though they would gladly die to protect this country from foreign enemies, they lie down and let their enemies at home walk all over them, in fact they go to the ballot box and authorize and elect people to walk all over them. Then they let off firecrackers on the fourth of July so as to let the world know they are free, while all the thinking world knows only too well they are still slaves. Once more can you beat it?

HANNA, IA.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:

Here comes a girl from old Louisiana that wants to join your happy band. I have blonde hair, gray eyes, fair complexion and weigh one hundred and thirty pounds, and am sixteen years of age. I am going to school and am in the seventh grade. We have a large country school. It contains sixty-three scholars. I like all my books accept geography.

I have seven sisters and two brothers and as you know a good old mother. My father died when I was an infant and my mother married again. So you see Uncle we have lots of trouble. I like to read and study everything connected with home life. Guess I'll close before the goat gets this. Hoping to hear from the cousins, Your loving niece,

EDNA WREN.

Edna you say you like all your books "accept" geography. So many people use the word "accept" for "except," and "except" for "accept." When the old folks do this we can excuse them for education was a scarce commodity fifty years ago. There is however, no excuse for a girl of sixteen in a large country school falling into such errors of speech. Hundreds of good, kind souls, have at the end of beautiful letters of love and sympathy concluded their letters to me thus: "Please except my love and best wishes." They meant to be complimentary but using the wrong word at the conclusion of their letter they became uncomplimentary. Of course I understood what the dear souls meant and it is only because I want to be of assistance to you young folks that I lay bare this little error of your elders. Except, means to omit, to leave out, to exclude, to object to. So what my mature correspondents actually said was: "Please omit, leave out and exclude my love and best wishes." Accept means to take, to receive with approbation, to agree to or acquiesce in. Note, one is the antithesis, the very opposite, of the other. Now Edna, you wanted to tell us that you did not like geography, but by using "accept" for "except" you made it appear that you did like it. The misuse of some words entirely alters person's meaning. You remember the old story of the Frenchman who fell in the river. He wanted somebody to pull him out and instead of saying: "I shall be drowned nobody will save me," he shouted: "I will be drowned, nobody shall save me." Of course after shouting in that way everyone concluded that he was trying to commit suicide, and they let him drown. Now I'm awfully sorry to hear you say that you do not like geography. A mind that lacks the geographic vision, the mind that cannot at all times glimpse this revolving sphere and note the outlines of its continents, the boundaries of the various countries, the course of its great rivers, the location of its cities, the wash of its mighty oceans, the vast stretches of its plains and mountains, is a mind that is swathed in the bandages of darkness. For ordinary purposes it is not necessary in order to comprehend what is going on in this world to have an exact knowledge of the location of all the capes, bays, rivers, cities, etc. All one needs is a general knowledge, just an outline of the continents, countries, seas and oceans. I scarcely ever find it necessary to refer to an atlas as I have the bump of locality very strongly developed. I carry a picture of the round earth and all that dwell therein ever in my mind. Geographic ignorance is appalling. Frequently in my travels through this country I have found people who thought they could step from California into Florida, and that Michigan and Tennessee were adjoining states. Geography may seem an unimportant subject to most of you, but nobody can get a grasp of world affairs until they have a good working knowledge of geography. Lots of fun is extracted from spelling bees, but we could get a heap sight more fun out of geography bees. Put up a huge black map of the Untied States and ask your minister, if he lives in the middle west, to put his finger on Vermont, and if he does not stick it through New Jersey I'll eat my hat. Ask the New Jersey minister to put his finger on Arkansas, and if he does not put his thumb in Arizona I'll swallow a feather duster. When educated people do that, what hope is there for people who have but little schooling and wouldn't know a map of the United States from that of China or an atlas from a hole in the ground. They are having night schools in Kentucky and other states. They call them moonlight schools, and I do hope in these classes for adults they will try and stamp a dim outline of the world on the brains of the scholars. One of my greatest enjoyments is to take a mental flight a few thousand miles above the earth and watch this old globe of ours flitting through space and note each section of it as it turns over from the darkness of night to receive the light of day. You would think it awfully absurd wouldn't you? If I told you to put your finger on your nose and instead you put it on your foot. You of course simply can't help knowing the geography of the body for there is so little to learn, and the map is eternally about you, but suppose I put a blank map in front of you and find that you who are living in Maryland fancy that you are located thirty miles north of San Francisco (and many of you would do it as sure as God made little apples) wouldn't you feel like running away and hiding your heads? There is not a town in a war zone map as big as a pea that I cannot push a pin through in five seconds, and if you bandage my eyes and put a map of the U. S. before me I will put my finger within an inch of any state you mention. Try this, it is capital fun. Beats bridge whist. And this brings me to another point. I was going to write a book about the war, just a hundred page pamphlet that would give you an accurate idea of the causes back of this terrifice struggle. I accumulated a whole library of war books and tabulated over two thousand articles from newspapers and magazines. Then I wrote COMFORT'S publisher, and asked him what he thought about the war book idea. He discouraged it entirely and no wonder. For months COMFORT has been advertising a map of the war zone. It was something you all needed and something every home should have had and it was obtainable without any financial cost to you. Imagine my surprise to find that only fifty people out of six millions had taken sufficient interest in this titanic struggle (a struggle that may yet engulf us and every nation on the earth) to obtain a map of the war zone, and without a map one can get no idea, nor have the slightest comprehension of what is going on, or what the struggle means. To talk of Germany and Belgium without being able to glimpse their location suggests nothing definite to the imagination and leaves a person groping in the bad black night of darkness and ignorance. Get out your maps and find where you live. Florida and Alaska are not adjoining states or territories. The Mississippi river isn't flowing through Palestine. Berlin isn't in the middle of China nor Jerusalem in the Gulf of Mexico, but by the eternal that's where they'd all be if some of you were asked to point them out on the map. No wonder the republicans and democratic politicians pull the wool over the eyes of most of the people. How can you expect a nation to know what it wants when three quarters of it at least don't know where it is "at."

TURPENTINE, TEXAS.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:

I will write to COMFORT for advice for a girl nineteen years old, five feet six inches tall. I have dark hair, blue eyes, fair complexion and am in love with three nice young men. One of these is a farmer, one a sawmill fellow and one that is real fond of squirrels and hunts them most of the time instead of working. I really admire all three and ask advice as to which one I should choose for my steady beau. Now I will wait patiently for your answer.

Your loving niece, CLARA.

Clara, you've set me a very knotty proposition. Some people will think you are just fooling, perhaps you are, but whether you are or not matters little as hundreds of girls find themselves in very much the same predicament, unable to make a choice from among their various admirers—and

Julia's Fireless Brooder

By Josephine Page Wright

Copyright, 1915, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher, Inc.

JULIA tacked the soft flannel onto the square frame she had just made and looked at the result proudly. It was to be the cover of a fireless brooder which she was making out of a small packing box.

"I suppose," conceded Uncle Tom, "I suppose you know what you are trying to do."

"Now, Uncle Tom," protested Julia, "you aren't going to discourage me, too. Perhaps you don't believe that I can raise baby chicks in this without an old hen or a spark of artificial heat."

"Has it been done?" he asked.

"Of course it has been done," she laughed. "Why the farm journals have been full of it for months. Don't you read them?"

"Not as much as I ought to," he acknowledged. "I sort of leave that to my partner."

"To Robert Kennedy?" she scorned. "Then you make a very great mistake. Robert's mind is about as receptive as a soaked sponge. I wonder," she mused, "why a man as bright and as industrious as he is should be so slow to accept new ideas."

"Why his dad was just like that," explained Uncle Tom gravely. "You see Bob's dad owned all this place originally. And he worked like a black slave trying to make it pay. But it never did until I bought my share and made him do things different. Even so, I had to fight for every change we made. Bob's more reasonable, of course, but he sure is some like his dad—some like his dad."

Julia was now at work on the pad which was to fit into the flannel-hover. Her needle flew in and out with a skill that her tack-hammer had lacked. Her tongue was busy explaining to her uncle the principle of the machine she was building. Her thoughts were busy with the results of her enterprise. She was counting her chickens not before they were hatched but before they were raised.

"So that little sofa-pillow you are making is their real mother," chuckled Uncle Tom. "Well it is a whole lot more feminine looking than a kerosene lamp."

"And I don't take much stock in a kerosene-oil brooder when it comes to that," commented Robert, appearing suddenly. "Nature and a faithful old fowl have all the modern arts and sciences beaten a mile."

"You do not take any stock in this?" challenged Julia, waving the little pad toward him.

Now if he had been wise enough to scowl and to defy her with a long, tedious argument she could have forgiven him. But he did nothing so wise as that. Instead he looked at her with sudden amusement and, when she resented it with swift lowering of her eyes, he laughed.

Julia had liked Bob from the first day she came as an orphan to live with her Uncle Tom. Perhaps it was because she liked him so much that she was able to detect his menacing weakness. She wanted him to keep abreast of the times, she wanted him to succeed in a big way. She wanted him to let her help him in safe and practical experiments in new methods. It was the big motive behind a smaller one that made her build her fireless brooder. And now Bob had laughed at her. She wondered if she ever could forgive him.

"When you are ready to experiment with that thing," Robert was saying, "I'll let you have some chicks from my prize pen. I've an incubator due Monday morning."

But the goddess was not to be appeased by this tardy peace offering. "Thank you, Bob," she said coldly, "but I think I shall get my chicks at the Maynard ranch. I was looking at their breeding pens the other day. His hens are in prime condition. He is very scientific in his methods of feeding."

"But," protested Robert, "Maynard hasn't had better than a fifty per cent hatch this season. Why even his best setters have been disappointing him."

Nevertheless Julia rode over to the Maynard ranch early the next morning and returned with a shoe box containing fifty day-old chicks. One by one they were tucked into the brooder and covered with the pretty pad. Julia had paid five dollars for them and she entered the amount with great gusto in the little account book that was to prove to Robert the economics of her theories.

Just beneath this entry was another twenty-five cents for chickfeed. On a bit of scratch paper she had figured her profits. She knew of course she could not hope to raise all fifty but certainly she could conservatively count on thirty. Her feed for six weeks would average twenty-five cents a week. At the end of that time she could sell her thirty chickens for seventy-five cents apiece. Probably she would get more but Julia believed in being conservative.

For two days her hopes soared high. She had lost but one chick and that was a cripple she had been too tender-hearted to kill outright. The chicks huddled in one corner of the box and seemed healthy and content. On the third day they began to forage in the little graveled runway she had fixed for them just outside the brooder. They ate greedily, filling their crops to the delight of their young mistress.

To be sure they hadn't sense enough to return to their house after they had eaten their fill, and Julia had to take them one by one and poke them in. But that was the merest incident. Julia assured herself that she rather enjoyed it than otherwise. She took excellent care, however, that Uncle Tom or Robert should not see her do it. Men are very stupid about matters like that.

Much to her surprise Uncle Tom and Robert took a serious interest in the experiment. They were both present when she lifted the hover of the brooder on the morning of the fourth day. The chicks were huddled closer than she had ever noticed to have seen them. Four were on the floor of the box quite dead.

She looked quickly into the faces of the men to see if she could detect either amusement or pity. She read curiosity, nothing more.

"Too cold," commented Uncle Tom briefly.

"Too hot," contradicted Bob. "Sweated."

"It seems to me," ventured Julia timidly, "simply the survival of the fittest."

"They were pretty good stock," flung back Bob, "An old hen would have pulled them all through."

Julia took out the poor little corpses sorrowfully. They looked exactly as though they had been flattened by a rolling pin. She took them out to a parcel of ground in the garden and buried them.

She grew to dread the lifting of that hover every morning. Seldom less than five, and sometimes more little cold bodies claimed her attention. Before the week was out she had far less than thirty left and she had to alter her first prophesies of profit. And then with twenty apparently healthy two-week-old chicks she faced her hopes again and began to crow ever so gently over Robert.

"With all my bad luck I shall still have a handsome profit," she boasted and Bob nodded good-naturedly.

The fluff balls were developing into scrawny but, to Julia, delightfully charming chickens. They still huddled but with less danger to one another for they were feathering out at last. Then came the interesting period when she began to speculate on the number of roosters. She seemed to be at last on the winning side of her experiment.

And then came the never-to-be-forgotten night when she sat at the piano playing for Uncle Tom and remembered a fatal omission of duty.

"Oh," she gasped, "I forgot to open the brooder door. I was cleaning it today and I shut them out."

Bob followed her into the dark chicken-yard. Her chicks had gone to bed, pressing to the closed door of the brooder. The stronger were upon the weaker. It needed no lantern to reveal to Julia the tragedy of broken necks. Six of her biggest, most promising chicks were dead.

If she had beaten the little lives out with her own hands she could have felt no guiltier. She sat beside the stack of huddled chickens, disentangling the living from the dead and crying frankly at intervals into the handkerchief which Bob provided.

"Go into the house, dear," urged Robert tenderly. "I'm going to take these lively fellows and put them in with my own month olders. I—I don't want you bothered."

Very meekly she obeyed him, finding refuge with her Uncle Tom.

"It isn't just the loss of the chickens," she sobbed on the shoulder of the older man. "But I feel that I have lost my opportunity to help Bob. Now he will never have faith in new methods and scientific theories. He will always remember this and nothing I can say will have weight with him."

"Why," soothed Uncle Tom," it isn't as bad as that. Besides I have something to say on the subject myself. Just you trust me to take the impudence out of that young rascal."

"I have smashed that infernal thing to kindling," stormed Robert as he entered the house a half hour later. It has been a burden and an anxiety to Julia ever since she started to enthuse."

Julia's lip began to quiver and he hastened to add, "Now, Julia, I didn't destroy it because it is an innovation but because it annoyed you. I am not altogether unreasonable about trying new things. I was genuinely interested in this experiment and if it had worked out I should have been tempted to try it out myself."

"Won't you make any allowances for Julia's lack of experience?" demanded Uncle Tom.

"Why, I don't know," debated the other. "It has always seemed to me that a thing should win on its own merits. Experience is, of course, everything I'll admit."

"Then more than likely you admit what isn't true. Experience is something—a big something but it isn't everything. Experiment is something too,—a big something. I was afraid Julia might lose out the first time with her fireless-brooder and so I made one myself and started it about the time she did, with fifty chicks."

"And how did it turn out?" the young people hurled at him.

"Well tomorrow I will show you forty of the finest four-week-old birds on the farm."

Julia threw him a look of gratitude.

"Why, Uncle Tom, that interests me tremendously," surrendered Bob.

Uncle Tom took his book and went to his own room.

Julia sat staring into the fire. It had turned out for the best after all. Bob would have his lesson. And perhaps she had needed one too.

"Julia," said Bob interrupting her reverie, "will you marry me?"

"I think," smiled Julia, "that perhaps we do need one another."

"Is that," demanded Bob, "why you are willing to marry me?"

"Simpleton," she laughed, "of course not. Let me tell you a secret. I am not the least bit practical. Besides I love you."

THE COSSACKS

By C. L. Chapman

Copyright, 1915, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher, Inc.

LONG, long ago, there came into the southwestern part of Russia, a tribe of men who called themselves "Kossaki," from the Tartar word meaning "free men" or "free fighters." They lived up to their name and in that border country they fought fearlessly and protected many Russian women and children from becoming slaves to the Turks.

The czar called them his soldiers and they called him "the little father," and he granted to them certain lands free of taxation for which in turn they must serve Russia. So, whenever the czar needs military aid the "Cossacks" as they are now called, fight for the cause of their "little father."

The training of the Cossack boy begins from the cradle.

The mother sings her baby to sleep with Cossack war songs.

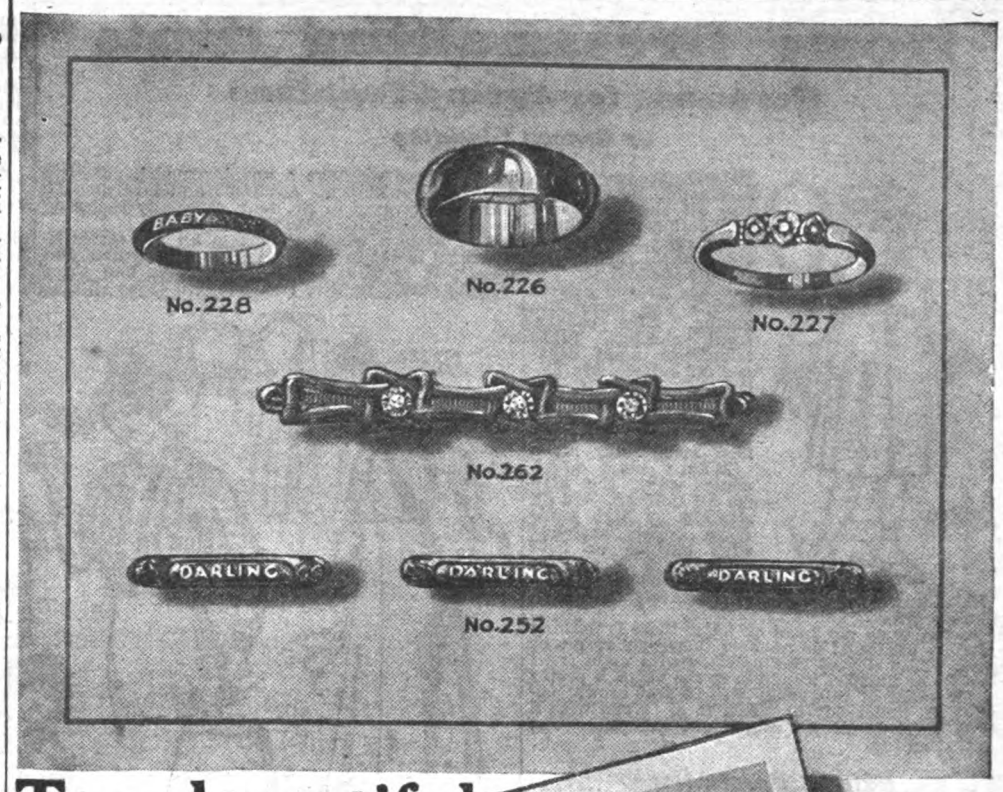
As soon as the boy is three years old he is taught to sit astride a horse and at five years old he rides out upon the street and plays games with his friends. He learns to mount and dismount his horse when it is galloping. Sometimes he picks up something from the ground when he is riding fast preparing him for the time when he can pick up a wounded comrade upon the battlefield without dismounting from his horse.

When he is eighteen years old he enters a preparatory class.

He must provide his own horse, uniform and military equipment, the government supplying him with the arms, and for three years he enters upon a course of military training. Then he enters active service and must serve until he is fifty-five years old.

The Cossack is armed with a curved sword and a rifle is slung across his shoulders; he wears no spurs upon his boots but he carries a heavy whip instead. He sits high upon his saddle and from long years of training he has become an expert horsemen and is so trained that he can ride for hours without resting.

They say that the Cossacks were responsible for the defeat of Napoleon in Russia and Napoleon himself said in praise of them that they "were perfect masters of partizan warfare, furious in attack and impossible to reach," and he also said that he did not remember of having made a prisoner of a single one of them.



So today when Russia is engaged in warfare these Cossacks must obey the call to arms as described in this old war poem:

Up, Cossacks, and ride away!
The Czar is calling his men today.
Ho! now for a ride on the border side,
And gallop away on war's wild tide.
Ho! for the dash, and ho! for the clash,
And ho! for the joy of battle's crash.
Up, Cossacks, and ride away!
To war, and fight, and bold man's play.

Up, Cossacks, and ride away!
With shout, and yell, and lust to slay.
Out with your saber, call to your neighbor,
And ride away to war's sweet labor.
There are cities to loot and pillage to boot;
To rifle and saber, slash and shoot.
Up, Cossacks, and ride away!
To war, and fight, and bold man's play.
Up, Cossacks, and ride away!
The Czar is calling his men today.

ONCE PART OF GREAT SEA.—Scientists connected with the United States geological survey have discovered a bed of marine fossils in the bluffs along the Heart river, near Mandan, N. Dak. This bed is regarded as the latest evidence of marine fauna in that section and is considered as proof that that region once formed a part of the bed of a great sea.

A TWO HUNDRED MILLION DOLLAR WASTE.—In testifying before the New York state officials concerning the butter and egg business of that state the attorney for the New York Central railroad placed the value of the eggs produced annually in this country at $500,000,000. He also estimated that between producer and consumer, there is an annual waste of $200,000,000. One fourth of this loss, he said, is due to needless breakage in transit and the remainder to deterioration resulting from poor handling.

Home Dressmaking Hints

Forecasts for Spring Fashions

By Geneva Gladding

ONE-PIECE frocks are increasing in popularity, all the time, and considering their utility and service, their smart appearance, this is not to be wondered at.

Coats in the newest models are loose and flaring. High collars, front closings, braid trimmings and ornamental buttons are distinguishing features of the new fashions.

Short coats will be worn, closed and trimmed in military style.

Many new shirt-waists show the high neck finish, with straight or high turn-down collar, fastened with buttons or held down with a bow of narrow ribbon.

Shirt-waists are being shown with raglan sleeves, yoke effects and tucks or gathers.

To renew an old gown or waist there is nothing quite so charming as an over blouse of velvet or satin. These blouses may be made with plain front closing, or finished to slip over the head. A pretty development of this fancy was in seal brown velvet, with underbody of cream lace. Worn with a gored skirt of brown broadcloth the effect was very stunning.

Pattern Descriptions

ALL PATTERNS 10c. EACH
Unless Other Price Is Stated

1228—Girls' Coat with or without Belt. The comfortable raglan sleeve and deep yoke are new style features. The sleeve may be finished without the cuff, and the fullness of the skirt portions may be confined by a belt, that is furnished in the pattern. Velvet, serge, cheviot, corduroy, mixed suiting or broadcloth are splendid for this model likewise poplin, faille, taffeta or linen.

Cut in four sizes; two, four, six and eight years. It requires two and three eighths yards of 44-inch material for a four-year size.

1224-1222—A Smart and becoming gown, with new style Features. The waist is cut with jaunty bolero fronts, and a neat high collar, that leaves the throat free in front. This design is lovely for the pretty new linen and cotton materials of the season, and will look well in poplin, taffeta or faille silk.

Cut in six sizes; 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. The skirt in six sizes; 22, 24, 26, 28, 30 and 32 inches waist measure. To make the entire dress it will require nine and three eighths yards of 27-inch material for a medium size. These are two separate patterns, 10c for each pattern.

1186—A New Shirt-waist Model. This attractive model portrays some new style features. The pattern is good for figured, or plaid silk or woolen, for velvet, crepe, cashmere, serge, linen, linene, batiste or lawn.

Cut in six sizes; 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust measure, and requires two and one quarter yards of 44-inch material for a 36-inch size.

1226—Ladies' Waist with or without rolled collar, and with sleeve in either of two lengths. This model may be worn over a separate guimpe, if collar is omitted, or, for high neck a chemisette could be added. Georgette crepe, white satin or creep de chine, are all fashionable materials for this style. It is equally effective in voile, linen, madras, cashmere, flannel or ratine.

Cut in six sizes; 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires two and three quarters yards of 40-inch material for a 36-inch size.

1197—Costume for Misses and Small Women, with sleeve in either of two lengths. The model will look well in green serge, or in taffeta in any of the pretty new shades of this season. It would also be desirable for wash fabrics, such as linen, cotton crepe, poplin or gingham.

Cut in four sizes; 14, 16, 17 and 18 years. It requires six and three quarters yards of 40-inch material for a 16-year size.

1185—Ladies' Yoke Skirt in raised or normal waistline. Serge, cashmere, cheviot, broadcloth, novelty suiting, velvet or corduroy are good for this style. It is cut on new lines with a deep yoke to which the plaited portions are joined. The closing is at the side seam.

Cut in six sizes; 22, 24, 26, 28, 30 and 32 inches waist measure, and requires three and three quarters yards of 44-inch material for a 24-inch size.

9988—A Stylish Dress for the growing girl. Long-waisted effects are very popular for girls in their teens. The style here shown may be made with or without the tunic. Galatea, percale, gingham or chambrey, pique, linen, linene, lawn, silk or challie are all good materials for this style.

Cut in four sizes; eight, 10, 12 and 14 years. It requires three and one half yards of 40-inch material for an eight-year size.

1190—Ladies' or Misses' Skirt with panel front and hip yoke. Rivaling the tunic forms, one finds yoke and panel effects on the new skirt styles. A good skirt in this style could be made of serge or broadcloth, for general utility or business wear, and for wear with blouse or coat it makes an excellent model.

Cut in three sizes for misses; 14, 16 and 18 years, and in five sizes for ladies; 24, 26, 28, 30 and 32 inches waist measure. It requires three and three quarters yards of 44-inch material for a 24-inch size. For a 16-year size, it requires three yards of 44-inch material.

9716—Girls' Under Waist and Drawers. Cambric, muslin, lawn, nainsook, and canton or domet flannel are suitable for both waist and drawers, while jean will make a durable and strong waist.

Cut in five sizes; four, six, eight, 10 and 12 years. It requires three quarters yard of 36-inch material for the waist and one yard for the drawers for a six-year size.

9897—Girls' Dress. The model is cut with body and sleeves in one, and has shoulder and underarm seams. It is bloused over a lining that may be omitted, and the waist may be finished with smooth regulation outline. Percale, lawn, dimity voile, challie, tub silk, cashmere or linen are all appropriate for this style.

Cut in four sizes; six, eight, 10 and 12 years. It requires three and one half yards of 40-inch material for an eight-year size.

9948—Girls' Dress with long or shorter sleeve, and with high or low neck, having a body lining. This model has tuck fullness over the shoulders, and is made with body and sleeve in one. Lawn, dimity, voile, crepe, challie, batiste, silk or poplin may be used for this design, which is also good for soft woolens and other wash fabrics.

Cut in five sizes; six, eight, 10, 12 and 14 years. It requires four yards of 36-inch material for an eight-year size.

9882—Ladies' Apron. This simple easily made style, is good for gingham, chambrey, percale, lawn, denim, sateen and brilliantine. It affords ease to the wearer and protection for the dress beneath.

Cut in three sizes; small, medium and large. It requires three and one quarter yards of 36-inch material for a medium size.

1221—Set of Ladies' Over Waists, Vestee and Collar. This portrays a few of the latest expressions of pretty fashions. No. one shows an over waist with long "chemise" back, over which the sash ends of the fronts are tied. No. two shows a similar style, in vest or "over bodice" shape. In No. three we have a popular model, good for coat or dress finish. A unique and lovely collar form is portrayed in No. four, especially becoming to the woman with a slender long neck.

The pattern which comprises all the styles illustrated is cut in three sizes; small, medium and large. It requires for No. one, three and three eighths yards, for No. two, one and three eighths yard, for No. three, one yard, and for No. four, three eighths yard of 27-inch material for a medium size.

1215—Girls' Dress with Tunic and separate skirt attached to an underwaist, and with sleeve in either of two lengths. The blouse waist may be made without the tunic, and if plaited underskirt is not desired, the tunic could be lengthened at its lower edge and worn as a skirt.

Cut in four sizes; eight, 10, 12 and 14 years. It requires five yards of 44-inch material for a 14-year size.

1179—A New and Pretty Night Dress, with sleeve in either of two lengths, and neck edge in either of three outlines. This model is good for lawn, nainsook, dimity, crossbar muslin, crepe or silk. The gown may be made with a front closing for high neck style, which is very desirable for warmth, if made of flannelette or flannel.

Cut in three sizes; small, medium and large. It requires five and five-eighths yards of 36-inch material for a medium size.

1204—A Simple Apron Model. For easy development, practical features and convenience this model may be recommended. It is adjusted on the shoulders. The armscyes are deep and comfortable.

Cut in three sizes; small, medium and large. It requires three and three quarters yards of 36-inch material for a medium size.

8905—Child's Rompers with bloomer skirt portion. Galatea, gingham, chambrey, seersucker, linen or percale may be used for this design. The waist is cut with body and sleeve in one. The bloomers are cut circular and look very much like a skirt when worn. For girls this model is especially desirable.

Cut in four sizes; two, four, six and eight years. It requires two and one quarter yards of 36-inch material for the four-year size.

1232—Girls' Dress, with or without over blouse, and with sleeve in either of two lengths. The waist is cut with body and sleeve in one, and finished in Moyen age style is attached to a plaited skirt. The overblouse has deep arm scyes, and its fullness is held in place by a belt. The pattern is good for serge, cashmere, challie or albatros, charmeuse or taffeta, crepe, galatea, chambrey or lawn.

Cut in four sizes; six, eight, 10 and 12 years. It requires five yards of 36-inch material for an eight-year size.

9980—Girls' Dress with or without bloomers, and with long or short sleeves. The closing is effected in front with eyelet lacing, but may be finished at the center back, if preferred. The bloomers may be of the same material as the dress, or of sateen, galatea or cambric. The design is good for all wash fabrics, and for serge.

Cut in four sizes; two, four, six and eight years. It requires three and one quarter yards of 44-inch material for a four-year size.

1220—Ladies' Dressing Sack. This model could be developed in any pretty shade of French or Scotch flannel, or in the pretty novelty crepes. Embroidered scalloping or feather stitching would be a pretty finish. The sleeve may be in either length illustrated.

Cut in three sizes; small, medium and large. It requires two and one half yards of 36-inch material for a medium size.

1180—Ladies' Waist, with or without chemisette. In velvet and cloth as a waist for a gown, or in dainty embroidered batiste combined with chiffon, this design will be very effective. It is also good for poplin, charmeuse, satin or cashmere.

Cut in six sizes; 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires three and one half yards of 36-inch material for a 36-inch size.

9608—Ladies' House or Home Dress with long or shorter sleeve. This neat and popular style is suitable for gingham, chambrey, lawn, percale, voile, crepe, linen or ratine.

Cut in six sizes; 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust measure. It requires seven yards of 36-inch material for a 36-inch size.

1030—Girls' Two-piece Dress, waist to be slipped over the head, and the two-piece skirt to be buttoned to the waist under the belt. This style would make such a comfortable play dress to be worn with bloomers. Linen, lawn, gingham, chambrey or percale are fine for these little dresses. For more dressy wear, a pretty pattern of crepe, or embroidery in batiste or lawn (flouncing or bordered goods) would be pretty.

Cut in four sizes; four, six, eight and 10 years. It requires two and five eighths yards of 36-inch material for an eight-year size.

1127—A Most Attractively Becoming Style for the growing girl. The jaunty vest pieces may be omitted, also the peplum. In messaline, satin, charmeuse or crepe de chine, this style could be effectively decorated with embroidery. It would also lend itself nicely to batiste or lawn, combined with "all over" embroidery. It is also good for galatea, gingham, seersucker, percale, poplin, challi or lawn. The skirt is a two-piece model.

Cut in three sizes; 12, 14 and 16 years. It requires four and one half yards of 36-inch material for a 14-year size.

1210—Boys' Blouse with Knickerbockers. Galatea, gingham, poplin, chambrey, serge, linen and ratine are all appropriate for this model. The Knickerbockers are in regulation style and may be of self or contrasting material.

Cut in four sizes; three, four, five and six years. It requires four and one half yards of 27-inch material for a six-year size.

9886—Ladies' House Dress in raised or normal waistline with long or shorter sleeve. This would be pretty in figured lawn or dimity, or in a neat percale pattern; in gray or blue striped seersucker, with collar, cuffs and facings in contrasting color, also linen and ratine.

Cut in seven sizes; 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires five and one quarter yards of 50-inch material for a 34-inch size.

Comfort Sisters' Corner

HUNTLAND, TENN.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON:

Some eighteen or twenty years ago—oh, you see I'm an old subscriber, even two years more than the above—someone contributed an article to COMFORT telling how to make a round rug on a hoop. I made one at the time and all admired it, and now I want to make another and have forgotten how. Will you please ask someone through COMFORT to tell me again just how, also how to make raffia hats, the ones that look so like lace when finished.

I pity the poor at all times, but especially during the cold winter when food, fuel and clothing are all so scarce and hard to get. Even here in the South, grim want stalks about worse than a dunning letter in all its misery.

If people would only try to can up the surplus fruits and vegetables each year there would be thousands of people with a fair living on hand for the cold days instead of want. Anyone can can such things in glass cans if they will and thus save the can each time for refilling and save the cost of buying tin cans to throw out when empty. Now this is no idle tale for I've canned for twenty years and I do it just like you do in a canning factory except I use glass cans. Every year great quantities of things go to waste that might be saved. It would cut down the high cost of living wonderfully. Don't ever use acid, vinegar, etc., in canning for if put on market it will not pass "Pure Food Law" inspection, besides it is unhealthy and altogether unnecessary. No trouble to keep if cooked right. And these things in an emergency, come mighty handy many times. I can fresh meat, chicken, etc., so to have it on the shelf and when company comes in at the eleventh hour, as often happens, it is handy to have ready.

Wishing you, dear Mrs. Wilkinson, and every reader many blessings, MRS. W. M. KNOER.

Mrs. Knoer. For the benefit of other sisters, why not send in some of your tested recipes for canning fruits and vegetables? I am sure it would be of value to them. An "emergency shelf," particularly when grocery stores are at a distance, is an excellent thing to have and should include a fruit cake which will keep several months.—Ed.

NORDHOFF, CAL.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND COMFORT SISTERS:

I have just been reading COMFORT which is so much help and comfort to me.

I am particularly interested in the letters of those describing their home places, and as I have not seen any letters from this section of the country I will give you a little description of this beautifull Ojar Valley.

Nordhoff is the only village in the valley. It is fifteen miles inland from Ventura, by the sea. The name, "Ojar" is the Spanish name for nest, so-called from the valley being surrounded by mountains, and having a nestlike appearance. It has an elevation of seven hundred feet, and is perhaps as fertile a spot as any place in the world; although only a small valley three hundred car loads of the very choicest of oranges are annually shipped to select customers. Nearly all kinds of semi-tropical fruits are raised here. It is watered by an abundance of mountain streams and artesian wells.

Our home is beautifully situated in the midst of a live oak and sycamore grove, with a fine trout stream within a few feet of the house.

This evening as we were standing on the back porch we counted forty valley quail in our garden within one hundred feet of us.

If you come out to the Fair don't fail to visit Nordhoff, which is the most beautiful and healthy place in Southern California.

I should be pleased to receive personal letters from any of the sisters.

With best wishes, MRS. I. E. PEARSALL.

HUNTINGTON STATION, Box 114, L. I., N. Y.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

As I have not seen any letters from here I thought I would start by writing one. I like to read the letters from the other sisters, but, strange to say, I had never seen a copy of COMFORT before moving here. One of the neighbors showed me a copy, and since then I have taken it. So I gained one good paper, even if not in the city.

It has been three years since we moved here from Brooklyn, N. Y. I much prefer the city to the country, but as father's health was poor, we moved here to Huntington. It is thirty-five miles from Brooklyn, but it takes only one hour and fifteen minutes to ride in on the train, so once in a while we take a run down, as all of our friends are there.

There are just three of us, mother, father and I. A dear brother went to Heaven when I was but three years old. But God in His infinite mercy took him home, and it was for the best as he was a cripple.

How many sisters have Christian mothers and fathers? I have and scripture reading and prayer are the first and last every morning and evening in our home.

How many sisters have been to Long Island? There are some fine places all over the island. On a very clear day a person can stand on the shore of Huntington Bay, and see over to the Connecticut shore. It is pleasant to go to the bathing beach, as the harbor is lovely in summer. There is also a small public park where many go to enjoy the breezes on very hot days. The town is situated on the northern shore of Long Island. Many people come here to spend the summer. On the shores of Huntington Bay are some beautiful mansions. They are located in the section called Beaux Arts Park, so named from a beautiful hotel and dining-room right on the edge of the bay. Many of the wealthy people have private docks, where their yachts lie.

As most sisters describe themselves, will say that I am five feet one and one half inches tall, have dark brown hair, and fair complexion. I tip the scales at one hundred and twenty-four pounds, so I am not very large.

The winter was very mild, the snowfall being light. The snow is so bad for traffic, but we must take fair and storm as God wills.

If any sister cares to write I shall be glad to answer. Wishing you all, God's best, I remain,

MISS NORMA NELSON.

PHIL CAMPBILL, ALA.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND COMFORT SISTERS:

As I seldom see a letter from this county (the northern part of Alabama), I ask for admittance, though I feel myself to be a very poor representative, amongst such a noble band of sisters. I have been a reader of COMFORT for several years, and I get much help, comfort and pleasure from its pages. I shall always be a subscriber.

I am a farmer's wife, having lived on a farm all my life.

It has been only about twenty years since this country was nearly all in woods. And now it is cleared and in cultivation, pretty farmhouses, telephone lines, schools and churches are plentiful.

We raise cotton, corn, oats, potatoes, peas and syrup cane, though cotton and corn are our principal crops. We can raise most all kinds of fruits, except the very tropical and nearly all kinds of vegetables do well here.

Our climate is moderate in winter. Our summers are long and delightful.

Miss Marie P. Kearney, I agree with you on the subject of how we should treat those who drink. They are more to be pitied than censured. I think we ought to be kind to them, not in a way to encourage them in their downward road but in a way that we might influence them to turn from that life to a higher and nobler one.

I am thirty years old and have been married ten years. Have five children under nine years of age to care for. I am interested in all that is said about rearing children for I want mine to make good and useful men and women.

Grandma, I enjoyed your letter.

Mrs. Mae Loder, I know you must be a good mother. How lucky your boy is.

Mrs. Wilkinson, your comments are fine. They seem like a mother's council. I hope you will be spared many years yet, to give us your advice.

Sincerely your earnest COMFORT reader,

MRS. IDA HALE.

PORTLAND, MICH.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:

I wonder if you will admit another Michigan girl to your pleasant circle for a few minutes' chat. I have long enjoyed the letters from the sisters and also received some valuable hints as well.

I agree with some of the others in thinking the farm and country the only place worth living in as I have lived both in city and country.

How many of the sisters "make over" stockings and men's black hose for the smaller children? I do, and find it makes quite a saving where one has to count their pennies. My way is to cut them quite straight, except shape to the leg and then sew across the end for the toe and not set in a foot as some do but make them "railroad style" and they will shape themselves to the foot.

As I have not described myself will do so now, I am twenty-two years old, five feet three inches tall, weigh about one hundred and twenty pounds, have brown hair and eyes and a fair complexion.

I have been married five years to a tall, fair-haired, blue-eyed, six footer and have three children, one boy of four years, one girl two and one half years and a baby boy one year old. They are all healthy and noisy as children can be.

I wish Mrs. Effie Mull, whose name I saw some time ago in COMFORT, would write to me as I should like to know if she is any relation.

MRS. BENJAMIN MULL.

RUDYARD, GERMAINE CAMP, MICH.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

Though I have been a reader of COMFORT for over twenty years this is the first time I have written to this corner. I am greatly interested in the letters on the training of children, particularly the guarding of our girls. My dear mother had these three rules of conduct that she took pains to impress upon her daughters and for which we can never thank her enough.

"Remember that modesty is a woman's greatest charm."

"Remember that men will encourage you to do as many bold and immodest things as you are silly enough to do and then despise you for it."

"Remember that any man that is half a man will protect you from another man, but you must protect yourself from him."

I wish I could have a copy put into the hands of every girl but as I cannot I am sending them to dear old COMFORT that goes into so many homes in the hopes that it may be the means of saving some from the snares that are laid for them.

I do not believe in teaching the mysteries of life to small children, give them some childhood. We become blase soon enough. How I cherish the days when Grimm's Fairy Tales were my chief delight and I arose early in the morning to look for the fairies on the flowers and wash off the freckles in May dew.

With best wishes to all and continued success to our good editor and his able staff, I am dear Mrs. Wilkinson, your COMFORT sister, MRS. J. GERMAINE.

Mrs. Germaine. I am glad of the opportunity to pass your three rules along and I earnestly desire that other mothers will in turn impress them upon their daughters' minds, not in a half-hearted way, but in deadly earnest for by so doing they may prevent many tears of sorrow, and the repentance which comes all too late. While I am fully aware of the fact that our educational system of today is far in advance of that of our mothers' time, or even of our own, I sometimes sigh for the little ones who are missing many of the simple joys of childhood through wisdom, far in advance of their years, but since modern times seem to require it, the only thing left for us to do is to face the matter squarely and labor to win and retain the confidence of our children. In my humble opinion, the time for the unfolding of the wonderful mysteries of nature is when questions are asked. These may be evaded for a time, which is all very well, provided the child does not learn from an older playmate all that a father or mother should teach. In that case the probability is that it will be told in a coarse and uncertain manner and all its beautiful meaning lost. At all times encourage your children to come to you with everything. It is better to tell them everything, even if they are young in years, than take chances of their acquiring the knowledge elsewhere.—Ed.

BUTLERVILLE, ARK.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND STAFF:

It has been two years I believe since I wrote to COMFORT. At that time I never thought of writing for publication. I don't know why but it never occurred to me that it would be published. I only wrote the thoughts of a sad heart. I am not so sad today, the answer the dear editor of our corner condescended to pen after it, and some more letters I received from COMFORT readers did wonders for me; for which at this late date I wish to thank you all.

Just a kind word spoken does much to lift a load of unhappiness. I'm never so happy as when doing something for someone in need of the service, be it ever so small.

Only last Sunday I heard a sermon, the text of which was: "What is that in thy hand?" A question the Lord asked Moses and one we can bring home to ourselves. He only had a rod in his hand. Dorcas had just a needle and thread. What have we? What talent has the Savior intrusted to us? Is it kindness? Not so with me, but by the help of God we can gain over what he has given us. Didn't one gain five? Let's be careful that we, like the man with the one, do not bury it. Dorcas had just the talent of sewing but see how they wept when she died. She used it for the glory of God, and to the best of her ability.

Here's a thought I wish to send from someone unknown.

"What is the real good?"
I asked in musing mood.
"Order," said the law court;
"Knowledge," said the school;
"Truth," said the wise man;
"Pleasure," said the fool;
"Love," said the maiden;
"Beauty," said the page;
"Freedom," said the dreamer;
"Home," said the sage;
"Fame," said the soldier;
"Equity," the seer.
Spake my heart full sadly,
"The answer is not here."
Then within my bosom
Softly this I heard:
"Each heart holds the secret,
'Kindness' is the word."

May we each try harder this year than ever.

MAE BYMUM.

Mae Byrum. Your letter is most encouraging and particularly so to me for I have often wondered if my messages ever accomplished any good and now that I know that one, at least, has helped to cheer a lonely heart, I shall feel they were not in vain. No matter how small and unimportant our lives appear to be we can find one talent that has been intrusted to our care and which we shall have to account for. To what extent depends on our own, individual efforts, so let each one of us endeavor to make the most of what God has given us.—Ed.

ATHENS, ALA.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:

If I am permitted I wonder how many of you are willing for me to enter your happy circle that I too, may be happy. It is exceedingly surprising how we can accomplish so much by reading such grand and noble ideas written by the dear sisters who have experienced their writings. I feel that we are under many obligations to Mrs. Wilkinson for the friendship gained through this corner, and the good she is doing. I know she must be the happiest person in the world, to be loved by so many.

With most of us life is what we make it, but with some it is different for they are not blessed with health, and perhaps crippled or invalids and the darkness is likely to shadow them, but if they would stop and consider that they have many things to be thankful for and they are watched over by the Lord, who "knoweth best and doeth all things well," and they have better hope than those enjoying all the pleasure that life can afford, for some have their reward; and those with health and happiness should know how to appreciate it and try without hesitating, to lift the veil of unhappiness, others that they may see a bright star leading through the valley of sorrow. Many of us are discouraged at times, but we can soon overcome this by taking in our hearts all that is good, and breathe to the very depths of its sunshine which will destroy all that is not pure and think how beautiful life is, and you know everyone is ready to greet a bright smiling face.

I often think it would be the greatest pleasure to me to live where I could be constantly helping those that need it. In a spiritual way I am sure I need help myself, but in a way I could help with the work of my own hands which I would gladly do.

"We are always having opportunities to do good," but I haven't them as often as I would like, and sometimes I think I am of very little use but I try to be relieved by thinking "doing little is better than doing nothing."

It is easy for us to think of ourselves first, but if we will not give away under the feeling we can soon see how our hearts will be overflowing with joy by making others glad.

Our friends are next to ourselves and I often feel the warm friendship of this column, and the tender embrace that draws all so close together.

The dear sisters are always writing something good and helpful, but I am weak on the subject of anything important. I manage to scramble through my own work with ease enough, but when I go to tell others something helpful I am at arm's length and ready to consult someone else, but I will try and give a few recipes I often use and like so much and sometime I will come again and give more that I have thoroughly tested.

If I had space I would like to write about flowers for I consider them our rarest beauties and have used them to a great advantage in many ways, and especially where the house is beginning to show a worn appearance at the ground. I think any pot flowers are lovely; they are like a pet of some kind and waiting for caresses. I hope some of the sisters will write their experience with certain flowers, and let everyone of the sisters take special care and have a pretty pot in full bloom to carry to some shut-in, and think how many sisters there are and you will know how many souls would be made glad.

Make this the happiest of all years, that we may feel the breath of peace and never cease to show affection to those lonely hearts that are aching for kind words and encouragement.

My kindest regards to all, MRS. W. S. GRAHAM.

LAURIN, MONTANA.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND COMFORT SISTERS:

Now is the time to scatter smiles and words of cheer to those whose lives are shadowed. They may not be here another year. So many in this old world are just dying for kind words; I wish I could say something that would cheer them up, but dear sisters did you ever think that:

"We must live through the dreary winter
If we would value the spring;
And the woods must be cold and silent
Before the robins sing.
The flowers must be buried in darkness,
Before they can bud and bloom,
And the sweetest, warmest sunshine
Comes after the storm and gloom.

"I learn as the years roll onward
And I leave the past behind,
That much I counted sorrow
But proves that God is kind;
That many a flower that I'd longed for
Had hidden a thorn of pain,
And many a rugged by-path
Led to fields of ripened grain.

"The clouds that cover the sunshine,
They cannot banish the sun,
And the earth shines out the brighter
When the weary rain is done;
We must stand in the deepest shadow
To see the clearest light;
And often through wrong's own darkness
Comes the weary strength of light."

It's an old and true saying, "It's always the darkest just before dawn." "A smile is better than a frown," and "Health is wealth;" no one knows this better than I do, having had poor health all my life until the past two years, but I am trying to enjoy the blessing God has given me. I always wanted to do something wonderful, but learned that the world is made up of the little things, even pennies grow into dollars. Now I am content to do the little things. I have found that God knows best; he placed us here for a purpose, whether out in the fight or on picket we must stand firm and true for this is our work to do.

I have brought up five children, but never felt competent. I asked God to give me wisdom from day to day; every mother needs wisdom from on high! What a study to know what to do and say. One thing I learned was never to compel children to ask one another's forgiveness. It creates a bitter feeling in them, but what I did learn, was, when there was a dissatisfaction or dispute (which happens in the best families) I would ask them to kneel with mother while I told God all about it. When we arose the trouble was ended and they kissed one another of their own free will with love beaming on every little face.

I am living in the foothills on a homestead at this time.

Wishing you all the best year of your lives, I will close, hoping you will remember me with letters or anything to read, MRS. MELISSA A. WILCOX.

STERLING, ILL.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

After reading the numerous letters of child rearing I feel that someone might profit by my experience. It is only natural that every young mother likes to have bright children but it is those who have been given a dull or stubborn child that will be most interested. I am not going to complain.

When my child was quite small I had very little patience with her, and often became angry in an instant and she received a great many whippings. As she grew older and started to school I had to have patience with her for when I began to show the opposite she got nervous and I could do nothing with her.

Some things I have tried for years to drill into her and this has been a good thing to even down my fly-away temper. I will give you a few of our experiences so you will see that I am learning as well as she.

From the time she was old enough I tried to teach her to wash her hands so as to touch all around both palms and back of hand; this I performed for her many times. When she was eight years old she stood one day and watched her uncle washing—saying "I know now how to wash my hands, just go round and round."

Instead of scolding I merely said, "Had I known I would have had Uncle Will come to see us years ago," I have tried to have her take care of her belongings and room. As long as I keep at her she does well but when I stop, thinking to let her go on alone, she stops also. Wherever a thing leaves her hands there it stays till I speak about it.

I have done every thing I could do for her and am going to keep right on for if she ever "comes to" she will never forget the patience I had with her. I want her to be able to say, "The best days of my life were with my mother."

She is now thirteen years old, a nice-looking, rosy-cheeked girl and very obedient. She has the first time to say "no" or "I won't do it," when I have told her to do a thing.

I never let her hear me say, "I can't do anything with her," but always keep firm.

The other day she needed a correction and afterward she said she was glad her mamma didn't sigh and groan over her like a neighbor does when she gets discouraged with her children. She thinks I am all strength and it is well she doesn't know the moments when my heart prays, "O God, give me strength to rear this child right; I make many blunders and should I be called on to account for them all I would indeed be unfit to bow at Thy feet."

Now for the story of a stubborn boy. A lady lived near me a few years ago who had five children, the eldest five years, and she was very impatient with them. The second boy was the finest specimen of boyhood I ever saw. After knowing her for some time she told me she just strapped him till he was lined with welts and he was the most stubborn one of all.

I happened to be in the house one afternoon when he had one of his bad spells, and it made my heart sore to see how she whipped him and in the end he would not give in. I bided my time and in a few days I talked to her about it and told her to stop whipping him because it did no good and only made him more ill tempered. She thought it over and in a few days told me, she would stop for she saw it was useless. This was one of the children who could be led but not driven.

I am an old subscriber to COMFORT and have learned much from its pages.

Best wishes to all, MRS. HATTIE D. MILLER.

Mrs. Miller. You are learning a lesson not taught in school—unless it is the school of life which has experience for a teacher, and not always a kind one at that—a lesson of self control and patience which most of us need to know. Do not become discouraged, for your faith will be rewarded in the future, even though the present may seem rather discouraging to the most optimistic nature. I wish I could make mothers understand the important part hereditary and prenatal influences play in the child nature. Perhaps then they would be able to give their children understanding care. A great many cases of so-called stubbornness can be traced directly to nervousness resulting from conditions over which the child has no control and is not responsible and we should always think twice before inflicting punishment.—Ed.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON:

Pardon me for writing again so soon, but COMFORT has been such a help to me in so many ways, that I must come once more.

I am thinking of going back to my mountain ranch in Colorado for the coming summer. The land is rented, so I will have only the house and small garden spot. As my ranch is on a stage line between the city and several summer resorts, I thought during the camping season I might have a tearoom or tent, and serve lunches to the tourists as I would like to earn a little money.

I would be pleased to hear from the sisters who have had experience in such work. I will gladly return any favor I can to those who write me on this subject.

My letter in October number of COMFORT brought several dozen letters. I thank all who wrote to me. I answered as many as I could.

I wish to say to those who write for information on any subject, kindly enclose a stamp. I promise to use

The Incubator

AN incubator is almost a necessity if you expect to make your poultry pay. There is no certainty about when hens will get broody, and you lose the big prices if you don't have early chickens. Besides which, if chicks are not hatched early in the spring, there won't be any pullets old enough to lay next fall.

After the lamp is lighted and the machine heated to one hundred and two and one half degrees, the top or regulating-nut on the connecting-rod, immediately above the regulator-arm, is screwed until the disk is raised one fourth of an inch above the chimney—such an adjustment being considered by manufacturers and expert operators as most desirable for incubation. The machine once being "set" for this degree of temperature, any excess of heat causes the thermostat to expand, which makes it press on the lower nut of the connecting-rod, so instituting a tension that influences the regulator-arm at the point of balance, raising the disk over the lamp-chimney in sympathetic conjunction with the thermostat. Reverse the conditions to a dying lamp or a sudden cold wave, and of course the thermostat contracts, and general release of pressure allows the regulator-arm to resume a normal balance, which permits the disk to lie closely down on the chimney. It will be readily conceded that on a correct adjustment of the machine before the start depends the operator's peace of mind and subsequent success.

After the incubator has been properly located, fill the lamp, light and hang in place, using only a moderate flame at first. Leave all the ventilators open for a few hours, to thoroughly air the machine; then close and adjust the regulator so that an even temperature of one hundred and two and one half degrees, with the disk one fourth of an inch above the lamp-chimney, is steadily maintained for twelve hours before setting the eggs. Patience and scrupulous exactness at first will save accident and loss later.

When the cold trays and eggs are first put in, the temperature will run down, but do not turn up the lamp or alter the regulators. As the eggs gradually become warm, the heat will creep up again. After the first day, the trays must be taken out every night and morning, and then turned and allowed to cool to ninety degrees. The time allowed for the process must be regulated by the atmosphere of the room; if very cold, five minutes will be enough; if moderate, twenty or thirty will be needed. They must not be allowed to chill, but the more airing they get under that point the stronger the chickens when hatched. The eggs should be tested on the seventh and fifteenth days. This is best done by a block-tin device sold by all incubator companies.

The guide which is most reliable in determining the progress of the hatch is the development of the air-cell. This is a little space in the large end of the egg which is visible at testing-time, and should continue to grow larger and larger until about the nineteenth day, when it occupies about one fifth of the entire egg. Unless this air-cell is developed correctly by the nineteenth day, the chick cannot turn itself in the cell, and hence sticks fast and dies. The development of this air-cell is the vital point to be considered in obtaining a first-class hatch. It is controlled in two ways. If it develops slowly, which is usually the case, give the machine and eggs all the air you can. This can be done by opening the slides in the ventilators full width and cooling the eggs as long as possible each day. The cooling is best accomplished by placing the trays of eggs on top of the machine (closing the doors meanwhile) and leaving them there until the thermometer drops to about eighty degrees.

After the morning of the twentieth day do not open the incubator until the hatch is over, or until late on the twenty-second day, and do not get nervous if the temperature runs to one hundred and four or even to one hundred and five; it is caused by the animal heat of the chicks, and will do them no harm. Turning down the lamp slightly will of course reduce the heat, but be very careful not to let it run below one hundred and three during the last twenty-four hours. Low temperature prolongs the hatch, weakens the chickens, and makes them susceptible to all sorts of ailments.

The thermometers sent out with incubators are supposed to have been tested before they are shipped, but it is well to buy an extra one and compare them.

Probably there is no branch of work in town or country where the old adage about an ounce of prevention being better than a pound of cure proves so true as in the chicken business, and especialy when applied to raising youngsters. They are such tiny little things that there is scant hope of doctoring if they contract any illness. Yet naturally they are so full of vitality that, given a fair chance, they grow like weeds, and cause their owners no anxiety. So the main point is to start them right, which means cleanliness, warmth, fresh air and good food for the basis of health; and these, properly applied, cover the full ground of preventives. Whitewash costs little, and when made with scalded hot skim-milk, a handful of salt, and an ounce of crude carbolic acid added to every pailful, it is about the best disinfectant that can be used.

Raising chickens in an incubator, of course, necessitates having a brooder to care for the motherless babies. Whether a hover or another brooder is bought, the thermometer will accompany it, so it is possible to regulate the heat under the hover, and it must register ninety-five degrees before the chickens are put into it. After the first week it can be lowered slightly every two or three days, until at the end of the third week it registers seventy-five degrees. Cover the floor of the brooder with sweepings from the haymow, or finely cut hay.

Feeding and General Care

No food of any sort should be given to chicks until they are forty-eight hours old. This is most imperative, for the yolk of the egg is absorbed into the abdomen just before the chick breaks through the shell, and unless it is thoroughly digested and assimilated before other food is eaten, the digestive organs are overtaxed, and the whole internal organism of the chick is upset. After the prescribed forty-eight hours, commercial chickfeed—a mixture of small seeds and finely-broken grains, put up especially for baby chicks—is the best food for the first ten days. Scatter a little at a time upon the cut hay at the bottom of the brooder, four or five times a day, to encourage the chicks to scratch, and so take the exercise which is necessary for their health. Keep fine grit and charcoal always before them, and fresh water in vessels which the chicks can only get their bills into. After the first ten days, give a little mash night and morning, made by chopping a hard-boiled egg, shell and all, with green onion tops or sprouts. Mix with stale breadcrumbs, and feed on a flat pie plate or strip of wood. After the chicks are two weeks old, the corn and oats need not be quite so fine—more the size of hempseed—and can be added to the mixture. Cracked wheat or barley can be added also; and the mash can be made of ground corn and oats, with onions and scalded liver, chopped, three times a week (about a small cupful to a quart of mash.)

Correspondence

F. E. C.—You say in COMFORT you will send advice concerning sick animals. I am writing to ask if you will tell me how to caponize male chickens, if I send you one dollar in advance. I am not sending money in this letter, for I don't know as you have any advice for me in regard to poultry. I wish very much to know how to do this work correctly, so he will not die. I know something about it, but not enough to try it without further information from someone who knows. Please answer and say whether you will explain fully how to do it if I advance one dollar to you.

A.—We take pleasure in helping and advising our readers and make no charge for it. Any small, strong table which can be easily moved close to a window will do to operate on. The bird should be confined in a clean coop for twenty-four hours, without food or drink, to insure the intestines being empty. Prepare two pieces of strong twine, with a slip noose at one end and a weight at the other. Half a brick or a stone will do. We had two old pound weights with slots in them, that fitted over a scale bar, and as they were easily attached to a string, we always used these. The string should be long enough after the noose is made and the weight attached, to reach from the center of the table to within a foot of the ground. When you are ready to perform the operation, slip the noose of one cord around the bird's shanks just above the foot, then draw the wings up over the back until they touch; slip the noose of the second string over the wings, below the second joint. Lay the bird on its left side on the table, allowing the ends of the strings to which the weights are attached to hang down on each side of the table. This keeps the bird's feet and wings perfectly still and out of the way. Now dampen the feathers on the bird's side with cold water, to keep them flat, and also to check bleeding. Then with the left hand press down the skin toward the leg, and hold it in position whilst with a sharp knife you make a cut about an inch long between the first and second ribs, above the hip, following the shape of the ribs. The bird will start as the cut is made, but will lie quite still the next moment. Of course the point of the knife must be used, and the skin only cut. Place the wire stretcher which comes with the tools in the cut to hold it open. You will then be able to see the white fiber-like skin which encloses the bowels. This must be attacked with the sharp hook belonging to the kit, and carefully picked open. Naturally every precaution must be taken not to pierce the intestines, but as they will be empty after the bird's long fast, there is not much danger if care is used. As the breaking of this skin causes the bird no pain, there is no necessity to hurry or get flustered, but it is well to work as quickly as you can. After the inner casing is open, one of the testicles will be in sight—a cream-white, kidney-shaped membrane lying near the backbone. Before commencing the operation at all, you must thread the canula with a fine steel wire (both of which belong to the kit), letting the wire form, a loop at the curved end, and ends well out at the other end.

Sometimes both testicles are in sight, but not often, as the other usually lies beyond and more to the other side.

Now comes the only dangerous part of the whole operation—getting hold of and removing the testicles. But with a steady hand and plenty of light not one bird in a hundred should be lost. Attached to the testicle and lying back of it is one of the principal arteries of the fowl, and this, if ruptured, is sure to cause death. It is here that the proper tools prove of the greatest advantage. The wire being small and very fine, is easily slipped between the testicles and the artery without injury to either, and a clear, clean cut made. Take the canula in the right hand and adjust the wire in it so that a loop, about one half inch long, will extend from the small end of the tube, leaving the two ends of wire extending far enough out of the open end to secure a good hold. Insert the end of the tube that has the loop on it very carefully, and slip the loop over both ends of the testicle and entirely around it; hold end of tube close down to the testicle. When it is entirely encircled by the loop, take both ends of wire which comes out of the other end of the tube with thumb and first finger, holding it tight, and drawing it up carefully but firmly until it is severed; then remove the wire spreader and allow the hole to close in the outer skin which you pressed down with your left hand at the beginning of the operation, and as the skin resumes its natural place the outer cut will be upwards of an inch above the inner cut, and keeps out all dirt and insures its healing quickly. To complete the operation, turn the bird on its other side, and proceed exactly as before. Some experts can work entirely from one side, but it is risky, and difficult for an amateur to try. After the operation, keep the bird in a small coop, and feed lightly for a few days, and there will be no ill effects.

L. E. McI.—Being a subscriber and reader of COMFORT, I venture to ask your advice concerning the merits of Minorcas. Do they make high records as layers? Are they much given to brooding? Will they do well in confinement under ordinary care? Is the white variety as good as the black? Are they profitable as broilers and roasters at an early age?

A.—Minorcas are good layers of large white eggs, but they are not the best type of birds for early broilers and roasters. Rhode Island Reds and Wyandottes are the best general purpose birds.

W. J. L.—Will you please tell me what is the matter with my chickens? I have about forty-five hens and pullets that have not laid since last August. They are the Rhode Island Reds and White Leghorns. I feed them corn chops and chickfeed and they have the fields to run on. Do you think raw sweet potatoes could be the cause, as they got plenty of them while the potatoes were being dug. My neighbors said it was. I am an old subscriber to COMFORT.

A.—Your method of feeding is not likely to produce many eggs. Use wheat and cracked corn instead of chickfeed, and in place of the corn chop give a mash made of equal parts of ground corn, wheat bran, and ground oats, and one third part each of animal meal and old-process oil meal. Give some fresh green vegetable at noontime every day, and as much whole corn as they will eat up clean in ten minutes at suppertime. Unless the birds get sweet potatoes in such quantities as would make them extremely fat, they would do them no harm.

O. S. P.—How soon do geese commence to lay—in February or in March? (2) What is good to feed small geese when just hatched and also old ones?

A.—Geese usually commence laying in March in your part of the country. Goslings should have nothing to eat for the first thirty-six hours after they are hatched. After that, give them eggs boiled hard and chopped fine, shell and all, mixed with stale breadcrumbs and finely-chopped greens. Lettuce leaves, the green tops of onions, clover, or young tender grass, are all suitable. Mix well, and add one third quantity of sharp sand, and just moisten with milk. Feed just a little, so that it is all eaten up within ten minutes, and give it them four times a day for the first three days. After that they need only have it night and morning for a week, then just at night until they are six weeks old. After they are two weeks old, the egg can be left out, and a little boiled oatmeal used in its place. Let them have wide range on short tender grass. Geese are really grazing creatures, and are better without the heavy grain food. Mature birds will feed themselves between May and November if they have good pasture.

A Subscriber.—Would like to know what makes my hens eat sawdust. They eat it like they would eat chop. Will it hurt them? The dust is cypress and gum. Will raw turnip tops stop them from laying, or is it an injury to them?

A.—I should say the birds need more grain food. Don't you feed any mash? Read answer to W. J. L. Turnip tops would not hurt them. Greens of all kinds are good for fowls.

E. S.—Can you tell me what is the matter with my chickens? One hatched in May; the other some later. Both were laying. When they stand or walk they stand straight up so their tails drag on the ground, and their legs kind of spread out when they walk. They eat good, and I give them a variety of food. Wheat and oats in the morning; cooked vegetables with buckwheat and bran (wheat) stirred in to form a mash; also meal scraps at noon. Until now I have given a small amount of poultry food daily in the mash, but not enough to force laying. A tablespoonful and sometimes two to about fifty-four fowls. I have fifty hens and pullets and four male birds. They are full-blooded Black Minorcas. I feed corn at night and I give them cabbage for green feed; also Alfalfa meal in the mash. They began laying in November and December.

P. S. A neighbor of mine has lost five fowls. They opened the last one, and all down inside of the neck and on the gizzard were little yellow ulcers about like a mustard seed. Can you tell the cause, and cure?

A.—The condition you describe may have been brought about by excessive laying, but I am more inclined to think that the male running with the pullets is an old, heavy bird. Better separate them from the rest of the flock for a week or so. Should say your neighbor's birds were too fat. If such is the case, advise her to change feed. Read answer to W. J. L. in this issue, and put half a teaspoonful of sulphate of magnesia in each quart of drinking water. If, on the other hand, the birds are thin, it is in all probability a case of tuberculosis, and the best cure is to kill every suspicious looking bird and thoroughly disinfect the house and yards.

J. G. C.—I have five Bourbon Red turkeys, and this is my first experience with them. What is good to feed young turkeys, and when should they be hatched? They will have a big range, with woods and running water. Will mixed chickens do well if culled every year and only the best kept, and by keeping full breed roosters? I find they are always healthy and easy to raise, but do not lay well, and they are very pretty.

P. S. When is the best time to set goose eggs, and should the nests be made on the ground?

A.—Please read last month's COMFORT on turkey raising. It is better to keep one breed of chickens than a mixed flock, but as you have good healthy hens, I advise you to decide what breed you prefer, and use males of that breed year after year to grade up your flock. Better set the goose eggs as soon as they are laid. Yes; the nests should be on the ground.

O. B.—There seems to be some kind of a disease going among my chickens. They appear healthy until about a day before they die. They get droopy (that is, some do, others seem well) and die. I cut one open. She was fat, and her comb was red. Her liver was almost entirely white and greatly swollen. It was entirely different from a healthy liver. I feed wheat and cooked barley. I have fresh clean water for them. During these cold months I give them lukewarm water and milk every morning. They laid all the winter, and are laying well now. I have one Brown Leghorn which has been droopy for some time. She eats heartily, but seems as though she is lifeless. I have doctored her for roup and lice, but she doesn't get well. The houses face south and are kept clean. There are also some that can scarcely walk on one of their legs. Otherwise they are all right. Will you advise me what to do. P. S. We have read COMFORT for some time and think it is the best home paper published.

A.—The hen undoubtedly had liver complaint, and as going lame in one leg is a symptom of the disease, I should imagine that the whole flock was in a bad condition, and that you have been overfeeding. Cooked barley is very fattening. Please read answer to W. J. L. in this issue.

A. G.—Having received COMFORT for some time and seeing the good help it gives for someone, I will ask a favor if you can help me. I've got hens, and most of them have crooked spines. I would like to know what causes that.

A.—The hens must have been hatched from eggs laid by hens that were mated to a deformed male bird. Better not use any of their eggs for hatching, as the deformity is almost sure to be transmitted to their progeny.

E. C. F.—I have looked through your poultry column, but find no information I want. I have a pair of bantams which mate well. Last year was the first year the hen laid. I want to hatch some bantams, so please advise me through your columns whether I should keep the eggs she laid, or buy them.

A.—Eggs from your bantam hen will be all right to set. Better try to get a broody hen from a neighbor, then keep all her eggs until she gets broody herself. Eggs that have been kept for setting should stand with the small end down, and be turned every day.

H. W. B.—I cannot give breeders' names and addresses in this column. You must send a self-addressed and stamped envelope for this information.

J. M.—I would like to have some information on raising squab for market. If you can't give me information, perhaps you could tell me where I could get a bulletin, as I would like to know all about how to raise them.

A.—I will give the information you ask for in next month's issue.

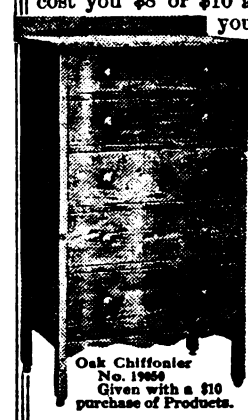
H. W.—What is the best feed to make a young chick that weighs one pound or over, gain in weight? (2) What is the best feed for older chicks to make them gain in weight? (3) What is the best feed to make hens lay? I wish to know about the proportion of feed to mix myself. I know there are several brands of ready mixed feeds on the market. In regard to the recipe in February, 1915 COMFORT for keeping eggs—will this discolor them in any way, or make them soft-shelled?

A.—Fattening broilers and other young stock for market will receive attention in next month's issue. The shell of eggs which have been preserved in waterglass look quite fresh and natural.

H. M. C.—I cannot furnish dealers' names and addresses in this column. When such information is wanted, a self-addressed, stamped envelope must be enclosed.

M. E. B.—I want to know what is the matter with my chickens. I noticed one of my hens choke when she was eating. I caught her and looked in her throat and there was a yellow, spongy-looking thing about two inches long, but it was hard. I tried to remove it, but could not. I gave her Castor oil and turpentine. She is healthy-looking, and tries to eat, but can't. Can you tell me what the trouble can be? Can I cure her or not? Will the others take it? (2) How old should Indian Runner ducks be before they begin to lay? I have some seven months old, and they are not laying yet.

A.—The hen had what is known as canker. Mix equal parts of pulverized camphor, boric acid, and subnitrate of bismuth, and blow down the bird's throat and through the nostrils from a glass tube or a straw. Canker is usually caused by mouldy litter or grain, and is slightly contagious, so you had better quarantine the bird while doctoring her. (2) Indian Runner ducks usually commence to lay when about six months old.



G. A. S.—Please read last month's article on raising turkeys. It will give you fuller information than I could in this column.

S. J. H.—I have one hundred and thirty-five hens—White Wyandottes. Three or four weeks ago some of the hens' combs turned real purple. They would get that way in just a few hours. They would be all right when I let them out at morning, and by night they would be of a bluish purple on their combs, but it did not affect their appetite in the least. I noticed a few of them seemed weak for a few days, but they were hearty, and in a few days would be all right; then they would take it again. I have had over a dozen get that way. Some were old hens and some were pullets. Their combs are not frozen, for they have never roosted out at night. I thought it might be indigestion. I feed about one and a half gallons of corn twice a day. I feed nothing else. Four weeks ago I gave them a poultry tonic. I will give you a list of the ingredients that were in the tonic: Spanish flies, African capsicum, French gentian root, African ginger, Venetian Red, American sulphur, American ship stuff, native ground mussel shells. I only gave a fifty-

Uses of the Soy Bean

SOY beans were introduced into this country from Japan and in recent years have grown rapidly in favor. The Connecticut Experiment Station has just published a bulletin which contains much valuable information on this crop and we print the following brief summary of their most important findings for the especial benefit of our New England readers. The conclusions reached in this bulletin, it is understood, would not always apply outside of the New England states.

1.—Soy beans are valuable as catch crops. If winter grain fails, soy beans drilled in rows 24 to 30 inches apart just after corn planting time will yield a good crop of hay richer in protein than clover or Alfalfa. They may be cut green as a soiling crop.

2.—Being legumes they store nitrogen from the air and thus enrich the land if turned under in late fall in time for sowing a cover crop. They yield on the average over two tons of dry hay per acre.

3.—For seed they sometimes produce a profitable crop depending upon the state of the market.

4.—One load of soy beans mixed with three loads of corn makes a valuable silage. Soy beans should not be made into silage by themselves.

The bulletin from which the above conclusions are summarized is No. 185 of the Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station at New Haven. Residents of that state may obtain it free on request from Director Jenkins. Others outside the state can have this bulletin on the same terms so far as the size of the edition permits.

Warding off Foot-and-Mouth Disease

Restrain your curiosity about foot-and-mouth disease if it gets near to your farm. Keep away from the infected farm, and make all people and animals from the infected area keep away from your farm. Dogs, cats and pigeons may carry the disease. Try to make this impossible on your farm. Learn what the authorities in charge of the outbreaks of the disease require in the way of regulations and obey the rules strictly and see that they are obeyed by all who live on your farm or who are controlled by you. The other day we heard of a diary farmer in Illinois who had been reading about the disease, its symptoms and effects and the methods by which it can be spread and also avoided. Becoming curious he made a visit to the farm of a neighbor on whose place the disease had broken out. To make himself perfectly conversant with the symptoms of the disease, so that he would be able to recognize it if it happened to break out among his own cattle, he examined the mouths of a number of the diseased animals on his friend's farm. Then he went right home and examined the mouths of his own cows and he had only a few days to wait before having a chance to see the symptoms in his herd. All of his cattle caught the disease and had to be destroyed by the federal and state authorities. That man was a monumental fool! and he deserved to pay the penalty of his foolishn ss. Of the same character were those farmers in Illinois who made a picnic of the killing and burying of foot-and-mouth diseased cattle on the farms of their neighbors. They hitched up and drove to the killing place by the hundred, as if to a picnic or auction, hitched to the fence or trees as near to the graves as they could get, chattered and gossiped about the disease and the unnecessary severity of the officials in killing the affected and exposed animals and forthwith returned home taking the disease with them and spreading it all over the district. What awful stupidity and carelessness! See that no other farmer makes a like mistake. Stay at home, or at least away from places where the disease exists. Bring home no milk, skim-milk or whey from the public creamery unless it has been pasteurized. In every district near to the quarantined areas of the country insist on such pasteurization, or buy no creamery milk. The disease still is prevalent at this writing (March 9) and indeed is breaking out again. We have recently heard of twenty-five new outbreaks in Illinois, and about as many in Ohio and Pennsylvania and many more in other states, if our source of information is correct and we have every reason to believe that it is. Meanwhile the business of selling pure bred stock is at a standstill and shipment of stock for purposes other than immediate slaughter has been stopped in every state east of the Mississippi river. This sorry state of affairs would not have occurred had Illinois farmers obeyed the law. An injunction was ordered by a certain judge in that state and until it was annulled some time later the killing of diseased and exposed cattle by the federal and state authorities ceased. During that time the disease spread apace and the damage was done. It may now transpire that we shall never wholly stamp out the disease but that it will now and then recur as it does right along in Europe. Under the circumstances it behooves every reader of this paper to be careful, to be circumspect, to abide by the rules laid down by the authorities and do nothing that possibly may bring the disease onto his own farm or that of a neighbor.

Protect the Birds

Now that many of the birds have come back again, while they are just starting to sing and build in the more Northern farming states, give them all possible protection. Birds are the farmers' best friends. Were all of them to be destroyed it would prove impossible to farm. There are over 100,000 kinds of injurious insects in this wide country. Birds prey upon these pests and keep them from utterly devastating the crops. There is a lot of ignorance about this subject. Boys are encouraged in many districts to kill owls and hawks and crows; but with few exceptions the good these birds do in a year much more than offsets any harm they do in taking a chicken now and then or flying off with a potato set or rooting up some corn. It is easy to scare the crows away. A few varieties of hawks are injurious, but the commonest sorts do little damage and on the whole are beneficial, and that also is true of our farm owls which destroy so many mice. Then too it is claimed by those who have made a special study of the subject that the blackbird pays for the tips of the corn ears he opens by the insects he kills; that the meadow lark even in the time of clover makes injurious insects some 90 per cent of its day's food and that these larks are worth $356.40 to each township of 36 square miles each season in protective work to grass alone. Insects do eight or nine millions dollars of damage to crops every year and were birds destroyed would devastate the entire country. Protect the birds. Get the boys and girls to love and cherish them. Teach them to study their habits, to recognize each bird by its song and appearance, to leave their eggs and nests alone, to feed them when storm and winter weather and snow make the finding of feed difficult or impossible. Get the girls and women folk to league themselves against the use of feathers from song birds, and birds other than ostriches and poultry, for hat adornment. Join and support the Audubon societies everywhere. Listen to that song sparrow singing out there in the lot or orchard. Is it not the "cheer leader" of the bird choir; does not its song teach and preach joy, and love and contentment and good cheer? Does not it make the grouch despicable and the man or woman who habitually lets the mouth corners droop ashamed of such weakness and lack of faith and love and happiness? Listen to the song sparrow. Cheer up; cheer up! Let the birds live and increase for both economical and social reasons.

Interesting Facts about Seeds

It is well known that all seeds do not grow equally well at all temperatures, but it is not so well known that many of our farm seeds begin to sprout at temperatures a little above freezing.

Wheat, oats, barley, rye, peas and flax will begin to grow at 40 degrees F. but make their most rapid growth at about 80 degrees F., and a temperature much above 100 degrees F. is fatal to them.

Corn, sunflower and pumpkin will not germinate below 50 degrees F. and do best at a temperature near 100 degrees F. while melons and cucumbers will not grow until 65 degrees F. is reached. These are the actual temperatures of the soil and not the air above it. This explains why some seeds rot in the ground in wet and late seasons.

Will Old Seeds Grow?

This question is often asked. The answer is yes, if not too old. There are but few seeds that refuse to grow the second year after being produced. The following table shows the average life of the principal garden seeds:

Seeds good for two years: Onion, parsnip, salsify.

Seeds good for three years; Kidney beans, cress, leek, parsley, pea, rhubarb, strawberry.

Seeds good for four years: Lentiles, mustard, tomato.

Seeds good for five years: Asparagus, kale, broccoli, cabbage, carrot, cauliflower, okra, kohlorabi, lettuce, musk melon, spinach and turnip.

Seeds good from six to ten years: Artichoke, bean, beet, celery, cucumber, egg plant, endive, watermelon, pumpkin and squash.

Oily seeds do not keep so well as seeds covered with a thick hull like pumpkin and squash. Seeds kept at a cool uniform temperature last longer than those kept at varying temperatures and under changing conditions. Timothy seeds that have been hulled lose vitality quicker than the unhulled even if kept in the same bag. To remove a seed from its natural covering shortens its life. Moisture is an enemy to stored seeds. To keep vitality long, seeds must be kept both dry and cool.

Use of Lime on Land

There are four kinds of lime commonly used on land, burnt lime, waste lime from beet sugar factories, air slacked lime and ground limestone. Fesh lime cannot be successfully used. Refuse lime contains many large pieces and is often so caustic as to cause injury to the soil by destroying burning up) the organic matter in it. Air slacked lime is open to the same objection though if completely air slacked lime could be had it would be the best to use because of the fineness of its particles. Ground limestone is identical with completly slacked lime but it can never be ground so fine. However, it can do no injury to the soil. For this reason ground limestone is always advised for use on soils needing lime.

The Pennsylvania Experiment Station has just finished tests with lime on plots of land seeded to all kinds of small grains, clover and Alfalfa and has reached these conclusions:

1.—In a long continued fertilizer test burnt lime gave no increase in crop while the ground lime gave $1.20 value increase for each ton of limestone used.

2.—There is little reason to expect large returns from the use of lime on only slightly acid soils.

3.—All of the tests show better returns from ground limestone than from burnt lime.

4.—The value of lime in any form depends upon its purity and the fineness of its particles.

The amount of lime to use depends upon the acidity of the soil. On a sticky clay two or three tons per acre may be profitable. To keep ordinary soil sweet and capable of producing a good crop of clover one and one half tons per acre every three or four years is sufficient.

Lime should be put on the land the year before clover is to be sown. If this is not done it may be put on the land when the seed bed for the nurse crop with which the clover is sown is being prepared.

Apply lime with a spreader after the ground has been plowed. It should never be plowed under. It should not be mixed with seeds or commercial fertilizer, nor used in place of fertilizer. It should be thoroughly mixed with the soil by harrowing or disking. The more thoroughly it is mixed with the soil the better the results which will be secured.

Forcing Pie Plant

Perhaps some of our readers have seen in the markets of the large cities bundles of long, bright red pie plant or rhubarb exposed for sale early in spring and have wondered how such crisp, juicy stalks were produced. If they looked closely at the stalks they would have noticed that each of them was topped by a bunch of light yellow or blanched leaves of small size. These leaves were about the same in color as the leaves of well-blanched celery and the light color was due to the same cause, viz., exclusion of direct light. There is good profit and sale in the production of such forced rhubarb. The grower deeply spades a spot of rich soil and manures it well; then he plants or sets a strong rhubarb root clump, covers it with mellow, rich friable soil and over that sets a barrel from which he has removed the head and bottom. An ordinary flour or apple barrel is used. Into it some straw is thrust to cover the earth six inches deep. After a time the sprouts from the rhubarb begin to show through the straw and when this is noticed more straw is put in and now and then more and more is added to keep the stalks growing toward the light, but covered so that the leaves will not become green. The growing must be rapid if the stalks are to be brittle and juicy. Slow growing means toughness and poor color and that too is true when the light is let in. When the crop of forced stalks has been marketed the barrel is removed, the straw taken away and the plant again well mulched with manure so that it will produce a second, later crop of green pie plant for ordinary use, or wine or preserve making.

Increase Horse Breeding

Hundreds of thousands of good horses are being destroyed in the terrible war abroad and farming there is demoralized. It seems certain that France and Belgium will be badly off for work horses when the war is over and it is not at all improbable that they will have to come to us for supplies. At the presnt time cavalry and artillery horses are going to France in large numbers from this country and this demand will serve to lessen our supplies of such horses which really are above our requirements. We always have a surplus of light horses, so numerous are our trotting stallions and so badly has the automobile business cut into the use of horses on the road; but we have too few really good draft horses and we honestly believe that it will be the good drafters that will sell not only at home but abroad after the war has come to an end. Right along we have advised our farmers to produce their own supplies of pure bred draft stallions and now they will have to do so. In 1913 we imported from France 1482 head of breeding horses, largely Percherons, and that year 977 breeding horses came to us from Belgium, 185 from England and 98 from Scotland. Up to September 1, 1914 we had only imported 518 Percherons, 373 Belgians, 39 Shires and 36 Clydesdales. Importation has now wholly ceased. The supply of imported stallions and mares of pure breeding in this country is small and prices will be certain to soar before spring. This really is a good thing for our farmers. They now will more than ever produce pure bred horses at home. There is no need of importing breeding horses from abroad. We have plenty of seed stock at home. The homebred horse is better in many ways than the one from abroad and far cheaper. The imported horse costs on an average about $450 abroad and sells for two or three times that figure at a great profit to the importer. The moral for readers of this paper is that the coming spring every good, sound, fit and suitable draft mare in America should be bred to a good, pure bred stallion. The mare may work for her living while pregnant and nursing. She need not cost more than a scrub for feed. Her foal will be worth twice the price of the scrub and many of them, when grown will go abroad. This is the American horsebreeder's opportunity.

Spring the Season for Manures

As a general rule manures should be applied in the spring and immediately plowed under or disked into the soil. Coarse manure containing much straw, however, may be injurious if plowed under in the spring as it forms air spaces beneath the surface and causes the land to dry out rapidly. All spring manures should be thoroughly worked into the soil. Coarse manures should be hauled directly from the barn as they are made during winter and spread over the land.

Fresh manures should not be used on quick-growing crops. They may be applied to corn land but for garden crops well-rotted manure is greatly to be preferred.

The chief objection to rotted manure is that much of the value of the manure is lost by being left to decay before hauling from the field. This may be avoided by the use of the manure pit placed under a roof. If the tank is made of concrete all the liquid manure may be saved. The roof prevents washing and leaching by the rains. If manure is piled in this pit it will be necessary to pump water over it occasionally to prevent heating. The excess water and the urine accumulated in the bottom of the pit may be pumped out and sprinkled over the land. Liquid manure is especialy valuable for the forcing of garden and truck crops.

Manures should be applied in rotation. It is not necessary to manure land every year, besides few farmers produce sufficient stock to supply manure for this purpose. The best plan is to apply manure once in three or four years just before the crop is sown that makes the heaviest draft on the land.

The Corn Stalk Borer

In many sections of the country where corn is grown great damage is done by the corn-stalk borer. This insect bores into the stalk and spends its early life there, greatly weakening the stalk, after a heavy storm many stalks will be found broken off and lying on the ground, having been so greatly weakened by the borer as to be unable to stand the strain of a hard wind.

The grub passes the first winter in the extreme lower tip of the corn root and emerges the next year as full-grown moth to lay its eggs on the next crop. Since the insect attacks only the corn plant, the sugar cane and a few of the close relations of these plants it is evident that rotation of crops will prove a valuable remedy. If corn follows corn for two or three years the damage of the borer increases with each succeeding crop. This is because the moths do not have to go in search of plants upon which to lay their eggs and thus escape destruction. As in the control of most insect pests which carry over winter in the ground, rotation of crops is the most effective means of control. This is particularly true in the Southern states where the damage from this pest is usually greatest.

The Questions and Answers constitute one of the most valuable features of this department and we urge our farmer subscribers to read all of them carefully each month, as you will find that they contain much useful information and advice on practical problems that are troubling you as well as those who have asked the questions. Cut them out and paste them into a scrapbook for future reference. This will save you the trouble of writing us and will avoid delay in getting your answer when you need advice on these same matters. We are glad to receive inquiries from our subscribers and to advise them on all matters pertaining to farming, but it is hardly reasonable to expect us to waste valuable space in answering the same questions month after month for the benefit of those who need not have asked the questions if they had read and remembered the answers which we had previously printed.

Questions and Answers

MILO MAIZE SEED.—Your article on Milo Maize, in February COMFORT interests me and I would like to try to raise a little of this grain to see if I can grow it here. Will you kindly inform me where I can get a little of the seed,—about a pint I would like.

F. A., Little Falls, Minn.

A.—Any large seed house should be able to supply you with the sample of milo maize which you desire, or perhaps you might obtain it by writing to one of the Western state experiment stations, such as the one at Lincoln, Nebraska, or that at Manhattan, Kans. We recommended milo maize for the dry sections of the South and Southwestern states, and we should hardly expect the Kafirs to prove smitable to your district, but it will not cost you much to try a very little as an experiment. A quick-growing dwarf variety would be more likely to succeed in your short season. For profit we advise you to stick to the grains recommended by the experiment station of your state.

MILO MAIZE SEED.—I would like to know where to get some milo maize seed such as was described in February COMFORT. I. H., Meridian, Miss.

A.—You should be able to get milo maize and seed of the other Kafir corns from any large seed firm. If you have any difficulty in obtaining it write to your State Agricultural Department or to U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. for information.

OX WARBLE FLY.—We subscribed for COMFORT, and as a farmer I am much interested in its "Modern Farmer" page. In your article on grubby hides in February COMFORT you say the grubs are caused by gad flies or bot flies. I have seen these flies and there are some of their eggs on the horses' legs now (February 8). They bother the horses more than the cattle. If these flies cause "the grubs," can you explain the large dark blue flies that we see around the cattle and horses in summer. They are nearly as large as bumble bees and cause cattle to run and try to fight them off when they light on their backs. They also bother the horses and I have seen a few of the grubs in the horses' backs and there are some in the backs of the cattle now, but I always squeeze them out when I can. I have found the grubs where I have seen these large flies light. E. H., Chapman, Nebr.

A.—In our February article, to which you refer, we said that "The grubs are the larvae of the ox warble fly (hypodermis lineata) and come from eggs deposited by the fly in summer," which is true. We also said that "the fly is known as the gad fly or bot fly," but to be exact we should have said erroneously called the gad fly or bot fly, for the horse bot fly is a different fly from the ox warble fly. The horse bot fly deposits eggs on the hair of the legs and breast of the horse and the eggs are licked off, swallowed and develop into bots which adhere to the lining membrane of the stomach of the horse. There are two kinds of bot flies, viz., gastrophilus equi and gastrophilus hemorrhoidalis. The ox warble fly (hypodermis lineata) is the large troublesome one you describe and is the cause of grubs. Formerly it was supposed to deposit eggs in or under the skin of the loins of cattle, but the more modern explanation of the entomologists is that the eggs are laid on the legs and heels, licked off and swallowed, hatch out in the gullet and after penetrating its walls find their way under the skin until they arrive at the place in the back where they mature in boils and eventually emerge as grubs, burrow into the ground and finally come out as flies. Stockmen and farmers do not take kindly to the latter theory, but it is well supported by the scientists, from research work and we have been shown the gullet with small warble larvae in the walls. Even if you believe that the grubs burrow in from eggs laid on the backs of the cattle instead of from eggs deposited on the

Marketing Farm Products by Parcel Post

How Uncle Sam is Boosting to Facilitate and Promote it for the Benefit of Producer and Consumer

Copyright, 1915, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher, Inc.

By Edna Mary Colman

THE Parcel Post is rapidly revolutionizing the market business for the farmer.

No more does he need to get up before dawn the year around to travel many chilly, dismal hours through all kinds of weather, over all kinds of roads to reach the city market in order to get a chance to sell his garden truck and poultry at good prices.

At last the farm wife, maid or widow has found out the blessed privilege of getting actual money for her eggs and butter. No more must she of necessity trudge one mile or several through heat and dust to take in exchange its equivalent or often a very unequal value of calico, sugar, coffee, etc. at the cross roads or village store, for delicious butter and splendid eggs that many jaded city palates dream of and pay fancy prices to obtain.

Farming is still the greatest industry in the United States and on its successful development depends the future of our country—the prosperity of every other industry and the health and happiness of our people. Increased crop production by better farming methods, which the government is spending so much money to promote, fails of its purpose if the price to the consumer is held up or even raised while the profit goes to the middle-man instead of to the farmer. The middle-man is merely a distributor, and he adds nothing to the value of the products that he handles; therefore his expense and profit, which frequently more than double the price of an article, are a loss to the community just so far as his services are dispensable,—a tax without a commensurate equivalent. Distribution (marketing the product to the consumer) therefore is the important problem involving the question of how to dispense with the middle-man's service by facilitating direct dealing between producer and consumer.

In the recently established parcel post we have largely increased facilities for mail-order marketing, especially of farm products in the first and second zones (a distance of 150 miles) wherein the rates are low and the weight limit 50 pounds. Though Uncle Sam was a quarter of a century behind Europe in establishing the parcel post he has been trying, since he made a beginning, to make up for lost time.

And now Postmaster General Burleson estimates that more than eight hundred million parcels are being handled annually, which means that this service has grown beyond all expectations. To appreciate how gratifying this success is to the authorities one must know that the original advocates of the parcel post estimated that possibly three hundred million parcels might go through the first year.

Mr. Burleson's administration of the Post-office Department has proven his choice for this position by the President, a most happy one, as it is considered the most arduous and exacting of the cabinet portfolios and must of necessity have a man at its head whose activities of life have given him the broadest of training in the school of experience. Mr. Burleson is himself enough of a farmer to appreciate all the wealth of opportunity which the parcel post affords the producer especially when he is allowed a reasonable latitude in the matter of rates and weight limits.

Without doubt, much of the wonderful success of the project is due to Mr. Burleson's untiring efforts at popularizing it and the changes which he effected in increasing the weight limits and the reduction of the rates which dated from August, 1913 and January, 1914. In a recent report of the growth of the parcel post, the Postmaster General thus summarizes the work:

"The constantly increasing volume of business has confronted the Postal Service with many difficult problems in connection with the transportation and handling of mail. Innovations in the matter of equipment were a necessity while new methods in handling of parcels had to be adopted. These of course facilitated the parcel business without creating any delay for other mail.

"After long and painstaking investigation it has been shown that loss through damage to parcels has been reduced to seven one-hundredths of one per cent on the insured and C. O. D. parcels respectively. Through actual count it has been determined that the loss through damage to ordinary parcels going through the mails is only one tenth of one per cent of the entire number handled, and this damage has been due to the failure of the senders to pack them properly, instead of to the method of handling. Of course the highest losses come from the perishable goods, and to products of this type proper packing is absolutely essential if they are to reach their destination in good condition. Impressed with the importance of making this point clearly understood by the public at large the department has, through the press and by other means, given detailed instructions in packing and preparing material, for mailing. To make this more plain postmasters have recently been authorized to hold exhibits at fairs and other local gatherings where not only the many advantages of the service are made plain, but the newest and best methods of packing are demonstrated.

"The reduction of the insurance fee from ten cents to five cents on parcels valued at $25.00 or less and ten cents when the value was above $25.00 and below $50.00, which became effective July, 1913, played an important part in both the ordinary parcel as well as the insured traffic and has proven a boon to the public as may be gathered from the fact that more than 13,000,000 parcels were insured during the last fiscal year, or more than double the number sent by registered mail before the parcel post was established.

"At this time also the C. O. D. plan was started by which the sender of an article might have the price of the article as well as the cost of its transportation collected, on delivery, from the person to whom it was sent. The popularity of this arrangement is attested by the fact that during the first 12 months it was in operation about three million parcels were sent this way with collections totalling over $14,500,000."

It soon became apparent that the original rates of postage were so high and weight limit so small as to be prohibitive of extensive traffic by parcel post, so with the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission rates were reduced and the weight limit increased from 11 to 20 pounds in the first and second zones. This was the change which went into operation in August, 1913; but it did not take long for the P. O. department to realize that even these rates and weights were too limited. Again Mr. Burleson initiated a change, and this time it was by extending the weight limit to 50 pounds in the first and second zones and to 20 in the others, and also by reducing the rates of postage in the third, fourth, fifth and sixth zones. These became effective January, 1914, which made the parcel post available as a practical means of shipping farm products and a great deal of other merchandise that had formerly been excluded by the higher rates and smaller weight limit.

These canges in rates and weight limits coupled with improvement of the service made it possible for the farmer and the city buyer to cooperate to the decided benefit of each, without the intervention of any middle-man. As the Post-office Department held to the belief that through this new plan the parcel post could become an important factor in cheapening the cost of living, or at least the food supply, in March, 1914, 12 of the larger post-offices were selected for special tests of a farm-to-city service. Thus farmers were invited to register their names and indicate the different kinds of produce they wished to sell. Lists of these names and the articles each one offered for sale were printed and distributed in the cities by the mail carriers. The results went beyond the most sanguine expectations. The shipments of country produce grew so rapidly that at present 18 additional offices have been selected for the same kind of experiment.

Because of the many requests from circulating libraries, schools, colleges and publishers for books to be included in the fourth class matter instead of third, as had been previously the case, books were admitted to the parcel post, and now, through an act of Congress, bulbs, seeds and plants may be shipped in this way.

Futhermore, the parcel post is open to the shipment of game, but in cooperating with the states and territories in the protection of wild birds and animals, a regulation has been adopted, which prohibits admitting to the mails any parcels containing game killed in violation of the state or territorial laws.

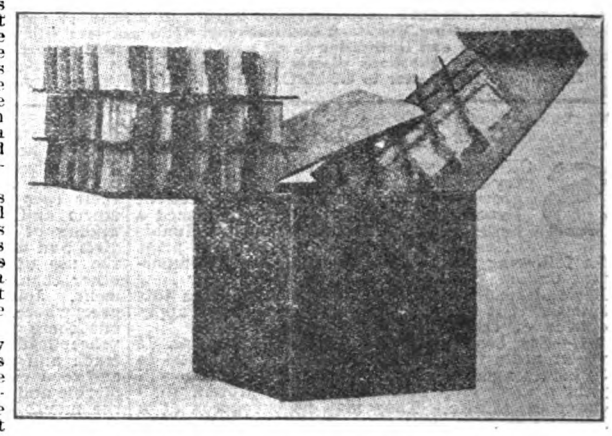
Other provisions have been those made for the attaching of communications to the parcel provided that the necessary stamps are placed upon the envelope containing the communication. By this plan both the parcel and the letter will be deliverd together.

Although the parcel post has more than proved its value to the public, the depths of its possibilities have not yet been sounded, but there are many problems yet to be worked out and many improvements to be made before it will fulfill its destiny which is to be the direct mutually beneficial link between producer and consumer which will soon resolve itself into a simple bargain as to a set of rates between the two and then the leaving the empty market basket at the nearest postal station and mailing a check to cover the order including the postage and in return receiving at the door the Saturday, daily or mid-week order.

According to Mr. Burleson the greatest obstacle in the path of the rapid expansion of the parcel post system is temperature. When some bright inventor produces a thermatic container that will keep supplies at just the right temperature, neither too cold nor too hot, and when the railways begin to look with friendly eyes upon the marketing-by-mail arrangement and install refrigerator cars, then perhaps the high cost of living will be naught but a bad dream and the farm communities become rich in honest, well-earned wealth. Of course temperature is of no concern during the winter months, but with the best care in packing, the utmost speed in delivery and transportation, butter, lard and poultry arrive after a 12 to 24-hour journey not in the pink of perfection or even anything like normal condition, during the summer-time.

Washington however, has solved the temperature problem, which she rightfully should, being the nation's capital, and besides having to set the pace for the country in all matters progressive in the development of the Post-office Department's pet scheme. Moreover another Texas man is doing credit to his state and to Mr. Burleson, who appointed him postmaster of Washington. The Hon. Otto Praeger, who has the pleasure of presiding over the most beautiful, commodious and up-to-date Post-office building in the United States, if not in the world, carries the success of the parcel post system very close to his heart. He has figured out some startling innovations, the most unique of which is the establishment of a huge refrigerator in the midst of the post office, right among the mail sack, paper racks, letter cabinets, etc. It is a wonderfully up-to-date porcelain lined, electric lighted, perfectly ventilated and refrigerated ice box, just as modern as the most advanced ideas in ice box invention can make it. And—it is for parcel post perishable goods that bid fair to be lost or spoiled before even the quickest delivery can be encompassed. All such supplies as butter, lard, poultry, berries in the summer, cream, etc., which may have been standing in the boiling sun within the wilting atmosphere of a sun-attracting metal car, are placed on ice the minute they reach the parcel post section of the big office.

Anything arriving up to 9 P. M. is sent out by special delivery, but all that comes in after that hour is simply kept safe and sanitary in this ice box, which is ten by ten two ways and six feet the other way, with a capacity equal to those of the largest of the city grocery stores, until the first delivery of the next morning.



Keeping mail on ice is not the only brand new stunt of Mr. Praeger's brand new office. He has gone one better in the matter of lists of producers with their commodities. He publishes a list of these things, and it likewise tells the prices asked for their butter, eggs, potatoes, and apples, etc., and the city housewife learns to her immense satisfaction that John Doe in a certain Virginia or West Virginia county or village is willing to sell eggs, chickens and butter cheaper than she ever hoped to find them again and—fresh. The Post Office tells her the postage rate on whatever she wants to get and she has nothing else to do but to send her order with the cost of the turkey and its postage rate included and her stout market basket on to John Doe or to any other producer whose wares are so listed and priced that she knows whether she can afford the luxury of fresh country goods or not.

From these printed price lists it is very easy to determine upon a course to follow for there are prices quoted to suit every pocketbook and to the family of affluence to whom price is not an object, belong those producers who live nearest to the big cities and who therefore can and do command the regular top city prices for their produce.

Mr. Praeger insists that it was not for the benefit of this class of people that the parcel post system was planned but instead for the laboring men, the mechanic, the store clerk, the factory man, in fact for every family whose income is small and to whom counting the pennies is an actual necessity. To people of this class the few cents saved each week upon the eggs and butter is a matter worthy of consideration.

Said Mr. Praeger, "to the small salaried people, parcel post marketing is a real boon for they not only get their goods cheaper if they select farmers who sell cheaply, and those who live on some of the star routes and off the main lines of travel offer their goods very reasonably, but the consumer gets purer, better food than he could possibly get in the city market at the same price. He not only is required to pay more in town for his marketing but he must also take the time to go to market and frequently has to ride quite a distance on the street cars to get it.

"Of course," continued Mr. Praeger, "for parcel post marketing to become thoroughly satisfactory, the producer and the consumer must get together on the price. The farmer should split the middleman's profit with the consumer in consideration of the fact that the consumer takes all the risk and also because of the fact that the farmer has his money in his hand, at his own door from the rural mail carrier before he packs up his eggs or butter for the order. Moreover he should remember that the consumer could go to market and pick out his selections from a large and varied assortment, while in buying by mail, he does not really know what he is buying until his basket arrives and that is after it has been paid for. So the farmer should be willing to give the consumer the benefit of as good a shave in price as he can conscientiously afford and thus the consumer will save a few cents upon each order and the farmer may still make a little more profit than if he traded in his produce at the country store for household supplies.

CORRUGATED PASTEBOARD BOX FOR MAILING TEN DOZEN EGGS.

"The Post-office Department is keenly alive to the possibilities of reducing the high cost of living through the parcel post, but if the farmers insist upon charging retail market prices for their goods, the consumer will not deal with them and they will be compelled to sell their produce at whatever prices the commission merchant will give them."

Mr. Praeger cited an instance of a Washington family that has enjoyed the most delicious fresh eggs all fall and winter, since September 1st, at the low rate of 35 cents per dozen. Now these are used for the table and are of a necessity perfectly fresh. The same eggs, that is the same grade or quality, have been bringing not less than 40 cents per dozen and even as high as 60 cents a dozen in the city stores during this period. It costs the consumer 14 cents postage on every lot of five dozen which he orders as a week's supply. The corrugated pasteboard container which cost less than 20 cents, was bought for the first order and is still going back and forth every week and is yet in good condition, and out of all of 85 dozen eggs that came into this family in this way only one was broken, and three others cracked. The same family have enjoyed delicious butter at the rate of 30 cents a pound while their neighbors have had to pay 40 cents to get any fit to put on the table so, using three pounds of butter per week at this price and adding eight cents for postage which is the rate upon three pounds, it takes a very simple knowledge of arithmetic to figure out the saving in money this family has accomplished without saying anything of the value to them in the way of reliable and satisfactory quality of the eggs and butter. There has been almost as great a difference in the supplies of poultry, and it is in butter, eggs and poultry that the city family gets the most benefit from the market by mail arrangement.

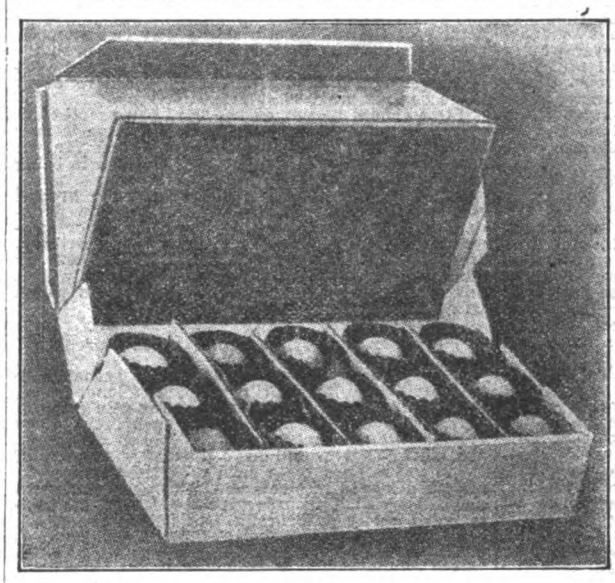
This does not mean that other things are not sent and bought and sold satisfactorily by this method for there is an almost endless variety of things listed for sale in all of the post-offices. The prize performance of the Washington office however was the disposal of an entire steer for a country butcher, before the steer was even killed, and right now there is a husky calf cavorting over the Virginia hills, that has all been divided and apportioned and engaged by future consumers so that when the owner decides it is time to convert that calf into veal chops, etc., he knows exactly where every pound of it is to go and more than likely will have the price of each lot in hand before he ships it.

The same plan is carried out in other things. Chestnuts came into the Washington office in 50 pound bags and many days there were 50 or more sacks per day during the fall. Berries were sold before they were picked, and so with peaches and other perishable fruits. The berry farmer estimated his crop, sent in his price and number of crates, the Post Office printed his name and price and location and Mr. Bowerman, the librarian of the Public Library posted up the slip on his bulletin board just as all of these lists are placed, and the city housekeepers did the rest.

In the Washington office, which is a fair criterion by which to gauge the others throughout the country, for December 14th the actual count of parcels of farm produce alone was 395 which is about the daily average, while on Saturdays and the day before holidays the count runs up to, and sometimes above another hundred.

Of the 395 parcels: poultry was 59, eggs 157, fruit 24 and other farm products such as lard, nuts, meats, rabbits, etc., 165.

This activity of business is general and is the direct result of the campaign started by the Postmaster General last spring and by which the circulars were distributed giving addresses and goods for sale by various farmers. Washington had distributed about 25,000 circulars bearing names of about 150 farmers who desired to sell by parcel post, and since that time the amount of farm produce sold this way has been steadily increasing.



Similar campaigns were started in the following cities, with most encouraging results:

Birmingham, Ala., San Francisco and Los

The Calamity Breeders

By Thomas Addison

I WANTED to leave the dog at home and take only one trunk, but Mary overruled me—as usual.

"No, John," she declared with an air of finality, "we will not leave Bevis to the care of the Browns. The poor fellow's tail is frightfully sore where that nasty dog bit him yesterday, and I've got to look after it."

"Oh, very well, my dear," I assented hastily. "But about the trunks. The cartage, you know, will be double all down the line, and——"

"As for the trunks," went on Mrs. Webb as evenly as if I had not spoken, "two steamer trunks tied together with a bit of rope would have to be taken as a single piece, and would be charged as such. I planned it all out today while you were at the office."

She regarded me with triumph, and looked so temptingly pretty that I hadn't the heart to enlighten her concerning the sordid ways of soulless traffic mongers. Instead I kissed her.

"You win," I whispered in her ear, and kissed her again.

She pushed me away with one hand and smoothed her rumpled hair with the other.

"Just see, John, how I've thought out everything," she proceeded with the little patronizing tone she assumes towards me on occasion. "We are to be gone fourteen days. I have written to Fred, and Lucy, and Tom, and Gertrude saying we shall spend two nights with each—and there you have eight days of hotel bills done away with! And I'm going to write to your sister Ellen suggesting that we make her a little visit toward the end of our trip; so really, John, our actual living expenses will be next to nothing."

I kissed her a third time and held my tongue—a gift I have assiduously cultivated.

* * * * * * * * * * * * *

The day of our departure arrived. The first part of the trip was to be made by trolley, and our initial stop would be at Dresden, sixty miles distant. It was here Lucy lived, my wife's widowed sister.

The wagon came for our trunks, which were roped together according to specifications. They were brand new; I had picked them up at a bargain sale the previous spring. They looked as like as two peas, except that Mary had had hers lettered with her initials, "M. W.," while mine bore no mark of identification. Mary watched the driver closely, but he said nothing—only grinned. I had seen him the night before, I may remark, and two silver quarters had passed from my keeping into his.

"There, I told you so!" exclaimed my wife as the man drove off. "You see, he didn't say a word. Now own up, John—you never would have thought of such a thing, would you?"

"No, I never would," I replied; and with this we set out for the interurban station, Mary leading the dog and I lugging a suitcase.

We were about an hour out, in the open country, and coasting down grade to take a switch that would let a car standing on the main line pass us. In some way we managed to jump the switch, and we met the other coach head on. There was a sickening jolt and a frightful grinding sound, but when we pulled ourselves together we found that nothing really serious had happened. A good deal of glass had been broken and a considerable assortment of language spilled, but we were all very much alive and kicking—some of us violently.

All this time Bevis was howling his head off in the baggage compartment, and we now hastened to see what dreadful thing had overtaken him. He had hurt his sore tail, we discovered; a valise, or some such small bit of flotsam, had bounced on it in the shake up. The baggageman was swearing steadily and earnestly at our little pet as we came in. Mary soothed him—the dog—with caressing words, and I soothed him—the man—with silver. It was the second time that day.

We arrived at Dresden an hour late. I chartered a hack to take us to Lucy's house. I had first privily seen the expressman and paid him the usual price per trunk before he could protest at the unwonted coherence of the two.

"My, but I'm hungry!" exclaimed Mary as we drove along. "I suppose Lucy has given us up, and we'll get a warmed over dinner."

"Better half a loaf than none at all," I commented with borrowed wisdom.

We were turning into Lucy's street when one of the skeletons hitched to the hack stumbled and went down on his knees. The driver pulled him up by main force, but the shock was sufficient to jounce Bevis off the front seat to the floor, and in falling he again hurt his tail.

The outcry that dog made was hair-raising; you would have thought he was being murdered. The passersby stopped, and the neighbors came rushing to their doors. And with all this hullabaloo we drove up to Lucy's gate. She was there to meet us.

"Lands alive, Mary!" she ejaculated. "I thought you were lost. What's the matter? Where did you get that awful dog? And what have you been doing to him?"

Mary was on the side near the curb. She sat perfectly still and looked coldly at her sister, and for the moment made her no reply. I seized the opportunity to get out on my side of the carriage and help Bevis out. Then I busied myself with paying the driver, and thus was enabled to defer for a little my participation in what I feared would prove to be an embarrassing situation. Mary's silences are fraught with possible explosions.

"Good gracious!" I heard Lucy cry out. "Are you going to sit there all day, Mary? What has happened to you?"

Then my wife spoke.

"I was overcome by the warmth of your greeting, Lucy Reynolds," she said acidly; and with this she descended—that's the word for it—to the walk. "That 'awful dog,' I wish you to know," she went on, "is the finest collie in this part of the country. I brought him with me because I thought you might like to see a real blue-blooded dog. However, it doesn't matter. Bevis won't give you any trouble."

Here the man drove off with the hack, leaving me exposed to view. I stepped forward briskly, with an effusive salutation to my sister-in-law, but I saw her eye the dog apprehensively.

"Does he bite?" she asked breathlessly. "There are the children! They'll be home soon. I sent Tommy on an errand, and Nellie went with him."

"No, Bevis doesn't bite," replied my wife indignantly. "He is gentle as a lamb. But really, Lucy, I think you might postpone your catechising until we've had something to eat. We are starved to death."

The next half hour was spent at the table. Bevis noisily gathering nourishment from a dish on the floor by Mary. I could see that Lucy viewed this proceeding with disfavor, though she abstained from comment on it.

With the progress of the meal Mary recovered her flow of spirits and related the incidents of our journey with the wealth of detail that only a woman can manage; but I noted a look of anxiety dawning in Lucy's eyes, and she began to drum nervously on the table with her fingers.

"Why, child," she burst out at last, "you've started your trip with a regular hoodoo! You want to be careful!"

Mary laughed.

"Don't be a goose, Lucy! You're worse than a darkey. Let's go outdoors. I'm roasting in here!"

We rose, Bevis with us. The door giving on the side porch stood open, and a stray cat chose this moment to make her appearance.

It all happened in a lightning flash. The corner of the table-cloth, which hung low, had caught on a loose brass stud in the dog's collar. He made a lunge for the cat and dragged the cloth with him—and the crash of falling china was enough to break one's heart. Lucy nearly swooned, Mary fell into a chair and covered her face with her hands. Bevis, held back by the weight of the table-cloth with the dishes piled upon it, howled in despair, while I wished to seize the carving knife and drive it into his vitals.

It was a terrifying moment. I stooped and loosened Bevis, and gave him a cuff on the head that silenced him. Then I glanced at Mary and was horrified to see her shoulders shaking. I knew it was not grief which stirred her so.

"Never mind, John," said Lucy, rallying bravely. "Accidents will happen, and besides"—she laughed hysterically—"this seems to be your day for accidents."

"It certainly does," I admitted warmly. "I shall thank heaven when tomorrow comes."

And then Nellie dashed into the room, bursting with importance.

"Mamma!" she exploded. "Tommy's got the mumps—the mumps! We met Dr. Savage on the street, an' he said so!"

"What?" cried Mary, springing up. "Tommy's got the mumps?"

"Yes'm. He's swelling up somethin' orful!"

The youngster clasped her hands in suppressed but pleasurable excitement. Tommy was entering. He looked a little frightened and a little proud. He felt himself to be something of a hero. His mother flew to him and examined his parotid glands. There was a distinct swelling to be seen on the left side near the ear. Mary moved away from him.

"Poor baby!" babbled Lucy. "Don't you mind; it won't be long—only a few days. See! Here's your Aunt Mary and Uncle John. And look at the beautiful dog! Come here, doggie—nice doggie!"

She snapped her fingers at Bevis in approved fashion, and he sauntered over to them. As he passed Nellie she reached out and caught at his plumy tail. Ordinarily the dog would not have noticed the little tweak she gave it, but now he paused and snarled at the child. Lucy gathered her brood to her as a hen draws its chicks under its wings.

"You said," she accused Mary in a quavering voice, "that he was gentle as a lamb! A wolf, you must have meant!"

The situation was saved, so I hoped, by the expressman driving up with our trunks. But I reckoned without Mary.

"Stop him!" she commanded. "Tell him not to take them off. We are going away. You have never had the mumps, John. Neither have I. They're dangerous to grown people." She shied still farther away from Tommy. "Quick, John—stop that man!"

I left the room hastily, glad to withdraw from a scene I felt was bordering on tragedy. In a few minutes Mary followed me, bringing our grip. Bevis was at her heels. Just what occurred between the sisters I never knew, for I never asked. I threw the suitcase into the wagon and bade the man carry the outfit to the Hartman House, the best hotel in the place. Then we set off down the street.

"I suppose," Mary remarked presently, "it will take several days to tell. We've got to eat a pickle every night before going to bed. If it locks our jaws we're in for it! we'll have to go home as fast as we can."

"I'm beginning to think it would be a wise thing to go now," I hinted. "We could make a fresh start next week. And meantime we could pick out a new set of china for Lucy. I guess we're stung for a twenty spot all right."

My wife received this coldly.

"It will be time enough to talk of that later," she returned. "Tomorrow we will go on to Fred's. He has a much better disposition than Lucy, and his wife is a dear. And their children are old enough not to be a nuisance."

In this manner we beguiled the walk to the Hartman House. They would not allow us to have Bevis in our room so I turned him over to the porter, promising him a dollar if he would care for the dog as the apple of his eye, and paying him a half in advance.

We decided we would not have the trunks sent up, but would make out with what we had in the suitcase until we reached Hamilton, Fred's home. Mary said we would stay with her brother four days and thus somewhat balance our losses at Dresden. This would bring us on schedule time to Tom, my cousin at Greenwood. The train left for Hamilton at seven in the morning, and to save trouble I bought our tickets at once. The head porter attended to this for me, and to the checking of the double trunk; and although I tipped him a half dollar he handed me the solitary brass duplicate, I thought, with a scornful eye.

It must have been along toward five o'clock the next morning when we were aroused by a clangor of bells in the town and a terrific row in the hotel. Pale and trembling we sprang out of bed. Someone was crying "Fire!"

"Bevis!" choked my wife. "Quick, John! He'll be burned alive!"

"To the deuce with Bevis!" I shouted. "Get into your clothes!"

I helped her as best I could, and then scrambled into the most necessary parts of my own apparel. We rushed into the hall, which was filled with smoke, and down the stairs. The rotunda was crowded with frightened guests.

"There's no danger!" bawled the clerk, who was energetically meeting all comers. "Just a blaze in the cafe. They'll have it out in a minute. Go back to your rooms."

But Mary wouldn't obey. "We must go down to the basement and hunt up Bevis," she decreed.

We did so—and Bevis wasn't there! We found out later that someone had loosed him, and he had shot out into the street. I shall pass in review as rapidly as possible the events of that morning. I sprinkled dimes and quarters around as if I had sprung a leak. I had a dozen youngsters scouring the town for Bevis. We lost the early train, of course, but there was another at twelve which we hoped to be able to take. Finally, about eleven o'clock, a small boy appeared leading Bevis with a string. An angry man accompanied the boy.

"Are you the owner of this brute?" he demanded.

"I am," I answered curtly.

"Then you'll settle with me," came back the man, wrathfully, "or I'll swear out a warrant agin' you for keepin' a vicious dog."

"What has he done?" piped Mary tremulously. "He's gentle as a——"

"Done?" broke in the man rudely. "He bit me, ma'm, that's all he done. He dashed into my shop like a ragin' devil. I tried to kick him out, an' he bit me on the leg an' went an' hid in the cellar. This boy—more fool he—pulled him out, an' I've come down here with him to see what you're goin' to do about it. I oughter have the beast shot, that's what I oughter do."

Mary recoiled from him in shuddering dismay.

"You horrid, wicked man!" she gasped.

"Did he draw blood?" I asked the fellow.

"Good Lord!" he snorted. "So you got to have blood to make a bite hurt, hey? No, he didn't draw no blood, but I'll show you the print of all his teeth on the calf of my leg."

He stooped to roll up his trousers, but I stopped the immodest exhibition. To cut a long story short, I settled with the scoundrel for ten dollars, and we caught the noon train. Our trunks had gone on by the one before.

At Hamilton we first attempted to attend to the delivery of the trunks to Fred's house. They were in the baggage room all right—but separated! Some miscreant on the train had found himself in need of rope, I presume, and had taken ours. To my trunk was attached the check; Mary's was checkless. The baggage-master refused to deliver it to us without an order from the superintendent, and that person was away; wouldn't be back until eight the following morning. There was nothing to do but wait for him.

Hamilton is a city of some size and boasts a motor cab service; so we took a taxi to Fred's house. We found the place deserted—shut up tight. Inquiry of the next door neighbors elicited the information that Fred had received a long distance telephone call that morning early, and immediately thereafter he and his family had hurried off, taking with them a varied assortment of handbags.

"It's Lucy's work!" declared my wife.

"Lucy?" I repeated, mystified.

"Can't you see through a wall with a hole in it?" rejoined Mary acrimoniously. "Lucy heard about the fire this morning, of course, and laid it on us, along with the china and mumps and other things. She called up Fred and told him we were hoodooed, and he—he has simply run away. The coward!"

"Well, by George, I don't blame him," I retorted. "We are regular calamity breeders, my dear—you've got to acknowledge that. I think we'd better ring off on this trip right here."

"Not much," cried Mary. "We'll stop at a hotel overnight and go on to Tom's; and we'll stay with him a week and make up for all this."

We went to the Cawthorne Hotel. I chose it because our chauffeur said it was new and fireproof. From this I argued that it wouldn't burn down or the roof fall in. As we drove up to it Mary exclaimed with pleasure. The building stood on the bank of an artificial lake, covering perhaps an acre. Several boats were moving around on the lake and Mary grew keen for a row.

We had the suitcase sent up to our room, and then I sought the porter who had taken Bevis in charge. I saw to it that Mary went with me. I had noticed how she flinched that morning when I parted with the X to the man at the Hartman House, and I was resolved to spend money like a drunken sailor to effect the cure that was in progress.

"I presume," I said to the porter, looking steadfastly at him, and drawing down the eye farthest from Mary—"I presume all you fellows charge the same for looking after dogs over night—two dollars?"

AT SIGHT OF THE CONTENTS SHE FELL BACK INTO MY ARMS.

The man was Irish, and "on" in a jiffy.

"The regular union scale, sir," he answered.

I produced two silver dollars and handed them to him.

"It's an outrage," I pronounced in my sternest tones, "but there's no help for it, I suppose. I left home only yesterday morning, and what with another this dog has already cost me a fortune."

I heard Mary draw in her breath.

"It comes high, sir, traveling with dogs," replied the porter readily, "partikerly when you're fussy about what they has to eat. Anything special, sir, you want to order for this dog?"

"Oh, do come away, John!" called Mary. "I want to go for a row."

She walked off and left us. The porter and I grinned at each other, then I followed my wife out to the lakeside. There was only one boat left at the float. It was a flat-bottomed affair, and looked clumsy but safe. Mary settled herself in the stern and I took the oars. It was after four. The sun was declining and a stiff little breeze had sprung up from the east.

We were getting on beautifully. I had made almost the circuit of the pond and was raptly engaged in watching a flirtation under a big elm on the neighboring bank when a smothered cry drew my attention to the partner of my own peculiar joys.

"John!" she exclaimed. "My feet are soaking! This boat leaks like a sieve!"

Sure enough, down by the stern the water was fairly bubbling in through the bottom seam.

"I guess we'd better go back," I said, and pulled for the landing.

We were about five yards from shore when we ran on a partially sunken log—ran on it with a crash. Mary screamed. I believe I swore—and she screamed again. By dint of hard pushing I got the boat off—and then, as I am a Christian man, half the bottom of that old tub dropped out, and we found ourselves standing in the water up to our waists. It was quite apparent now why this particular craft had been left alone at the landing.

We went to bed while the chambermaid dried and ironed out our respective garments.

"It's no use, Mary," I observed, punching my pillow into shape, "we might as well knock under and go home on the next train. I believe if they were to lock us up in a safety vault an earthquake would come along and smash it."

"You forget my trunk," whimpered Mary, in turn punching her pillow. "It's a perfect scandal the way that man at the depot acts. And I want to say one thing, John Webb; if you had properly fastened those trunks together—with wire or something—I wouldn't be in this predicament now. That's all!"

It was enough, but I laid hold on silence like a man and wrung a victory from it.

At eight in the morning we were at the depot, only to learn that the superintendent had not yet returned. He had been detained somewhere down the road. Mary was desperate.

"Look at me!" she shrilled at the baggage-master. "I fell in the lake last night! My dress is ruined! I must have my clothes."

But the man shook his bullet head obstinately, the while he favored me with a sidelong glance; and all at once I saw a light and was guided by it. Whereupon the fellow agreed to let us have the trunk if we could describe the contents. At this Mary rattled off a list of articles that would be found in the tray, and producing her key opened the trunk. She threw up the lid—and fell back into my arms.

The tray was filled with some man's things. On top of all was a big blue handkerchief case bearing the initials "M. W." in pink silk. We stood looking down stupidly at the array of haberdashery.

"John," said Mary in tones of awe, "am I going mad, or am I simply bewitched?"

"And I paid two dollars for this privilege," I returned irrelevantly.

A burst of laughter from the baggageman's assistant broke the spell. It was a moment or so before he could speak, so consuming was his merriment.

"By cricky!" he gasped at last. "It's the best joke ever happened. You got Matt Williams' trunk and he's got your'n."

He went off in another convulsion, and his superior showed sigs of joining him.

"Shut up!" I barked savagely. "This is no joke, to us. I'll take the matter up to headquarters if you don't instantly explain what all this means."

The threat had its effect.

"It's this way," said the young fellow. "Matt Williams belongs in this town. He took 21—leaves here 2 A. M.—for Rosedale where he's going to get married today."

"Rosedale!" we echoed, numb with surprise.

"Yes. He's going to marry Ann Crowley, a girl who used to live here. Matt blew in last night with his new steamer trunk, marked just like your'n, and the same size. We must have got

POUTY POLLY

A Story for Little Folks

By Etta Webb

Copyright, 1915, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher, Inc.

THE Holly family was at supper. There were five of the Hollys, beginning with Father Holly who was a much engrossed business man. Mother Holly, who managed everything and everybody beautifully even Irish Ann, the by-the-day help. Molly and Polly who had just missed being twins and looked near enough alike to be twins anyway, and Billy the boy and the youngest who was a born tease.

Supper had got as far as the cake which was cocoanut, a kind that Polly did not like. She had therefore not taken any and her manner showed plainly that she felt snubbed because Molly's preference for cocoanut had been considered before her own for chocolate. However, nobody appeared to notice that anything was wrong until Billy, whose bright eyes had been studying Polly's face and empty plate alternately, burst out in an undertone chant:

"Polly's pouty, Polly's sad, Needs some chocolate cake to make her glad."

Polly's cheeks flamed. Molly turned in surprise to look at her, and Mother Holly was just opening her lips to reprove Billy when the door-bell rang in that sudden, sharp way which usually means something more important than a caller. So instead of reproving Billy, mother said simply:

"Please go to the door, Polly."

Polly returned with a special delivery letter for her mother.

"Well, the letter is from Aunt Libby," Mrs. Holly said. "Listen! She says: 'My dear niece: It is very lonesome for Pa and me since our dear boy went away as we cannot leave the farm much, especially in cold weather. I want to know if you won't send one of your girls up here to make us a little visit—say over Sunday. Pa will meet her at the station any Saturday night. We will take good care of her. We need somebody who is young and lively to chirk us up a bit. Hoping that you will send her right away I am your loving aunt, Libby Shattuck.'"

Mrs. Holly ceased reading and there was silence around the table, then father spoke cheerfully:

"Now there's a chance for one of you girls to have a visit and make two old people very happy besides. Which one of you is going? You'll have to decide quick, for tomorrow is Friday."

"I think," said mother Holly very quietly, "that Molly will go this time. Won't you, Molly?"

Molly drew her breath in quickly.

"Why, of course I'll go, mother," she said.

And mother looked straight into Molly's eyes and smiled her sweetest. When she smiled in that way it was like ten thousand banners waving you on to victory. You would have rushed into anything almost for the sake of that smile.

So it was settled then and there.

After the table was cleared and the dishes washed and Molly and Polly were sitting at opposite sides of the study-table in their room, Polly said:

"I'm glad I haven't got to go. My goodness, just think of being cooped up in that little farmhouse with two people as old as Aunt Libby and Uncle Joe when the ice and the skating-weather is perfect. And the Camp-fire girls have a chafing-dish party Saturday night—I guess you've forgotten that."

"I haven't forgotten anything," Molly replied. "Mother wants me to go and that's all there is of it. I guess Aunt Libby must be awfully anxious or she'd never have sent that special delivery letter. I'm going to do my best to give them a good time. I shall take my newest games and everything else I can think of that will entertain them. It's only for two days anyway."

"Two days can be awfully long sometimes," said Polly, "and I'm glad I'm not you."

All the same she felt a little knawing tooth of uneasiness. For she knew perfectly well why mother was sending Molly instead of herself. Molly was so joyous, so bent on having a good time always. Nothing ever upset her or made her cross or pouty. And then she was such a friendly young person. When she ran up the street on a gray afternoon wearing her scarlet coat she had a wave or kiss or smile for every baby and old lady and invalid on the street. And it was odd how all the babies and old ladies and sick folks got to the window just in time to see Molly going by. Nobody ever noticed Polly in that way, but then Polly had no scarlet coat. She wondered if it would have made any difference if when they were choosing coats she had taken a scarlet one like Molly's. In her secret heart she knew that all the scarlet coats in the world would not have changed her from what she was. She lacked something that Molly had, and that something was expressed in Billy's mischievous nicknaming of them—Pouty Polly and Merry Molly. Molly certainly was merry and as for Polly being pouty—why, how could she help being pouty when something was always going wrong? Of course in this instance she had the better of it for Molly would be shut up on the farm two whole days while she was skating and frolicking with the Camp-fire girls. Still she could not help wishing that mother had felt she was the one to go and cheer up those two lonely old people.

Sometime that night Molly woke up with a sore throat, and in the morning it was worse.

Mother Holly of course said that school was out of the question and sent for the doctor.

When Polly came home from school at one o'clock she found Molly better but forbidden to go out of doors lest she take more cold.

"Then she won't be able to go to Aunt Libby's?" Polly asked.

"No, and I sent a special delivery letter for Uncle Joe to meet her at the station at five o'clock. Polly——" Then mother Holly paused just a moment studying Polly's face. "I'm going to ask you to go in her place."

Polly jumped.

"Oh, mother, and I've planned——" she stopped suddenly. There was such a kind of achey look the snow into their faces.

"I know," Mrs. Holly said, gravely, "but don't you think, dear, it is better for you to make some slight sacrifice than that Uncle Joe should have the trouble of going all that way to the station in vain besides taking home nothing but disappointment to Aunt Libby? You are young, Polly and you don't know what it means to be seventy years old, away from every one, and their only boy that they love best in all the world thousands of miles away in South America. I have no way of getting another message to them today and unless you go I'm afraid they are going to be dreadfully disappointed."

Then Polly marched out her last reserves.

"But it isn't I they want," she said. "It's Molly. She's so bright and full of fun. I shan't know a thing to do——"

"You will do the best you can, I'm sure," mother replied and her smile set the banners to waving so fast and fine that Polly cried:

"I'll go, mother. I'll do anything you say."

Somehow, though she never knew how, she got ready. There was so much to do and so little time to do it in. Then presently she found herself at the station with father. She was put aboard and there stood father on the platform waving good byes while she looked at him with misty eyes. The train moved and she was on her way at last.

In the clear gray twilight she stepped upon the platform of a tiny station in the midst of frozen white fields. The sky was daintily flushed and in it the new moon showed like a bright new sickle. It was strange how much prettier the afterglow looked out here than in town, Polly thought. As she stood looking at it, caught by the beauty, she heard the creaking of footsteps and there was Uncle Joe in his old fur coat, cap and mittens.

"Well, well," he said. "I just told Libby that I'd bring you home with me. She's hustling like all possessed to get the taters baked and the chicken fried and if you hain't brought a good appetite along with you she'll be the disappointedest woman in Delaware county. Well, well. To be sure. I guess now the train's gone along we can go out and get into the cutter. Old Mike acts up like fun every time he gets near a train of cars. Old feller seems to forget that he ain't a colt any more."

He laughed softly to himself and led Polly to the sleigh. There stood old Mike with a coat like black velvet, his head up and his ears pointed toward the flying train. Polly got into the sleigh and Uncle Joe tucked her in with thick furry robes and away they went facing the new moon all the way with old Mike's nimble heels kicking the snow into their faces.

"He used to be the goingest horse in these parts and he hain't got over it yet," Uncle Joe said. He looked admiringly round into Polly's fresh face. "I guess you like sleigh-riding, Molly, as well as your ma did."

Polly was just going to tell him that she was not Molly when old Mike spun in between two fence posts and slowed down before a gray house with windows that told the story of all the warmth and light and cheer there was to be found inside. And at the door was Aunt Libby smiling a welcome.

"Well, Molly, child, I'm right glad to see you," she said as she kissed Polly. "Come right in and get warm."

"Oh, I'm not cold one bit. We came so fast. But, Aunt Libby, I'm not——"

But Aunt Libby had smelled something burning and had flown to snatch her chicken from the stove.

Polly took off her things and sat down beside the glowing stove. She looked about her with interested eyes. Once, a long time ago she had visited Aunt Libby and Uncle Joe and she had kept with her a faint memory of how things had been then. It seemed that nothing was changed. Apparently the same maltese cat was asleep on the same cushion, the same geraniums glowed between the looped-back curtains, the same copy of Hoffmann's Boy Jesus was on the wall. But it was a thousand times cheerier and prettier than she had thought it could be.

Uncle Joe came stamping in and Aunt Libby called supper. And such a supper as it was! Polly had to say:

"Why, this nut-cake tastes exactly like mother's!"

Aunt Libby laughed.

"Well, I taught your mother to make nut cake," she said.

They kept heaping Polly's plate up until she could not eat another bite. And Polly, longing with all her heart to repay them for so much kindness, tried her best to be as gay and entertaining as Molly would have been under the same circumstances.

After supper she helped Aunt Libby wash dishes. Then Uncle Joe brought in a dish of nuts—chestnuts and hickory nuts and beechnuts grown on his own beloved hill—and another dish of fat red apples from the musky bins down cellar, and set them beside the lamp on the red-covered center table. And Aunt Libby opened the old piano in the corner, dusted the keys with her apron and said, wistfully:

"Now don't be afraid to use the piany, whenever you feel like it, Molly. I know you're great hands for music at home. And pa and I like to hear a tune sometimes ourselves, though we can't either of us play a note and never could."

"Thank you, Aunt Libby," Polly said. She walked over to the piano, laid her hand on it and faced them earnestly. Her voice was just a little unsteady as she spoke for it was hard to tell them that she was not Merry Molly, but Pouty Polly. "I want to tell you that I'm not Molly. Molly had the sore throat and mother sent me in her place. I'm Polly."

"Polly, eh?" said Uncle Joe. "Well, what difference does it make—Polly or Molly? I always get you two girls mixed anyway. I guess it was Polly we wanted in the first place, what say, Ma? Don't suppose you could play 'Home, Sweet Home,' could you, Mol—Polly?"

"Why, that's the very first tune I ever learned to play," cried Polly, sitting down at the piano.

How she made her fingers fly! And then gathering courage from their praise she sang some of the old songs that her father often called for and some of the new ballads which her teacher approved. Glancing over her shoulder she saw the two old people sitting in attitudes of listening content. Aunt Libby with her knitting idle in her hands, Uncle Joe with his hand behind his ear that he might lose no sound or syllable.

All too soon it was half-past nine and bedtime. Aunt Libby lit Polly's lamp and prepared to light her to the spare room. But before she went Polly went to Uncle Joe and kissed him good night, she kissed Aunt Libby too, at the bedroom door. And when a few moments later she cuddled down into the deep, soft bed she heard through the register in the floor the two old voices in happy communion:

"I always had an idea that Molly was the pleasant one," Uncle Joe said.

"We must have got 'em mixed somehow," said Aunt Libby.

Then Polly slept and dreamed that she was Molly.

It was Monday morning before, as Aunt Libby said, "they'd had more than a chance to turn around." And by noon Polly was kissing Molly who had come to the station to meet her.

"My throat was well Saturday and I went to the chafing-dish party after all," said Molly. "We had a grand time. I thought of you, Polly, and was so sorry you weren't there."

"Well, you needn't have been sorry," Polly confided. "I was having a good time myself. And actually I made them have a good time. Yes, I did. You see, I was on my honor, Molly. They began by thinking that I was you and even after I told them I wasn't they kept getting our personalities mixed. I gave up trying to straighten them out and just did my best to be like you—as far as being jolly was concerned. And what do you think, they said if you were Merry Molly I must be Pleasant Polly. And I'm going to be Pleasant Polly after this all the time. You'll see!"

Comfort's League of Cousins

want me to decide for them. Of course the very best thing to do under such circumstances is to cut the whole bunch, for real love is never a thing that leaves us in doubt. It points to one person and never deviates a millionth of an inch from its course, making that one individual the only visible thing in the universe and making everyone else of no consequence whatsoever. If I tell you Clara, to turn your back on these three suitors of yours that won't be answering your question, so I think I had better analyze each of the suitors and see which promises to be the best catch. The farmer looks pretty good to me. Maybe if you married the farmer, especially in Texas, before you'd had him three minutes the boll weevil might yank down the door of your love nest, tear him from your arms and elope with him. A Texas correspondent informed me that some boll weevils stand six feet high with their shoes on, and seven and a half feet tall with them off. Anyway until all the boll weevils are arrested and put in jail it would be risky to marry a Texas farmer. Then too a cyclone might come along when he was out in the field and blow him into the arms of some fat lady in Hoboken. That means you would never get your farmer back. Then again it might forget to rain for a few years and you might lose all your crops and hubby go bankrupt, and no woman has any use for a bankrupt husband, at least I never had. The sawmill fellow seems to have brighter prospects, but then it isn't likely that he'll be able to get work for more than a year or two. The forests are rapidly disappearing and there won't be any lumber to cut. I know a girl who married a sawmill operator. Two days after they were married, he was brought home in four sections. He had been monkeying with the buzz saw and you know what happens to a man when he does that. He had gone to work a solo, and came home a quartette. Now Clara, suppose you had married the sawmill fellow and you put a couple of your biscuits in his dinner pail. Well you know the rest don't you? He would accidentally drop one of your biscuits right in front of the buzz saw, then you'd see the buzz saw's teeth go flying in all directions and the mill would have to shut down while you took the saw to the dentist and had a set of new gold teeth made for it, and you'd have a dentist's bill which you would not be able to pay for the balance of your life. Personally I think you would be happiest with the squirrel hunter. You see what an inestimable advantage he would have over the other fellows inasmuch as they'd be home all the time while he wouldn't. A husband with a laudable desire to efface himself has such an immense advantage over the one who is always under your nose, the kind that you can't turn round without falling over. Of course there is always the danger that he might have a deadly encounter with an enraged squirrel and get torn to pieces by the infuriated animal and be brought home to you on a stretcher, but for that matter all brave squirrel hunters take these desperate chances, so don't worry about that. With lamb chops thirty-five cents a pound and porterhouse steak three dollars an inch, the man who can supply the family larder with squirrel meat at nothing a ton is surely a Godsend to any family. Why I'd marry one myself if I could find him. You might put canned squirrel meat on the market and gather in a fortune and you could make yourself a nice mink coat with the squirrel skins. All the furriers in New York are doing that, why not you? personally I think the squirrel hunter has great advantages over his rivals and as I said before the greatest advantage of all is that he won't be home much.

MAINE.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:

I am twenty-five years of age, and a short time ago a young man eight years my senior, came to me in a very business like and gentlemanly manner and asked me to marry him. He has no bad habits, has a nice farm, horses, cattle, and some young stock, and owns it all, and has earned it all without assistance from anyone else. He is from nice people, who are wealthy and an only boy. But, here is the obstacle—I do not love him. What would you advise me to do?

May I see my reply in the COMFORT and please do not publish my address. SKIP.

I think it would be very unwise of you to marry a man if you did not love him. Matrimony without love is like a dinner without food, a well without water, a field without grass, a forest without trees. To have to cohabit with a person, to be forced to surrender oneself wholly and totally when called upon, as though one were a block of wood or any other piece of inanimate property, submitting to the desires and wishes of a second party whose touch may be repulsive, is to my mind a condition too horrible to be contemplated, and yet thousands of women become the chattel slaves of men today, because the struggle for existence has sapped their nerve, spirit, respect and vitality, and made food, clothes and shelter, otherwise a home (or the semblance of it) an absolute necessity, to be obtained at any cost. Many a woman has married a man she didn't care a rap for before marriage, and has loved him devotedly some months after the wedding band has been slipped on her finger. But these cases I believe are the exception. Generally women who enter into these loveless marriages find their heart hunger appeased by the love they lavish on the children that result from these unions, the husband being merely tolerated, a necessary evil in a marriage that was not a sacrament, but a sacrifice, a business arrangement solely and wholly. A woman who enters into an arrangement of this kind, merely transforms herself into a piece of merchandise, converts her body, soul and personality into a commodity that she exchanges with a second party, for his home and protection. She would, oh, so much rather marry someone she loved, but she is getting on in years and twenty-five does seem so terribly old to some foolish girls. Then too she thinks of the long, weary, lonely years ahead, with youth and attractiveness gone, the ability to find employment gradually growing harder, the ability to work gradually growing less, and the knowledge that all she most desired and craved in life—love and companionship—gradually drifting beyond her reach. She is liable, with such a dismal outlook, to take any old thing in the male line that happens to come along, even if the balance of her life be spent in regret. The divorce mills are grinding people out of matrimony almost as fast as they can wiggle in. People dash into marriage today as if it were a joke, only too often to find it a yoke. The fellow a girl could love can't afford to marry her and the fellow who would perhaps be willing to marry her has nothing to recommend him but a fat wad and a roof. Cupid is not only blind today, but he is bound by the shackles of economic stress, of low wages, uncertain employment, the high cost of loving and the high cost of living. When the young fellow earning a moderate wage gets married, he gets along fairly well until the stork arrives, then the harness of matrimony begins to grip him around the withers. All the odd pennies that went for vaudeville and movie shows, beer and tobacco, are needed for baby. This is where the young bride finds out whether she has married a man or a rotter. When it comes to the point as to whether hubby's spare change shall go for cigarettes or certified milk, cigarettes win and wife wakes up one fine morning to find that hubby has beaten it to the tall timber and the waving Alfalfa. Matrimony is a very serious proposition. It is either heaven or hell. There is no happy or unhappy medium between these two extremes. Men and women should before entering into a life partnership, have every opportunity to know each other thoroughly, not merely on pleasure jaunts but under conditions which fully test the character and disposition and worth while qualities of the two contracting parties. I'm glad "Skip" has asked for my advice, though nothing I can say will influence her one way or the other. We all have to work out our own salvation and it is a blessed good thing to know that even in the matrimonial field, many more reach the goal of happiness than fall by the wayside of failure. "Skip" my dear, give that excellent young fellow a trial acquaintance of say a year. Long before that time is up your heart will tell you whether you want to take him in your arms or throw him out of the window. Don't however, wait until after marriage to find out whether you want to kiss him or hammer him over the head with the carpet sweeper. Mind you decide that before that gold band is on your finger. If you don't love him for himself, don't love him for his pocketbook, or you too will be making possible grist for the divorce mill.

DEAR UNCLE:

Am sending you under separate cover some literature that I wish you would read. You seem to have such sound logic on most topics that I am surprised you do not read your Bible aright. I can't understand why anyone can get the Sabbath so mixed with the man made day—Sunday.

Please read what I have sent and if you feel interested (and I can't see why you won't), write for further information to the Tract Society.

From a Well Wisher.

Dear Friend: I know the best of intentions prompt you to send me your literature, but I'm already deluged with sectarian publications which are all carefully preserved and handed over unread to the Salvation Army, when its wagon calls weekly, and sold by them to the pulp mill at so much a pound. Print paper serves a very useful purpose inasmuch as it keeps alive, to my mind, the most useful and Christ-like organization on earth. When I glance at the publications of religious sects my heart and soul are aweary of the bigotry and narrowness so many religious bodies display. If you could see the intolerance, the ignorance, meanness, hatred and all uncharitableness that crops out in so many letters that I receive from hyphenated Christians, your stomach would turn over. At times I feel like misquoting Shakespeare and saying: "A plague on all your houses." Thank heaven my days are too full of the real business of life to bother about the miserable little religious technicalities that divide the flood tide of Christianity into so many scores of fiddling, unproductive, paltry little streams, instead of encouraging it as much as possible to flow on like one big, mighty river, sweeping sin, superstition, bigotry, intolerance, greed and error before it, carrying on its broad bosom the spiritual hopes and aspirations of all mankind. Mark Twain said it was a good thing in a way there were so many different sects as they could all keep a watchful eye on one another, and many of them needed watching. I don't mind the watchful eye but I do despise the envious and uncharitable eye. I am told at least a dozen times a week if I don't change my views and believe as this or that denomination believes I'll go straight to hell. I'll take a chance on that and lose no sleep over it. Heaven it seems to me will be anything but a restful, congenial place if some of the people I know ever succeed in getting there. Now friend Well Wisher, if I read my Bible through a thousand times a day, it would never bother me, nor occur to me to be bothered as to whether we should observe the Sabbath on Sunday, Saturday or Wednesday, on the seventh day of the week or the first day of the week. I don't care what old day in the week Sunday or the Sabbath or the Lord's Day, or any

More Power to Your Elbow

PERHAPS an elbow does not seem of much importance to you who are interested in complexions, and pretty hair, and dainty arched eyebrows, and beautifully manicured nails?

But it is important, just the same! The girl who wants to look always sweet and fresh, smooth-skinned and dainty, cannot afford to overlook even an elbow!

As a matter of fact, in warm weather, when short sleeves are so alluring, the elbow is a most conspicuous portion of the feminine anatomy.

Haven't you seen girls in airy summer frocks, whose soft arms looked wonderfully pretty and graceful in the loose, short, transparent sleeves, but when they reached up to pin on a hat, or leaned an elbow on a table, or in any other way brought an elbow into public notice, behold; it was roughened and yellow, and everything unlovely!

Most elbows aren't entirely clean! You don't believe me? It's true, nevertheless. A hasty washing with a soft cloth, or even a perfectly correct quarter of an hour in the bath-tub, will not suffice. Our little friend, the camel's-hair complexion brush, even, is a trifle too gentle for the task of making the elbows clean. Choose a nail brush, not too stiff, of course, but new enough to have much of its original firmness left.

With this, before retiring, scrub the elbow thoroughly, using plenty of hot, soapy water. Do not hold the arm straight while doing this, but bend it at the sharpest ange possible, that the skin may be stretched to its fullest extent. After scrubbing the elbow, bathe it with a soft cloth and many waters, so no tiniest particle of soap may be left to coarsen the skin.

Then massage a little cold cream into the point of the elbow, and apply the following lotion, not only to the elbow but the entire arm.

Bleaching Lotion

Rose-water, one pint; tincture of tolu, twenty drops; tincture of benzoin, one fluid dram. If any special care of the elbow has been neglected for a long time, it is quite possible, on a careful inspection, that it will be found to be very rough, indeed, and covered with gooseflesh. In such case you may use use toilet pumice and rub the skin gently with it until the surface has been smoothed. Apply cold cream immediately after, and, of course, be careful not to be too heroic in wielding the pumice stone.

If the elbow is very yellow, a good bleach should be used twice a week for six times. Of course, it will not do to bleach the elbow alone, as the contrast between it and the arm would not be a gratifying one. Therefore, prepare some strips of cheese-cloth two inches wide—or, better still, buy a roll of two-inch surgical gauze and after thickly anointing elbow and lower arm with the bleaching paste, wrap the arm round and round with the gauze, beginning above the elbow, and fasten in place at wrist, above elbow, and spirally around the arms by adhesive tape, which you can get in a tin case at your druggist's for five or ten cents.

Bleaching Paste

Rose-water, three ounces; liquid honey (strained), two ounces; yellow wax, one ounce; powdered myrrh, one half ounce; a little glycerine.

Melt the wax in a double boiler, or in a porcelain pan set down in a kettle of boiling water; add to this the myrrh, and beat. Take from the stove, and a little at a time add the honey and rose-water, and as much glycerine as will make the mixture of the consistency of a paste. Put the glycerine in drop by drop, so that you may not thin the mixture too much.

Very dainty young women slip on elbow length lisle or silk gloves over bandages and paste. If you have a discarded pair, with holey fingers, cut into the shape of mitts so that the hands will not be kept too warm. Of course, you will see that the gloves are made spotlessly clean before each wearing.

If the elbow is very sharp, then no doubt the arms are unduly thin, and it is your task to put on a few more pounds of flesh. It is seldom arms are thin unless the whole body is under weight, as well; so I suggest that you put yourself on the milk diet for at least a month. You know just how to do it, because I am always preaching milk diet to you, not only to add flesh to bony figures, but to clear the complexion and set the bodily functions in good order.

If the elbow has deep dimples—not the witching kind which twinkle in and out, and are a real beauty asset, but the kind which lose themselves in heavy masses of flesh, and cause the small boy's remark, "Oh, mamma, Bridget has holes in her elbow." Well, in such case, it is proof positive that your arm is too fat and heavy. What it needs is exercise and massage.

Every night before you go to bed, rub a little cold cream in the palm of your hand and go over the entire length of the opposite arm with a wringing motion, exactly as if you were doing the family washing and had to wring the sheets by hand before putting them in the basket. This is an excellent form of treatment for too fat arms. In addition, practise the following exercise night and morning, and any other time through the day when you happen to feel like it, and have a spare five minutes to devote to a good cause.

To Reduce Arms

Stand with feet together, chin up, chest out, hands shut closely, arms stretched out, horizontally, at sides, on a line with the shoulders. Now stiffen the arms, and without bending the elbows or changing the horizontal position, turn each fist as far around as possible, thus twisting the arms. Twist until the shoulders feel a strain, then twist in the opposite direction. Repeat until the shoulders feel decidedly weary.

This will not only exercise off the surplus fat, if practised persistently, but it will strengthen the arm, and make it supple and graceful in its movements.

I can't emphasize sufficiently the importance of exercising all the muscles and joints of the body. The work you are doing, whatever it may be, no doubt is sufficient exercise for some part of the body—perhaps the back, perhaps the legs, perhaps the arms—but you may be perfectly certain that plenty of other muscles are getting into lazy habits from disuse. This means, later, stiff knees, and pudgy ankles and too fat abdomens and thick waists and flat busts, and round shoulders, and oh! so many more physical shortcomings that I can't take time to catalogue them.

Aren't we foolish, girls, to let ourselves grow unattractive in even the most trivial particular, when five or ten minutes a day would keep us lithe and graceful and every muscle doing its full duty?

Suppose we resolve that we'll not let a day go by without this personal care of ourselves. What do you say? Yes? Then it's a promise!

Answers to Questions

Rose O'Neil, E. A. S., Earl C. and others.—The best way to remove superfluous hair is to anoint it with peroxide of hydrogen one day and aqua ammonia the next. The peroxide will bleach the hair to invisibility and the ammonia, in time, kills the roots. You could use tweezers to pull out prominent hairs, but should touch the spot at once with ammonia or alcohol. It will take quite a few months before you will obtain the results you desired.

Stasia H.—Indeed, I am very glad to give you a formula for a neck bleach. Is this the one you mean?

Cleopatra Neck Bleach

Strained honey, one ounce; lemon juice, one teaspoonful; oil of bitter almonds, six drops; whites of two eggs; enough fine oatmeal to make a fine paste.

Spead this thickly on a piece of cotton cloth, three inches in width, and tie as a bandage around the throat at night. Four or five of these applications should bleach the neck to a satiny whiteness. Remember, this is not a face bleach, and that oil of bitter almonds is a poison and must not be swallowed or left in the reach of children. I hope your neck will be as white as milk the next time I hear from you. Be careful to scrub it thoroughly daily with a complexion brush and hot soapy water, and rinse it in many waters.

K. S.—I do not sell any prepared cosmetics or charge the members of my Pretty Girls' Club for any advice. I have asked the bookkeeping department to return the money you enclosed. As to the Epsom Salts Reducing Paste, probably you did not use it long enough but if your trouble is mainly a too fat neck, try practising the following exercise night and morning, and occasionally through the day if you have time:

To Reduce Fat Neck

Stretch the chin out and up, and throw the head back on the shoulders as far as possible. Now turn the head as far toward the right as you can; to the left; to the right, etc. Practise for five minutes. Now drop the head forward on the chest and roll it to the right, raise it, drop it toward the back, roll it to the left, drop it on the chest, in other words, describe a complete circle with it! Do this for another five minutes. If persevered in, these exercises will reduce a fleshy neck and give it good outlines.

R. A. P.—I am very glad to give you the formula for the Vaucaire Bust tonic. The galega must be perfectly fresh or you will not get good results. No old materials must be used.

Vaucaire Bust Tonic

Liquid extract of galega (goat's rue), ten grams; lacto-phosphate of lime, ten grams; tincture of fennel ten grams; simple syrup, four hundred grams.

The dose is two soupspoonfuls in water before every meal.

Anxious.—The Vaucaire Bust tonic ((see answer to R. A. P.) is recommended for increasing the bust; but I am attaching directions for an exercise I should like you to practise to bring about the same results. Gentle massage with a cake of cocoa-butter which you can buy at the drug-store will also help. Heat the cocoa-butter over a lighted flame and rub the breasts lightly around and around, reheating the cocoa-butter at intervals. Is the rest of your body well developed? If not, take outdoor exercise and eat plenty of good nourishing food.

Exercise to Develop Bust

Stand, heels together, chin up, chest raised. Stretch arms out at sides on a level with shoulders. Keeping every muscle rigid, throw the arms forward until the hands meet. Now throw the arms back again as far as possible, being careful to keep them on line with the shoulders. As you throw the arms back, breathe in deeply; as you throw them forward, exhale slowly.

Mrs. H. E. S.—See answer to "Rose O'Neil." I cannot tell you how long it will take to remove the hairs. It is a slow process, but varies with different people.

Sarah.—Yes, dandruff is bad for the hair and you must get rid of it. Wash the hair once in two weeks, using the soap I have recommended in my answer to "Discouraged One." Dandruff is often the result of too infrequent shampoos, or of insufficient rinsing. Be very careful to rinse the hair until not one particle of soap can remain. If you have a bath tub and bath spray, use the latter to rinse the hair; if you haven't pour pitcherfuls of water on the hair, holding the pitcher as high as possible; and finally fill a small tub and "swim" the hair around and around, plunging, first, the back of the head in, then the top, etc., until your hair is absolutely free from soap. If you leave any soap in the hair, or use a strong kitchen soap, it is apt to produce dandruff. As for freckles, prevention is better than cure, and to keep new ones away you rub a good cold cream into the skin when you get up in the morning, and any time during the day that you are going outdoors. Be careful always to wipe the face thoroughly with a towel after rubbing in the cold cream, so no greasy look may remain. Then powder lightly and wipe the face off with a pad of absorbent cotton or a very soft cloth. Here is a freckle remover:

Freckle Remover

Lactic acid, two ounces; glycerine, one ounce; rose-water, one half ounce. Apply to the freckles with a pad of cotton several times a day.

Discouraged One.—Yes, the dandruff is the cause of your hair trouble. You do not wash it often enough—try washing it once in two weeks, using this soap jelly:

Soap Jelly

Shave fine one bar of pure Castile soap and dissolve in a quart of boiling water. After the soap is dissolved add a teasponful of powdered borax and put in a jar and use as wanted.

School Girl.—See answer to "Sarah." Wear broad-brimmed hats and lisle or silk gloves as much as possible, to protect arms and neck, as well as face. Try using the Old Virginian Face Bleach twice a week for a time.

Old Virginian Face Bleach

Buy a fifty-cent jar of theatrical cream and a pound of almond meal. Beat together one teaspoonful of the cream and some almond meal and add enough hot water to form a thin spreadable paste. Cut two squares of cheese-cloth big enough to cover the face and tear a hole in the center of each square for your nose, so my beauty patient won't smother. Now dampen the squares and spread the paste between. Bathe the face in very hot soapy water, massage for a minute and then apply the pack, patting it down so it touches the face all over. Now lay on two medium-sized, hot, Turkish towels and as soon as they cool replace with others. Keep this up for fifteen minutes, then remove pack, wash face in warm water, then cool, then very cold. Take two of these treatments every seven days for three weeks, when your skin will be beautifully white, and soft as satin. If your face gets red in hot weather, you are probably a little full-blooded or wear your clothing somewhat snug. It is fashionable, now, to have one's corsets very loose about the waist—and it is the only healthy way. Do not eat much meat or starchy food in summer—the green vegetables and fresh fruit are good for you and not so heating.

Daisy, La.—I do not think you have given me your right height—six feet nine inches? You ask if one hundred and forty pounds is all right. Not for that height, but I imagine from your weight and other measurements that this is a mistake. Write me again. I am sorry you find your freckles obstinate. See answer to "Sarah" and try the lotion I have given her. You have probably been outdoors a good deal without properly protecting your skin, and may have to outgrow some of the freckles that bother you. Be more careful of your complexion in the future.

J. L. and N. C.—See answer to "School Girl" for a good face bleach.

Mrs. G. H. S.—See answer to "Rose O'Neil." It will do the deed, but it takes patience and perseverance.

Box 168.—What is your height and weight? Exercise is the best thing for all-around reduction. If you will let me know where you need reducing I shall be very glad to suggest special exercises. In the meantime, cut out potatoes from your diet, fat meats and sweets. With summer coming on, it will be easy, because there are so many good green vegetables and fresh fruits. Cut out candy, cakes, pies, and sweets altogether, for the time being, and eat only at your meals. Also, lessen the amount of food you are taking.

Mrs. H. O. A.—Do not try to peel the skin. Only strong and injurious liquids can do this, and the new skin left exposed is so tender it cracks and wrinkles easily, and tans and freckles, and in a short time is much worse than the old skin one was so anxious to be rid of. Instead use the face bleach recommended to "School Girl," and see my answer to "Sarah" in regard to freckles.

O. P. Q.—It is hard to tell whether you are overweight, because you do not give your height, but I imagine you are probably about fifteen or twenty pounds too heavy. You need lots of outdoor exercise—swimming and rowing and tennis, and every sort of exercise which causes you to use your arms. See answer to "Box 168." A girl of your age needs to be very active indeed—and must be careful not to eat too many sweets.

Mrs. T. F. M.—You can get the toilet ammonia at the drug-store. Just ask for toilet ammonia. If this irritates the skin, dilute with a little water.

D. D.—Frequent shampooing is the best thing to keep the hair fluffy. Wash the hair once in two weeks. See directions to "Discouraged One."

A. M. H.—There is no paste or other preparation which can be used to cover gold fillings. The only remedy would be to have the gold fillings removed and porcelain fillings inserted or a new pivot tooth put in, in place of the filled tooth. A good dentist is the best person to advise you. To remove superfluous hair see answer to "Rose O'Neil."

Gracey.—Here is the formula for an egg shampoo: One pint of hot rain-water, one ounce of spirits of rosemary, yolk of one egg. Beat the mixture thoroughly and, while warm, rub well into the scalp with the fingers. Then rinse thoroughly in many waters. Another god shampoo is the soap jelly given to "Discouraged One."

Fairy.—To make the eyelashes grow, anoint the lids with warm sweet almond oil, being careful not to get any into the eye itself.

E. M. C., Miss R. P., Rose O'Neil and B. E. M.—To reduce your flesh, why not try the Epsom Salts Reducing paste, which can be made as follows:

Novel Reducing Paste

Take half a pound of epsom salts and dissolve in a pint of rain-water, then shave fine one and a half bars of the best white kitchen soap and dissolve in half a quart of boiling rain-water. When partially cool, beat in the epsom salts solution. This preparation must be massaged heavily into the fleshy parts at night and allowed to dry on the skin. When morning comes, wash it off. Continue treatment until flesh disappears. The average loss in weight per week is two pounds. Twice a week before taking above treatment, it would be a good idea to immerse body for a few minutes in a tubful of very hot water into which has been thrown half a boxful of ordinary baking soda. When you feel as if you were about to melt away, jump out of the tub and after drying yourself hastily, wrap up in a woolen blanket. When you cease perspiring, which may not be for half an hour, dry body and rub in the epsom salts.

A few days later the mules were recovered, considerably used up from hard riding but sound in wind and limb.

With the supply of goat's flesh the men were able to subsist for a time without seeking food from others—which might have led to their discovery—and they probably worked their way down the river bottom to the coast or to one of the lower counties and thence, with the help of their own countrymen of whom many are to be found in southwest Texas, they made their way to the Border. Once across the border, it was easy to lose themselves among Mexico's uncounted millions.

Nothing disturbed the Manager so much as to lose one of his men, since it seemed to reflect upon the discipline of his Camp, and upon the efficiency of the men employed to guard the force.

But the escape of the young Mexican convict came about in such a natural way and the Sergeant's report of it was so satisfactory that the matter never came up for investigation.

Although a line man, always under the gun, and therefore without a trusty's opportunities to run away, the convict at the time of his escape, was enjoying special privileges.

It appears that some weeks earlier, he had been attacked by fever, and, according to custom, was put in the hospital. During convalescence his condition became so unsatisfactory that by the doctor's orders he was given the freedom of the Camp.

Too ill to be counted with his fellows when the were locked up for the night in the general building, too weak, as it was supposed, to run away, yet too weak to be constantly looked after, the convict had drifted about the Camp almost unheeded. It thus became an easy matter for him to slip away and join Monte, more than likely by agreement, as Monte had been seen at the Camp the day before.

The circumstance of the slaughtered kid looked like premeditation, and when Monte abandoned his flock to capture the mules or to assist the convict in their capture, the wolves, that had for sometime been hovering in the neighborhood, seized the opportunity to make their raid, kill several does, break up the flock into frightened bunches and at the time Toughey and the children appeared were trying to bring down the tempting prize hung just out of their reach.

Playable with music rolls or by hand without previous practice

"One Can't Tell It From Hand Playing"

Before you play the first selection on your Symphonic Player-Piano ask the other members of your family to step out of the room. Put in a roll of music and play. Then, nine chances out of ten, they will exclaim as did Miss Zimmerman of Michigan, "One can't tell it from hand playing". Many customers have so expressed themselves. This perfect imitation of hand playing is the result of the Symphonic's wonderfully sensitive and instantly responsive "expression controls". These, as you play, accurately interpret your feelings and emotions.

Conducted by Cousin Marion

In order that each cousin may be answered in this column, no cousin must ask more than three questions in one Month.

NOW, my deats, watch the April showers bring the May flowers and are they not very pretty flowers? But do not be too sure you won't catch cold if you go to gather them if you have taken your flannels off too soon. April flowers are very lovely and so are May flowers, but we human beings have to look after our health in this deceptive spring season, so take a word from me and don't be in too much of a hurry to greet the merry springtime. That doesn't sound very cheerful for an April greeting, but I have a cold and I feel so uncomfortable that I must get to work and forget it.

The first letter I open, from a great big pile this month, is from Blue Eyes of Livington, Ky., and she has a real problem. She is twenty-three and isn't a bit silly, and a divorced man wants to marry her and she wants to marry him and her parents don't want her to. His first wife has married again and it seems the right thing for them to marry, though he drinks some but has quit for good, he says. She wants to make herself and everybody else happy, but if she marries she will make her parents unhappy, and if she doesn't she'll make the man and herself unhappy, so that makes two to two and I don't know how to settle it, except for her to wait a while and try to get her parents' consent and also to find out how long he will stay sober under the strain. One thing certain, if he drinks, she should not marry him.

Wearied Heart, Seguin, Texas.—You ask me if he cares for you as much as he did, because he did really care once? Of course, he doesn't. You are so silly about him that he leads you around by the nose and slights you for other girls and walks over you regardless. No man can have much respect for a namby-pamby girl like that. You think it is love, when it isn't anything but yielding to your fear of losing him. The only way to cure it is to bring him up with a round turn and tell him that you have declared your independence and if he wants you be must work for you. That's all. Of course, you are too weak and foolish to do this, but I tell you it is your only cure.

C. V. K., Hastings, Nebr.—I like your sensible way of doing the best you can in your classes all the week and working in a store on Saturdays, earning all your own clothes, but I don't like your falling in love with a boy in the store who is younger than you are, especially as you are not seventeen yet. Stop that part of it and you will have my highest esteem.

L. J., Ft. Towson, Okla.—Never believe any man, old or young, who tells you he will do anything on earth to please you if you ask him. He is lying to you, that is all there is to him. Now drop all the men you know who talk like that and only listen to those who won't promise much, but will perform a good deal when you try them out. And drop this particular one you write to me about. He isn't any good at all and is harm if he gets a chance.

Three Girls, Petty, Texas.—Don't worry over getting my advice about the young man, each of you Three are ready to give up to the winner. He won't ask you your views. When he decides which one he wants, the other two of you will know it without my telling you.

Mizpah, Altamont, Mo.—When a boy of twenty-one wants to marry a girl of twenty-two and she has her doubts about marrying a man younger than herself, the wisest course for her to pursue is to wait until he is old enough to know his own mind. Waiting cannot possibly do any harm and may save the boy, ere it is too late.

Lonesome, Cloverdale, Ala.—If the gentleman you are going with thinks as much of you as he should, he will take the boy who is interfering with your course of true love by the collar and throw him over the fence. Unless he does that, he does not love you.

Troubled, Roane, Tex.—Being an old maid, as you say, you ought to know whether the romance of a poor young man is worth more to you than the money of a rich widower. It is not for me to say, because I might, also being an old maid, tell you that money, not love, makes happiness. I don't think I would, but I might.

J. M. K., Newark, N. J.—If you know him well enough to call him by his first name when you talk to him, you may address him so in a letter. Or if you did not object to his addressing you by your first name, he would hardly object if you were as friendly with him. Of course, if you like him very, very, very much you will never, never, never let him know it. Girls never do! ! ! Thank you "quite some" for your compliment.

Little Girl, Raymond, Miss.—I am glad your better senses came to the rescue and saved you from making two lives unhappy by letting a foolish prejudice prevent your accepting this good man. Possibly he may not be of as blue blood as your family is, but he has the good red blood which counts for more than blue and he is a gentleman who will be the right kind of a husband as many blue-blooded gentlemen are not. You certainly do have my blessing.

Two Cloverland Girls, Vanistique, Mich.—Well, well, nineteen and twenty in a state where free schools abound and yet you begin your letter—about beaus, too—in this way: "Here are two Cloverland girls which for the first time is about to ask advice from you." that's bad enough, but on the same page you write: "These questions is conserning a beaux." And there are others not any better. Now, my dears, when two Michigan girls write a letter like that, I leave it to you if there isn't something else than beaus they should be asking about.

Well-to-do, Richardton, N. Dak.—He had better be a little free with his money than stingy with it, if you expect to marry him, because as his wife you can do the saving. But you can't do the spending if he is close as some are. If he is sober and industrious, I think you might go farther and fare worse, even if your father does not quite approve of him.

F. L. V., Bryan, Texas.—You only think you are unhappy. Girls of your youth always think that when they fall desperately in love with a boy and cannot live without him. I suppose there are a million old and middle-aged fairly happy woman alive and well in this happy land today who at your age thought they could not live without a certain boy they had been spooning with. Cheer up, you'll get over it.

Vaco, Oakville, Texas.—He has proved over and over again that he isn't any good and if you still think you can trust him with your life's happiness, go ahead and try it, but don't say I didn't warn you in time.

Anxious V., Blackville, N. B.—I think a widower who has quiet recently lost his wife should not pay attention to a young girl, or any other woman. If he were any kind of a decent husband to the wife who is gone he would not show her memory such disrespect now. And I can't say anything to the good of a girl who will accept the attention of such a man. Nor for the girl's parents who will permit it, if the girl is too young not to know better.

B. B., Wheeling, W. Va.—The very best thing two young people can do when they can't get along well together as sweethearts is to quit right then and there. It will be a hundred times worse when they are husband and wife and can't quit.

Undecided, Lafayette, Ky.—It isn't always that a stepmother has been so good to a stepdaughter that she doesn't want to leave her to get married, and I think your young man should appreciate your regard for her and wait the two years until you are twenty-one. I think he is selfish to ask you to leave her for him, and I would not do it, if I were you. If you do, you will find him more selfish and inconsiderate after you marry him.

Coz, Rock Falls, Iowa.—Don't trust the man as a husband you can't trust as a sweetheart. That sounds like very silly advice, doesn't it? Yet, you are trusting a man you don't trust, and I believe you would marry him if he coaxed a little. Marry him, my dear, and then see if the advice is so very silly after all.

Somebody's, Gallatin, Mo.—Your teacher is in love with you, very seriously and I believe honestly, and you are in love with your hero. But, now listen to me, don't permit any love-making while you are in school. He knows better and is trying not to, but you are leading him on, though you may not think so. Stop all that right now, but let him know, when you are through school that he will be just as attractive to you as he is now. The difference in your ages won't count unless you get silly over each other. Show him this.

Country Friends, Evansville, S. C.—Some girls are just a little bit sillier than other girls over a man and you two lead the lot. Both of you confess that you are in love with a man who doesn't know you are friends and tells each of you he loves you and wants to marry you. How you can love a liar like that, passes my comprehension. Go on and let him marry both of you. (2) You may go to dances if you don't dance, but I can't see where you will get much pleasure out of it.

Stupid, Okemoh, Okla.—Probably your unknown correspondent didn't come to visit you when he said he would because his wife wouldn't let him. You don't know whether he has a wife or not, do you? You don't know whether he is an ex-convict or not, do you? Don't you think you would be safer to know who the men are you write letters to?

Lonely, Waverly, Iowa.—Whatever his looks may be,—and looks count for very little in steady use—one thing greatly to his credit is that he wants you to tell your mother he is writing to you. You see he is honester with your mother than you are. I don't know, for sure, but I believe that young man is to be trusted. Tell your mother you are writing to him and be sure you tell her that you are telling her because he said you should. Leave the rest to providence.

Baby Doll, Gates City, Ala.—Suppose, instead of demanding that he quit being interested in all your movements and sayings and doings, now that you have broken off, you stop being similarly interested in him. You think about him more than he does about you, or you wouldn't be writing to find out what I think about it, for he has never written to me. Settle your squabble and be friends.

R. S., Bath, Maine.—I hope I am not knocking over any of your idols, but I think this young man to whom you are engaged is not the kind of a man for a girl of your sense and fair-mindedness to marry. He has not kept his promises as he should and having won your consent he thinks he may let his business take first place and give you the leavings. Of course, if you want a neglectful and unloving husband he is the man for you to marry. Otherwise, break the engagement and keep it broken, no matter what he says. Thousands of women are married to that kind of husbands all over the country and I'll venture that nearly everyone of them wishes she wasn't. Most of them are fairly decent sort of men, too, in a way, but with no idea whatever of what the real kind of a husband should be.

Three Girls, Carrollton, Wash.—There is nothing for the foolish girl to do except to tell her parents she is married. It can't be cured and must be endured. (2) There is nothing in bad dreams except indigestion. Cure that and the dreams will never come true, or come any other way. (3) If the girl's desire is greater to serve the Lord as a missionary in the South Pacific than her desire to serve a husband in the state of Washington, then she should break her engagement.

Darling Rosebud, Paris Crossing, Ind.—Whenever a young man wants you to do all the writing, don't do any of it. That will wake him up to his duties.

K. K., Plutarch, N. Y.—It was very honest of him to return the kiss you gave him, even though it was a tiny, tiny one. Still, most any young man is that honest. But don't give him another till you are engaged. You are very sensible to laugh at the com liments he pays you and to take him as a joke. Flirty fellows don't have much success with girls of that kind.

Baby, New Market, Iowa.—Obey your parents in the matter of writing to the young man. They are worth much more to you than he is. If he thinks less of you for doing so, you ought to be glad you don't write to his kind. 2) A girl out of school and able to spell correctly and write good English is old enough to have callers, if they are the right kind. (3) Dancing as a social divertisement considered proper by most people, so long as the dancing is the right kind, though many people object to all dancing.

Hello Girl, Rush City, Minn.—Your acquaintance made only over the telephone, is hardly conventional, but as you know he is all right, possibly there is no harm in it and your correspondence is permissible. But don't get beyond the friendly point either in your feelings or in your writing. Time enough for that by and by when you know each other face to face.

There, my dears, all your questions meant for me and worth answering are answered and I think I have been very nice about it, even if some of you don't admire my style as much as you might. But you needed most what you didn't like. Now, run along and be happy and don't let your hearts trouble you too much. By, by, until we meet again.

COUSIN MARION.

cent box to all the hens, and made it only one third as strong as the directions said. I thought it might be best to tell you what I had given them. I have not had a sick hen this winter, but out of the hundred and thirty-five I only get seven or eight eggs. Their combs are pretty and red, and seem healthy, and my pullets were hatched real early. I have always gotten eggs in winter before. I have a young pullet that has some kind of a growth on her head between her comb and eye. I noticed it when she was about three months old. It was small then, but now it is a great big knot. It keeps growing. I examined it a few days ago. It is under the skin. There is no sore, but it seemed real tender. It doesn't seem to hurt her health, but it makes her look ugly.

A.—The hens must have found some foreign matter outside that irritated their combs or digestive organs. Strong fertilizer or fresh unslacked lime would be very apt to cause such a condition, but as they all recovered, it could not have been anything serious. Corn only, won't fill the egg basket in winter. Read answer to W. J. L., and remember, hens must have green vegetable food. The lump on the pullet's head is probably a tumor caused by some slight injury when young. Better kill her at once.

L. B.—Is it a good idea for me to mate the chickens I have, or exchange my roosters? Last winter I bought all of my chickens, as it was my first year on the farm to try to raise chickens. I had thirty hens and three roosters. I raised lots of young chicks. I set all of my home eggs, though. I bought only one of the roosters with my hens. I bought the other two from a different place. Now I have about one hundred and ten hens and pullets, and thirteen roosters; all of my last year's raising. Do you think I should exchange my roosters, or mate the ones I have? I have been reading COMFORT for over two years.

A.—You can safely use the male birds you raised last year. Better mate the old cocks to the pullets, and the cockerels to the hens.

A. D. H.—I have been a subscriber to COMFORT for several years, and always read the poultry notes, but I have never seen any trouble like we have. I had a Rhode Island Red pullet, eight months old; she didn't grow as large as the others, and her comb didn't grow at all. In November she wouldn't eat. We fed chops, oats, bran, and some wheat in the morning, and whole corn at night. I could give her cold bread and she would eat it, but wouldn't eat grain of any kind. She was awful poor, but all the other chickens were fat. I doctored her for worms, and she got so she would eat corn or any other kind of food, but she didn't gain in flesh. I killed her to see what was the trouble. Her liver was almost black, and had black-looking lumps on it, and it was small. I cut her gizzard open, and it was soft, and contained a real green water, which had a very offensive odor. Around her gizzard there were little hard lumps, some as large as a good-sized grain of corn, and looked like tar. There was one a little smaller than a pea, that had a soft red matter in it, and her heart was just a soft purplish skin, very thin. The chickens have a good range, and plenty of green food, also oyster shells. We gave them some ground bone (dry) but they wouldn't eat it. We have about thirty pullets, we raised in the spring, but we don't get an egg. Will gizzard worms keep them from laying? I will certainly appreciate your advice.

A.—The pullet was undoubtedly hatched with defective organs, and nothing but good care kept her alive so long. Real poultry people always cull out undersized or remarkably slow-growing chickens, and kill them in infancy, for it is hopless to fight hereditary or abnormal conditions. I don't understand why you don't get eggs, as you seem to feed a fairly good variety of food. You don't give the quantity or number of birds, so you may be feeding too much or not enough. Examine the birds, and from their condition decide for yourself. Worms would naturally affect the egg yield if they were present in large quantities, but I don't really think this is the trouble.

L. S.—I cannot give breeders' names and addresses in this column. A self-addressed and stamped envelope must accompany all such requests.

A Constant Reader.—Can you tell me what is wrong with my hen? She is pure R. I. R.; is just the very picture of health; is perfectly well as far as I can see, but for about four weeks she has been laying only one or two eggs a week, of nights, and every night she drops a soft-shelled egg on the roost. Some haven't any yolks at all, and sometimes the eggs will have a long pipe or neck to them, and they will be joined two together, and most every day she will go on the nest to lay, and at these times I have noticed her having a discharge like the yolk of eggs minus the shell. She is three years old, has free range, plenty of fresh water all the time. I feed her whole corn twice a day with some scraps from the table. Just have her and the rooster. Rooster is eight months old. Is he old enough for breeding this spring? Do you think my hen will get fit for raising some chicks? That is, will chicks hatched from her be healthy? Please advise me as soon as you can what to do for her.

A.—Your hen is too fat, a condition which is almost impossible to avoid, as you have only the two birds. The hen being only three years old, and one of the heavy breeds, there is little hope of her recovering. Give her free range, and don't feed her at all. If she must be confined, give her just a pinch of oats or Kafir corn in very deep litter, so that she will have to scratch for every grain. Withhold the table scraps, but let her have some green vegetables every day. Refer to the February issue of COMFORT. The subject of malformed eggs was treated at length in the Poultry Department.

M. H.—I need some advice on Indian Runner ducks, I thought I would write to you. First I wish to ask if we should get a drake and two or three ducks to start with, or would it be best to get eggs and set under a hen? and how many eggs to set to a hen? What do you feed first, and how old before feeding? Do they need deep water dishes? Should it be warmed in winter? Do they need coops and how do they roost? On the ground? Will keep them in a park away from the hens. Should they have litter like the hens, or what? How old should they be before mating? Do they have lice? Do they take cold easy? How old should they be before being let out in the dew? There is a little lake about fifty rods from the house, but the turtles and snakes are thick there. Would they go to it if on range?

A.—As duck eggs should be used very fresh, and don't stand traveling well, it will be better to buy a drake and from two to five ducks, but set the eggs under hens, as they make better mothers than ducks. (2) From nine to eleven, according to the size of the hen. (3) Nothing for thirty-six hours; then hard-boiled egg, chopped fine—the shell as well as the inside. Mix with an equal quantity of oatmeal and chopped green stuff, lettuce leaves, young tender clover grass, or anything of that sort. Water dishes must be deep enough for them to get their whole heads into, but so arranged that they cannot get their feet or bodies into the water. (4) Even in the winter give them cold water to drink. They need a dry sleeping place, coop or house, with plenty of clean litter on the floor, for them to nest in at night. (5) Indian Runner ducks will mate when six months old, but to insure the young ones being strong, the ducks should be at least nine months old. (6) Yes; but slightly, if kept in clean houses, away from other poultry. (7) They are healthy and hardy after they get their feathers. (8) They would certainly go to the lake if allowed free range. Keep them in a yard until fully grown.

M. B.—I read in COMFORT, but could not find what would make my hens lay. I have fed them corn ever since September. They got some every day, and now in the winter when the days are cold, I have them in the henhouse. In the daytime they have a big room where they scratch, and in the night they go in a little room where it is warmer than in the front room. In the front they have plenty of straw to scratch in, and I cover their feed in straw so they have to hunt for it. I feed them corn, oats, buckwheat, ground feed and flax. I mix those together and feed dry. They always get oyster shells in a box, and black coal pounded fine, and bones sometimes. Sometimes I give them silage and sometimes clover leaves; sometimes sand. When it is warm I let them out. When it is cold I feed them warm. Sometimes I gave them potatoes chopped fine, and sometimes I cook it for them. Once in a while I give them raw cabbage, and water they have plenty. My hens didn't lay in twenty-two years, not one winter yet. Answer and tell me what I should do for it. I cannot raise young ducks nor geese. I have a half acre fenced in; there is plenty clover and timothy in there, and they also have water to bathe. I feed the young geese onions, clover and bread chopped and mixed together, and after a while ground corn and barley mixed. Older ducks I feed bread at first, and then ground corn. The young geese are almost feathered when they die. They eat good and drink, and when they die they are light. They don't weigh half a pound. The ducks they eat and drink good, and then they will go around half a day and fall over on their backs, and they will sit down and die as if they were sleeping. It is no sunstroke. They have plenty of shade and water. We raised one hundred and twenty young ducks last year, and all died except fourteen.

A.—You seem to take good care of your hens, and feed a reasonably good mixture, yet you say they don't lay in winter, which seems odd, unless they were late hatched chickens. Maybe you don't commence winter feed early enough in the fall. Chicks should be hatched in March or April to make good winter layers, and winter feeding should start in September in your part of the country. Read answer to W. J. L. Ground corn and barley is much too fattening a feed for young ducks and geese. Read answer to M. H. As you say the geese are feathered, and quite thin when they die, I fear they were suffering from what is known as coccidiosis, a germ disease, which attacks nearly all kinds of birds and many small animals. It is very contagious, and is frequently introduced by pigeons or wild birds, and as it is spread through the droppings of affected birds, you should very thoroughly cleanse and disinfect both house and yards. If you have any birds that seem to be suffering in the same way, add three grains of sulphate of iron to each quart of drinking water, and give each bird a dose of Castor oil, consisting of two tablespoonfuls.

All That is Worth Knowing About Training and Treating Horses

Two volumes in one

EVERY person who owns, handles or manages horses and all livestock keepers and breeders should have a copy of this great book because it tells about all the known methods of treating diseases of horses and other domestic animals—methods that are based upon the results of actual practice and not mere theory. It also contains Prof. Gleason's famous system of horse breaking, taming and training therefore, it is in reality two books in one and positively the most authoritative work of the kind ever published. There are in all 520 pages, many of them illustrated and dealing with the cause and cure of practically every disease known to horses, cattle, sheep, poultry, swine and dogs with the right remedies for each disease. Among the many subjects covered in Part 1 of this book are causes of diseases, how to observe diseases, treatment of diseases, Cerebro-Spinal Meningitis, distemper, dysentery, eye diseases, fistula, glands, internal diseases, kidney diseases, poisons, stomach and bowel diseases, worms and literally hundreds of other horse and live-stock ailments, which for lack of space we cannot enumerate here. In Part 2 of this book Prof. Gleason gives to the world for the first time his method of breaking and training horses and there are are also special chapters on how to buy, how to detect unsoundness, feeding, breeding, horse-shoeing, general care of horses, etc. Gleason's Horse Book is actually worth its weight in gold to every horse owner or breeder in the land, yet by special arrangement with the publishers we are enabled to give it away without cost to all who will accept the following THIN PONY.—I have a pony nine years old. She gets very poor in the winter, but in the summer is fat. Can you tell me what is the matter? R. W.

A.—See answer to B. L. O., in March number.

BLINDNESS.—At times my three-year-old filly appears blind in both eyes. The eyes look all right and there is no water running from them. C. A. C.

A.—The cause no doubt is periodic ophthalmia (moon bindness) and it is incurable. Do not breed from such a filly. Wash her eyes twice daily with a ten per cent solution of boric acid, to keep them clean.

SICK HOGS.—A peculiar disease in my herd of hogs occurs once a year and usually the last of January. They are shoats three and four months old and appear to be in a healthy condition, when of a sudden one fails to eat or drink. Generally one or two die out of the herd. They live about four days and in appearance are not very sick. They lie down all the time. MRS. I. M.

A.—Your herd of hogs may have the chronic form of cholera which is evidences by just such symptoms as you describe; but to determine that an investigation and post mortem examination would be necessary. You should have such an examination made by the local graduate veterinarian. Meanwhile clean up, disinfect and whitewash the pens and houses and as worms may be a complication give copperas in the slop for five consecutive mornings allowing one dram for each hundred pounds of body weight.

LEAKING MILK.—I have a cow that is a heavy milker and about three or three-thirty she loses her milk. I have tried milking at noon, but without success. (2) I have cows and heifers that are full blood Jerseys, but have failed to have them registered. Can I do so now? MRS. F. M.

A.—Soak the teats in strong alum water twice daily and if that does not suffice paint the ends of the teats with flexible collodion after each milking, and if that does not prove effective bind with wide tapes or put on very wide, weak rubber bands. Care must be taken not to choke off the blood circulation in the teats, else sloughing will take place. (2) It will be necessary to consult the secretary of the Jersey cattle herd book as to the registration of your cattle. He will advise you what to do.

LAMENESS.—My mule has a wire cut on his foot and it is split and he limps on hard roads when he trots. It has been about two years since he was hurt. A. E. B.

A.—Put on a bar shoe and have the smith put a small shoe nail through the crack to clench and keep it shut. He should also burn a deep line almost through the wall of the hoof across the crack at the junction of the wall and hoof-head. Afterward clip the hair from the hoof-head and blister twice a month with a cantharidine ointment to be brought from a veterinarian or druggist.

COUGH.—Will you tell me what ails my pet house dog? He is eight years old. Everytime he runs or does much exercise he is seized with a bad cough, that seems to choke him. MRS. C. T. K.

A.—The dog probably is fat and pampered. Give him one small meal each night and let him live out of doors so far as possible. Feed no sweets, dainties or potatoes. Make him take lots of exercise every day. If there is a lump on the neck, just under throat it is goiter and incurable in an old dog.

RINGWORM.—I have a Jersey heifer that has a breaking out. It started around her eyes and has gone all over her body in round rings or spots. The hair comes off and a scab forms on these places. MRS. M. M.

A.—Scrub each spot clean and then rub in a little iodine ointment each other day until well. Isolate affected cattle as the disease is contagious, being due to the vegetable parasite tricophyton tonsurans. See other recent answers on this subject.

LAMENESS.—I have a mule that seems lame in front feet. In walking he takes short steps and chugs his front feet. (2) I also have a cow that has a sore foot—a crack above the hoof. F. D.

A.—Clip the hair from the hoof-heads and blister several times at intervals of two or three weeks, one foot at a time, using a mixture of one part of powdered cantharides and three parts of lard for the work. (2) Cleanse the foot and then for a few moments immerse it in a hot solution of two ounces of bluestone to the pint. Then cover the foot and sore with oakum or cotton saturated in a five per cent solution of coal tar disinfectant and to be kept in place by bandages. Renew the dressing daily and repeat the immersion treatment at intervals of three days, if found necessary.

GARGET.—I have a milk cow, and occasionally she has a caked teat. It is not always the same one. They cake oftener in the summer. They have caked twice this last winter. MRS. B. H.

A.—To determine if tuberculosis is present it will be necessary to have the cow tested with tuberculin. This is the only sure way of deciding the question and every dairy cow should be tested. Chill of the udder is the probable cause of the attacks mentioned. Keep the stall floor well bedded. Do not let the cow lie on cold or wet ground. In summer keep her out of storms and wet. At time of attack milk three times a day and at night rub in warm melted lard. Give a tablespoonful of saltpeter twice daily for two or three days, at such times.

SITFAST.—I have a horse that has a sore on his neck. It is a growth that is very hard and breaks off. The least pressure from the collar seems to hurt him. ALFRED KIENEL.

A.—A patch of dead, horny skin (sitfast) is present in such a case and must be dissected out by cutting. Then wet the wound often with a mixture of one ounce of sugar of lead and six drams of sulphate of zinc in a pint of water. Label the bottle "poison" and shake it well before use.

CATARRH.—I have four colts that had, as I supposed the distemper; they coughed and run at the nose and have never recovered from it. J. W. Q.

A.—As there is danger that glanders may be present in such cases it would be wise to have an examination made by a graduate veterinarian. Meanwhile feed well on whole oats, wheat bran and best of hay and in the feed twice daily for ten days mix two two teaspoonfuls of a mixture of equal parts of dried sulphate of iron, powdered nux gentian and saltpeter; then skip ten days and repeat. An adult horse takes a tablespoonful at a dose. You do not state age of colts, so we cannot prescribe quite confidently.

LAMENESS.—I have a mare three years old that is lame in the morning, first on one hind leg, then the other. It appears to be a drawing or stiffening of the muscles. J. R. G.

A.—Never let the mare stand for a single day idle in the stable. Allow her a roomy box stall when in the stable. Do not feed millet hay. Without an examination we cannot decide the cause of the lameness and if it persists you should employ a local graduate veterinarian. Osteo-porosis (big head) sometimes comes on with such symptoms apparent.

TUMOR.—Pease tell me how to doctor a horse that has a sore shoulder. The tumor appears to be a hole and a bunch under the skin. It heals, but when I put a collar on it, it breaks out and becomes a running sore. H. C.

A.—The correct treatment in such a case is to have the tumor cleanly removed by dissection and then treat as a common wound until healed.

PROLAPSE OF RECTUM.—I have a brood sow, five years old. She has young pigs two months old, and has never appeared sick. A month ago her bowels refused to act, and two inches of the entrails extended beyond the rectum. I gave Castor oil and stock powders for physic and she grew worse. She eats heartily and gives plenty of milk for her pigs. If she lives to wean her pigs would her meat be fit for use if we could fatten her? S. P. W.

A.—Do not give stock powders in such a case. Feed light, laxative slop containing a little raw linseed oil and once daily give her a teaspoonful of sulphur. Wash the protruded parts clean and then dust daily with freshly powdered ergot. Amputation of the parts by a graduate veterinarian sometimes is necessary where return of the parts is impossible. The meat may be used if the sow is in good flesh.

DEHORNING.—Please give me some advice on dehorning cattle. When is the best time in the year? Should a cow be dehorned when she is heavy with calf? M. T.

A.—It is best to dehorn by rubbing caustic potash on the wetted skin over the horn buttons as soon as they can be felt under the skin of the calf that is three or four days old. Rub until a crust starts to form and the horns never will grow. Horn buttons may be gouged out later, but that is a painful operation. Cut off horns by means of a bone saw or by means of dehorning shears on any fine day in spring or fall when flies are not there to bother and when frost will not trouble. Many people dehorn cattle in winter and house them for a few days afterward. Do not dehorn a cow that is heavy in calf.

BOILS.—A sow pig four months old, has lumps in flanks and under fore legs and the lumps appear hard; they turn red and are blistered. They are the size of a pea and grow to be most as large as a half dollar. We let her run about the place in the daytime. She eats heartily and appears to be all right every other way. MRS. M. J. C.

A.—We take that the lumps are boils or they may be simply due to infection of the skin from filth. Swab them with tincture of iodine daily and if that does not avail rub in a little yellow oxide of mercury ointment once daily. Keep the pen floor clean and make the sow take plenty of exercise every day.

KNUCKLING.—I have a colt seven months old that has cocked ankles in the hind legs. Is there any cure for it? G. M. R.

A.—In some instances a colt outgrows such a condition if kept off board floors, made to run out daily and well fed. Twice a day hand rub the parts and force the joints into proper position; then bandage snugly with flannel. If treatment does no good a qualified veterinarian will have to perform the operation of tenotomy.

LUMPY MILK.—I have a good cow eight years old, half Jersey, half Holstein. She gives an abundance of milk for seven or eight months, making butter; after that we cannot get any butter, even though the cream rises. The milk gets lumpy. This is the second year we have had this experience. MRS. M. K.

A.—The cow should be dried off for six weeks before calving. The whole trouble may be due to bacteria in the milk utensils which may not be perfectly scalded and sun dried. When trouble starts give her a full dose of epsom salts. At least one pound in three pints of warm water and afterward mix half an ounce of granular hyposulphite of soda in her feed twice daily.

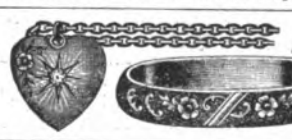
Angeles, Cal., Atlanta and Athens, Ga., Chicago and Rock Island, Ill., Baltimore, Md., Boston, Lynn and Lawrence, Mass., La Crosse, Wis., Detroit, Mich., St. Louis, Mo., Washington, Louisville, Ky., Cincinnati, Cleveland and Danville, Ohio, Hartford, Conn., Indianapolis, Ind., New Orleans, La., Brooklyn, N. Y., Portland, Ore., Philadelphia, Pa., Providence, R. I., Nashville, Tenn., Austin, Tex., Seattle, Wash., and Richmond, Va. The postmasters in all of these cities are authorized to send out printed matter and to make special effort to push the market-by-parcel-post idea as much as they can. There are other cities and other postmasters who are doing splendid volunteer work along this line.

Officials from the Post Office Department and also the new Office of Markets of the Department of Agriculture give talks and demonstrations to farmers and farm communities to bring them to a realization of the efforts the government is making to help them build up a lucrative line of trade with city people. But it is the postmaster who can give the most real assistance. The Postmaster General has seen to it that all postmasters are fully informed upon this subject and it is to them the farmer must apply for information and to them he must bring or send his package.

The most important investigation since the establishment of the parcel post especially in relation to that line is the attempt of the government to standardize the food packages, such as boxes, bales, barrels, etc., for general market purposes. This investigation is in the hands of C. T. More, the market specialist of the Office of Markets and C. J. Brandt, chief of that new division of the Department of Agriculture. Mr. Brandt is anxious for a national law that will regulate the grades and standards in all of the states. For instance in the case of the strawberry box, about 20 of the states of the Union have laws adopting the dry measure for quarts, pints and half pints. One state, Kansas, has adopted the liquid measure. A liquid quart is 57 and a fraction cubic inches while a dry quart is 67 and a fraction cubic inches. It is easy to see the difficulties such a difference would create in shipping berries, etc., into other states. Similar differences in weight standards exist in other states, in other commodities; turnips in some states must have 42 pounds to the bushel, in another there must be 60. The weight of cherries is placed in one state at 64 pounds per bushel when without stems and with the stems 56 pounds. Grapes in the same state, are 60 pounds without stems and 48 with stems to the bushel. These are the sorts of differences that the Office of Markets hopes to reconcile as well as to standardize the food packages. This according to many authorities is best done by a national law. With a standard apple box, a standard barrel for vegetables, standard box for cherries and small fruits the greatest benefit will accrue to the patrons of the parcel post.



The market is flooded with all sorts and conditions of containers, many of them elaborate and expensive, and while no doubt very good are beyond the pocket of the average buyer who is seeking the economy side. Both the Postmaster General and Mr. Praeger, who is conceded to have done more to promote the development of the parcel post than any other postmaster, agree that a simple split bottom market basket will answer for vegetables and poultry in winter, and the regular corrugated pasteboard container for eggs is hard to beat provided it is constructed so that the eggs do not lie directly against the sides of the box, and these are very cheap. A fourth of an inch air space should be left between the outside of the box and the first or outside row of egg compartments. Thus they are safe from injury by jarring as in no other method of packing.

The government has issued an explicit set of instructions which cover every question in packing and shipping, labelling, insuring C. O. D. packages, and also explains just what may be sent by parcel post and what is excluded. These may be had for the asking at any Post Office, so that none need plead ignorance on these topics.

Christmas trees (small), holly wreaths and all of the greenery used for Christmas decoration formed a feature of the shipments before and during the holidays. Roots, herbs, growing plants such as ferns, etc., in five-inch pots, sets of buggy spokes, and even cast iron stoves in sections have gone through.

Close attention to the rules insure the safe arrival of your gifts or purchases. While you cannot send the rarest of old Burgandy wine nor a case of choicest cordial, neither Pekinese prize winners. Maltese kittens, nor fireworks, you may send many articles of larger bulk and at lower rates than ever before. Paris bonnets (made in America), fur overcoats, the most elegant and fragile of dolls and engines large enough for the small boy to occupy the engineer's seat, the rare and expensive attar of roses, may all occupy the same car with the Sunday turkey, possum and little roasting pig and all arrive safe and sound, barring wrecks and landslides, if they conform to the rules laid down for packing and shipping.

The people in the rural communities hail the parcel-post growth with delight and the department is daily receiving letters from all parts of the country, which proves that the farm communities are alive to the possibilities it opens to them. The country and village merchant has already discovered that it helps and does not harm his business for the simple reason that where he cannot carry very extensive clothing stock and also large assortments of many articles, he can get them to order in very quick time, much quicker than used to be the case when it was necessary to pay express and freight rates. Now he can often get the article from the factory by return mail, which means that he does not lose his customer.

Graduated Bead Necklace

BEADS are just as fashionable as ever this season on account of the low neck dresses. The necklace shown above is made of graduated perfect imitation gold beads and is 24 inches long which is the popular "opera length." The beads have the "English" or bright finish and are just as refined looking and attractive as solid gold beads and greatly superior to gold-filled or gold-plated beads because they are the same gold color all the way through and therefore will never tarnish or turn brassy and they positively will not discolor the skin. Another reason why this necklace is so popular is because it harmonizes splendidly with any color dress. We will make you a present of this handsome opera length graduated bead necklace upon the terms of either one of the following free offers.

the girl's arm within his—almost supports her, indeed, up the short avenue and to the altar steps: and the curate—who is too sleepy, and anxious to return to his book beside the river to care much whether the bride's downcast face be pretty or ugly—gabbles over the ceremony after the approved fashion, and Sir Cyril More and Edna Weston are one.

There is still the ceremony of signing the registrar to be gone through, however, and the bridegroom, still with his bride's arm drawn through his tightly and supportingly, conducts her to the vestry.

There is some little questioning by the sleepy curate, but Cyril takes the answering upon himself, and Edna, who has gone through it all as in a kind of deep trance, finds herself in the open air and—married.

The fly has been waiting to take them back to the station. The ceremony has been timed, there is no time to waste; they are in the train, in the carriage which Cyril has secured to themselves by a bribe to the guard, four porters, and Heaven knows how many other officials, before he takes her to his arms and whispers these two sweet words:

"My wife!"

"Am I really your wife?" she asks, blushing and tearful. "Really—your—wife?"

"Yes—for better or for worse—didn't you hear, you sly puss?"

Edna shakes her head, raising it from its favorite resting place to do so.

"No, I heard nothing; the man—how ugly and insignificant he looked beside somebody I know—seemed to be talking nonsense. I did not even hear your name—our name—he seemed to gabble out a strange one. And I am your wife!"

"My wedded wife until death doth us part," says Cyril, smoothing the cheek that has all the healthy bloom of a child, and the lovely color of a woman combined.

"Oh," says Edna, making a move, "it is dreadful to think of! To think that I have been married in these shabby clothes—without even a veil—and no bridesmaids, and no breakfast."

"No breakfast!" laughed Cyril, "why, what do you call this?" and he drew a picnic basket from under the carriage seat, and, opening it, displayed a perigod pie, some grapes, peaches and a bottle of sparkling moselle.

Edna clapped her hands.

"Oh, I'm so glad, for I am so hungry."

"Bravo," cries Cyril, "who says that the marriage ceremony destroys the appetite? There's a plate and a glass—only one glass——"

"Oh, I couldn't drink after you," says Edna, with an arch affectation of overdelicacy.

"Then you shall have the glass," laughed Cyril, "and I'll drink out of the bottle!"

Then he spread the wedding breakfast upon the seat opposite him, sat Edna at his side with great ceremoniousness, and cut the pie.

They were like two children, for all the world, playing at husband and wife, and no child could have enjoyed the commingling of perigod pie and caresses more than did Edna; only now and then a little startled, questioning look came into her eyes when Cyril drew her to him and called her "his wife"; and no child that ever played at matrimony could ever have been more ignorant of the import of the game.

"And now," said Cyril, who was flushed with happiness, and looked more like a great, happy, handsome boy than ever, "we have the pleasant duty of drinking the bride's health—that's yours, you know," he explained. "Now, I'm supposed to be the friend of the family. Ahem! Ladies and gentlemen, on this occasion—on this occasion—this happy occasion," and Cyril screwed up his face into a quaint resemblance of a fussy old man in the act of speechmaking, "it is my duty to propose the health of the bride Lady More——"

"Lady who?" exclaimed Edna, in the midst of a trill of happy laughter.

"Eh?" said Cyril. "Oh," gulping down his wine and turning rather red after the operation. "Lady anybody—this is supposed to be a fashionable wedding—the health," he went on, "of Mrs. Harold Payne. Ladies and gentlemen, may she live long and live happy; and may her husband give up smoking and allow her a liberal pocket money."

"Oh," says Edna, "I'm sure they don't say that!"

"No, but they mean it," laughed Cyril.

"But I don't want you to give up smoking," pouted Edna, nestling against him in her favorite fashion, "and I hate pocket money; it is so much trouble to count the change; and then it all goes so quickly; and when one thinks there is quite a lot left one finds it is all gone. No, I won't have any pocket money."

"What a paragon of a wife!" laughs Cyril; "doesn't object to cigars, and refuses pin money! 'Pon my word, I shall believe I have got a prize in the marriage lottery. Perhaps you'll object to give me a kiss," and he leaned over, with a passionate light in his dark eyes.

Edna puts up her small white hands, but he laughs at such resistance, and only kisses them to scorn, and it ends in Edna putting up the soft, ripe lips that have known no other kisses than his.

It is four hours from Basle to Lucerne by express, but it only seems three quarters of an hour to the happy lovers, and it is with a start that Edna hears the porter calling the name of the latter station, and comprehends that the hour has arrived when the confession to Aunt Martha must be made. Cyril hands her to a fly, and they roll over the bridge, the Keuss. Edna has crossed it a score of times, and knows it well; but it all seems in some way altered today, and she wonders if Aunt Martha will seem the same. Then they come to the cathedral, and the fly is just about to turn up the road to the left when Enda starts from the shelter of her lover's arms to remember that she has left her china crepe shawl behind her. It was a birthday present from Aunt Martha, and—yes—Cyril understands in a moment, and stops the fly. They shall drive back for it at once—or, better still! Suppose Edna got out and waited on the cathedral steps while he drove back for it?—then they could discharge the fly at the steps, and would so get rid of the chance of any excitement that might attend their appearance at the gates of the pension.

"I shall not be long," said Cyril; "you stay here and wait, darling, and then we will walk up the rest of the way together, and face Aunt Martha."

Edna is perfectly willing, takes her place on the worn steps, and the fly departs with Cyril in quest of the lost shawl. There is an old West of England proverb which says that it is a bad omen for the bride and bridegroom to part on their wedding day; but Edna is in happy ignorance of the old saw, and seats herself in shadow of the old cathedral, content to wait and dream, for it is all a dream as yet—love's young dream, than which there is nothing half so sweet in life! It is difficult to realize that she is married, that she is a wife! She, Edna Weston—Edna Weston no longer!—the wife of the man she thinks the handsomest, the best in all the world! What has she done that she should be so happy, she asks herself, as she looks back upon what she considers her useless life, and then—blushingly—she calls up Cyril's face, his words, his warm, heart-thrilling kisses, and covers her face with her hands perforce! Oh, yes, it is too great a happiness—too great!

A footstep causes her to look up, half dazed, half curious, and she sees approaching her a tall, handsome and richly dressed woman.

For a moment Edna is so absorbed by her passionate daydream that she does not recognize her, then as the overdressed figure comes nearer, Edna remembers the lady in the carriage at the door of the Grand Hotel.

An unpleasant sensation of antipathy—distrust—what?—it is difficult to analyze—pervades the whole of the girl's frame. The lady comes slowly toward the cathedral door, breathing rather hard from the steep ascent of the cathedral steps. Another moment and she is close upon Edna, bringing with her a strong odor of patchouli and jockey club.

Opposite Edna she pauses and draws a long breath, opening her wide, but not ill-shapen, mouth to do so, and accosts her.

"Can you tell me when the organ plays?" she says, then stops abruptly and scans the sweet face below her with an eager interest. "I was going to ask you," she adds, after her scrutiny is over, "if you were waiting for the organ to play—but I suppose you are not."

"No," says Edna, smiling faintly, "I am not."

"So I thought," retorted the lady, eying her still with an unpleasant minuteness. "I've seen your face before, haven't I?"

"It is very likely," replies Edna with a smile; "I have seen yours."

"Ah!" retorts the strange lady with a little sniff, "that's more likely still, and if it's not a rude question, where did you see me?"

"At the entrance to the Grand Hotel," says Edna, regarding her questioner with mingled amusement and repugnance.

"I thought so," responds the lady under her breath; "and it was there I saw you. I was talking to a gentleman, wasn't I?"

Edna flushes and nods.

The lady eyes her with a profound air of intelligence, then nods her head violently.

"Yes, and if I'm not mistaken, you are waiting for that very gentleman now. Am I right?"

Edna regards the full, flushed and not by any means unhandsome face above her with a puzzled air.

"You are quite right," she says, in a low voice.

"I thought so," is the exclamation; "I knew it!"

"How do you know it? Why do you ask me?" asks Edna, with a bewildered stare. "Do you know the—the gentleman?"

"Do I know him?" echoes the strange lady. "Who does, if I don't? Know him! I should think I did! Better than you do, or ever will, I hope, my dear! Come, if I'm right, and you're waiting for him, I'll give you a bit of advice, and that is, get away from here as fast as your legs will carry you, and never let him come near you again."

At this vehemently delivered exhortation, Edna opens her eyes wide and smiles.

"Why do you say that?" she says, half indignantly.

"Because no young girl, like you, ought to be waiting for the like of him. There! perhaps I'm a fool to interfere with what doesn't concern me, and I shall be sorry for it afterward; but—there's a good look about you—you're too good to go wrong for him. Take my advice, and go home, and when that gentleman you are waiting for calls next time, shut the door in his face, and say, 'not at home.'"

Edna rises and confronts the tall, handsome woman, and stares into the bold, daring eyes and powdered, painted cheeks, with bewildered astonishment.

"Are you—mad?"

"Mad! no," with a short, coarse laugh; "not half so mad as you if you listen to him. Come, I'll prove to you if I'm mad or sane. That gentleman you're waiting for—he says he loves you?"

There is no answer, only the same puzzled stare.

"He has promised to marry you——"

The stare falls for a moment and the cheeks flush.

"Oh! I thought so," continues the loud voice. "The same old tale! Well, let me tell you that he's told the same thing and promised the same thing, to half a dozen before you, and disappointed 'em all!"

Edna finds voice at last.

"How dare you?" she flashes out. "You are speaking wicked falsehoods of someone you do not know——"

"Don't know!" retorts Glitters, for it is she. "Look at that!" and she snatches a huge locket from her waistband. "Don't know! Whose face is that, I should like to know?" and she tears the locket open and extends it.

Edna is fascinated; she cannot hold back; she must look if that look deals death to her, and it does almost, for as she looks on Cyril's face she falls back with her hand on her heart.

"Come—there—bear up," says Glitters, not unkindly. "It seems rough, I know that—of course it does; but it's better to find him out now than when it's too late. Oh, yes, he's handsome enough, too handsome, for that matter; and it's hard to believe that a man with a face like that should be like the devil himself. I wonder what he's been telling you? Never you mind; the best thing you can do is to forget it—take my advice——"

"Let me see," breaks in Edna, rising from the cold stones and advancing, white as the sculptured saints in the niches above her.

Glitters held out the locket again.

"Yes, there he is, there's no mistaking him—there's the handsomest man in England, and the wickedest. You can't count up on your fingers all the hearts that face has broke, yours among 'em, perhaps. Well, well, perhaps it ain't too late! It's funny as I should have found out his little game—funny I should meet you here; but I'm glad I have, if it's only taken one plum out of his mouth—not that he has done the shabby thing by me——"

She stops in consequence of a gesture of mingled agony and horror by the quivering, anguished victim at her feet.

Edna turns her white face up with a great loathing.

"Are—are—you his wife?"

"His wife! Well, no, not exactly," replies Glitters, with an uncomfortable laugh. "Not that I ought not to be, if right was right. No, I'm not his wife, and nobody ever will be if he can help it—he knows a trick worth two of that! But I know as much about him as if I was, and more, perhaps; and my advice to you is, get away from his reach as quick as you can! Don't let him say a word for himself, for he's as soft-tongued as a serpent, and as artful, for all his boyish look; and if you think there's any mistake—if you think I've been playing it rough on him, ask him when you see him—if you're foolish enough to see him again—if he knows Molly Glitters, of the Theater Royal?"

Then she gathers her voluminous, mauve-colored skirts about her, and, with an emphatic nod of the head, goes her way, leaving her victim bowed down with anguish, like a flower bruised and crushed, upon the cathedral steps.

em mixed. Oh, lord"—to his chief—"can't you see Matt's face when he opens that trunk?"

They broke into irrepressible laughter, and I turned to Mary.

"It's a warning," I said solemnly—"the hand of Fate. We go home today. * * * * Do you know where I can reach Mr. Williams at Rosedale?" I demanded of the head baggageman.

"He always puts up at the Seneca."

"All right. I'll wire him. We are going to Rosedale by the next train. When does it leave and when does it get there?"

"Leaves at ten-thirty. Due at three-thirty."

Mary and I rushed to the telegraph office and sent this message to the joyful bridegroom:

"My wife's trunk checked by mistake for yours. Wire, Cawthorne Hotel, authority to bring yours with us to Rosedale on ten-thirty train today. John Webb."

This dispatch cost me one dollar. I took care to let Mary see me pay for it. Then we returned to the hotel. We came upon the porter at the entrance.

"How's the dog?" I inquired.

I would not have been surprised to learn that he had been shot, poisoned, or drowned in the lake. I was steeled against anything that could happen to us or ours short of death by famine or the sword.

"The dog is fine and dandy, sir," replied the porter as though he were communicating the most ordinary intelligence. "I've doctored up his tail and it'll be all right in a day or two."

On the strength of this we went in and had some breakfast. Mary was apparently in troubled thought. I drank my coffee in moody silence. Presently Mary spoke.

"I wonder," she mused, "if that man has been rummaging through my things?"

I grunted unsympathetically and then coughed, for my ducking had given me a cold.

"I wonder," I croaked, "if we had better not have a guardian appointed the next time we feel like straying away from home with a fool dog and two trunks that won't stick together?"

Mary's eyes flashed, but fell before my own. I was beginning to feel mad all through, and I fancy I showed it. Then, like the mean-minded creature I was, I took revenge on the wife of my bosom. I turned over the menu card and did some figuring on the back. When I had finished I handed it to Mary and buried myself in the morning paper. This is what Mary saw:

PARTIAL EXPENSE OF OUTING.

DOG.

Tip (twice) on car to Dresen,	.50
Broken china at Dresden,	20.00
Porter at Hartman House,	.50
To boys hunting lost dog,	1.90
Man bitten by dog,	10.00
Tip on train to Hamilton,	.25
Porter at Cawthorne Hotel,	2.00
Tip (forthcoming) to Rosedale,	.25
Total (perhaps),	$35.40

TRUNK.

(Charged all along as two pieces.)

To station at Rosedale,	.50
To house at Dresden,	.50
To hotel at Dresden,	.50
To porter at Hartman House,	.50
To station at Dresden,	.50
To baggageman at Hamilton,	2.00
To telegram to Williams,	1.00
To house at Rosedale,	.50
Total (maybe),	$6.00

For a long time Mary studied this expense account with drooping head. Then I saw a tear roll down her cheek and fall on the figures. It blotted out all my petty passion. I was smitten with compunction, and leaning over towards her I whispered:

"Don't sweetheart! I was a brute! It's nothing—the money. A thousand dollars would not be worth a tear of yours. We'll start all over again as soon as we get rested—and hang the expense!"

I tore up the menu card and threw it in the finger bowl. And just here, as good luck would have it,—the first in forty-eight hours—a boy entered with the looked-for telegram. I read it out to Mary:

"Bring trunk. For heaven's sake don't miss train. Am getting married at five. "Matt Williams."

Mary smiled at me through still wet lashes, and I—knowing I was forgiven—laughed boisterously.

They will thus save time, labor and postage.

NOTICE.—As the privileges of this Bureau and of all other departments of COMFORT are for subscribers only, no attention will be given any inquiry which does not bear the writer's correct name and address. Initials only, or a fictitious name, if requested, will appear in the published answer, but the inquiry must invariably be signed by the writer's true name.

Miss N. L. S., Kearney, Kans.—COMFORT has no department where fancy work is sold nor could it have. You pursued the right course, the course we have been trying to teach COMFORT women who produce articles that may be sold, when instead of writing to COMFORT for advice you took the baby-hood to Kansas City and sold it for five dollars. But you fell from grace with the second one. Why did you not go out among people who had babies and sell the second one instead of writing to us to know where to sell it? The trouble with women who can make salable articles is that they don't use judgment and industry in selling their products. There are buyers for good things always and the producers must get their productions next to the buyers. Now, you have sold one hood and know you can sell that many and it should be taken as a good sign that you can sell more and that if there is one buyer there are bound to be others. Take as your motto, find the buyer.

J. S., West Leyden, N. Y.—If you will write to Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., for information about ginseng, you will get two or three pamphlets on the subject which will give you full information. What you read in them will be true enough but we advise that you go very slow in the ginseng business till you have learned it. It is like any other business that requires skill and experience. Golden seal, or yellow puccoon, is quite a different proposition from ginseng.

Mrs. F. G. M., Marlboro, Mass.—In these modern days of chemicals and business so much better shoe polish is made to sell at a nickel or a dime a box than can possibly be made at home that it is a waste of time and money to attempt to mix a home-made polish. In the old days you might have saved a few cents by making your own blacking, but not in these days. Ask at any shoe store.

Mrs. W. H., Switz City, Ind.—If you wish to make dustless dust rags you must devise a plan of your own. These dust rags are made under patented processes and you will get into trouble and the courts if you use a formula not your own.

Mrs. O. W., Brownstown, Ind.—If the man was acquitted for killing your husband on the ground of self-defense, that makes him innocent in law and you can get no damages. Ask some lawyer to take the case in a civil suit to court on a contingent fee and if he will take it, there may be a chance for you. But pay no money in fees until the lawyer earns it by winning your case.

Mrs. G. A. S., Ashtabula, O.—Don't go into business on newspaper information merely, if you want to succeed. You are not far from Cleveland. Go there and make inquiry among business people and what you learn will be practical, on-the-spot knowledge worth more to you in a minute than printed knowledge would be in forty years. COMFORT readers thinking of starting business make a note of this.

D. F. S., Martinsville, Ind.—Read the advertisements in COMFORT if you want to know about things better than we can tell you in this column. The COMFORT reader who misses the advertisements misses matters of value.

Puzzled, Montgomery, Ala.—Write to Secretary Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C. for information about positions in the government civil servce. Men of good habits and good sense are in demand almost anywhere.

J. E. C., Murfreesboro, Tenn.—Miss Helen Keller is a suffragist, but not a suffragette. Equal suffrage has been in force in Wyoming since 1869; Colorado, 1893; Utah, 1896; Idaho, 1896; Washington, 1910; California, 1911; Arizona, Kansas and Oregon, 1912; Nevada and Montana, 1914. In 1913 the territorial legislature of Alaska granted full suffrage to women and the Illinois legislature extended to women all the franchise rights within its power, that is, for all the offices not created by the state constitution. Three of these states, Arizona, Colorado and Kansas are prohibition, but the Colorado law does not go into effect until 1916. Idaho, California, Washington and Oregon are local option. The percentage of illiteracy in Wyoming is 3.3; Idaho, 2.2; Colorado, 3.7; Nevada, 6.7; Kansas, 2.2; Montana, 4.8; California, 3.7; Oregon, 1.9; Washington, 2; Arizona, 20.9—this high percentage due to the fact that there are many Indians and Mexicans in the state. Excepting Arizona the illiteracy rank of these states is high.

Inquisitive, Dresser Junction, Wis.—Manuscripts need not be typewritten, but the chances that they will be read by editors are vastly improved if they are typewritten. A manuscript written poorly by hand is certain not to be read unless it bears the signature of a well-known writer. Publishers are not responsible for manuscripts not ordered, even though accompanied by postage for return.

Mrs. C. J. E., Hamill, S. Dak.—A soldier of the United States army—there are no soldiers drafted into the army—goes wherever he is ordered, even to the uttermost parts of the earth. That is his business. (2) The requirements for a foreigner to become a citizen of this country are not very complicated. He must file his declaration of intention in the clerk's office of a United States District Court, or any court of record having a seal, a clerk and jurisdiction in actions in which the amount in controversy is unlimited. There are details which must be had from the clerk of the court, for subsequent proceedings. Any intelligent citizen can tell him all that is necessary and COMFORT hasn't space to do it.

M. S. K., Burlington, Iowa.—If you are too timid to ask a local physician or hospital superintendent for information which you can get from them much more satisfactorily than you could from us, we hardly think you are capable of filling the position you seek. You must overcome your timidity or give up your ambition. Talk to your local physicians and hospitals and get what you want at first hands and from professionals, who are experts in their lines. Other COMFORT readers who go away from home thinking to learn what they could much better learn at their own doors please note this.

T. B., Lloyd, Fla.—The address of the American Bible Society, is Bible House, Astor Place, New York City. (2) State flags do not appear to cut very much figure anywhere, the Star Spangled Banner being good enough for most states. State flags are used, however, in celebration of state anniversaries, though we do not recall having seen a state flag in years. Suppose you start a crusade for the recognition and development of state flags. (3) Write to Secretary National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C. for best books on ancient excavations and discoveries. The Society has some very good things on that subject with pictures not to be had elsewhere. For two dollars you can become a member of the Society and get its magazine issued monthly.

A. J., Odell, La.—The only steps that an unknown writer may take to get his literature before the public is to submit his manuscript to a publisher and if the publisher thinks it will pay to print it, the writer will get it before the public. There is no other way, for the publisher holds the key to publicity. We wish to say to you and to other would-be writers that until you know who are the publishers, what kinds of books they publish and several other practical branches of the writing business, you should not attempt to write, because you don't know enough to write acceptable matter. You should read for example such magazines as The Bookman published at New York City, and The Editor published at Ridgewood, N. J. These magazines will inform you on numerous necessary points, which being ignorant of, you cannot write and place manuscripts. The writing game is not one easily learned.

Mabel, Good Luck, Ky.—A little kerosene in the water washing mirrors or windows will make the glass sparkle. Only an expert can do anything in restoring mirrors worn out on the back. Better not try to take the tin stain out of your ivoried brush. The material is composition that will not stand the acid test. You can clean the white paper of the book to some extent by rubbing it carefully with a ball of bread crumbs taken from the center of a loaf. This is also good to clean pictures with, or wall paper. When plated silver is worn through the plating the only salvation for it is to take it to the electroplater, or buy a new set. It is poor economy to spend time and money on many old things about the house in attempts to make them new again. It can't be done and is cheaper and more satisfactory to substitute new articles.

C. B., Epworth, Nebr.—As we have before told COMFORT readers, that when they find anything vegetable, mineral, animal or otherwise which they or their neighbors know nothing about, they should submit it to Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D. C., so we now tell you to send your glittering bits of stone there for inspection and report. Maybe there is a precious stone quarry in Nebraska.

T. B. S., Richmond, Va.—Alarm watches may be had from almost any jeweler, but not as low as one dollar. Inquire in your city shops for them. (2) Letters to Mr. Samuel G. Blythe and Mr. Irwin S. Cobb, sent to The Saturday Evening Post, Philadelphia, Pa., will reach them. (3) The lady is not in "Who's Who." Write to her yourself for the information. (4) Very comfortable livings, if not real money in bank, have been made on plots of ground not larger than two acres with all kinds of crops, from pop-corn to peanuts. It isn't so much the crop as it is the man behind the crop. You will have to decide for yourself what crop you think will pay best.

Mrs. A. M., Marion, O.—Virginia is a fine old state and the Shenandoah valley is a very pretty and productive farming country, but we do not believe four people could make a living on ten acres of ground unless they were expert and intensive farmers who knew just what crop they wanted to raise and how to raise and market it to the best advantage. One objection is that it is too far from markets of the kind you should have. With a small farm you should be within an hour of a city, for most of your stuff would be garden truck, we should say. Or small fruits, or such things as city consumers need. If you have some extra income and merely want the ten acres to make your eating on, the Shenandoah valley would do well enough, if you like Southern people and ways. If not, somewhere along the Ohio river would be better for you.

A Thorn Among Roses

So, on the first day of the trial, when asked if she would go, she passionately retorted: "No, of course I will not go to be gazed at by everybody as the daughter of a felon."

Imogen, wretched as she was, could not have stayed away, and, seeking an obscure corner in the courtroom, listened with absorbing interest to all the evidence. She was in her place every day, but during the last day she became so excessively nervous it seemed to her that she could not endure the strain much longer.

She was almost glad when Judge Ashburton was taken ill, and it seemed necessary that she should follow him home to see that he was properly cared for, although she was appalled in view of his attack as she feared it would affect Mr. Fletcher's case unfavorably if he were not there to make the closing plea, for she had no faith in Alice's ability to take his place. When Alice and Will returned with the information that the verdict would not be rendered until the following morning, it seemed to the tortured woman as if her powers of endurance had reached their limit—as if she could not live through another night of suspense.

As soon as she had seen the judge made comfortable for the night, she went to her room and sank, weak and spent, upon her bed, a nervous trembling pervading her whole frame.

She lay there for a long time, her brain in a whirl, her heart quaking with fear, mingled with remorse, and finally dropped into an uneasy slumber.

When she awoke night and silence seemed to have settled down upon the house, but she was impressed that some unusual sound had awakened her.

She arose and lighted one of the burners of the chandelier and listened intently for a moment; then smiled bitterly at what she believed was only excessive nervousness. "It was only the wind," she murmured, as she sank upon a chair. Presently, however, the sound was repeated.

She arose, crossed the room, and, sweeping aside the draperies of a window, was startled to see the face of Reardon, the detective, pressed against the glass.

Her heart sprang into her mouth, and for a moment the mad thought that she would like to push him backward from the balcony, on which he stood, to the ground, took possession of her mind. Oh, if she could but end forever her bitter bondage!

But, quickly raising the sash, she inquired, in a fierce whisper:

"For Heaven's sake, what brings you here to-night?"

"A little matter of business, Mrs Ingraham. Let me in, if you please, before anyone sees me, and I will explain it to you," the man returned, with exasperating coolness.

She stepped aside, and the next moment he was in the room, when he lowered the window and pulled the draperies together.

"Is the door locked?" he inquired.

She nodded assent as he motioned him to a chair and sank into another.

"Well!" she said, fastening her burning eyes upon him.

"Well!" the man repeated, with a cruel smile. "I have been attending court during the last few days, Mrs. Ingraham, and have been highly entertained. Mr. Fletcher's friends have made a brave fight for him, but he isn't going to be acquitted, all the same. He will be released, because he cannot be proven guilty of the charge against him—'treason;' but that will be small comfort to a man of his make-up, for he will always rest under a cloud, unless those papers can be restored and proof that someone else stole them be forthcoming. Now, I have a proposition to make to you, Mrs. Ingraham."

"Yes—yes; oh, what is it?" Imogen demanded, impatiently, as he paused.

"Of course, I understand that those documents are very valuable."

"Oh! have you opened them?" the woman groaned.

Aren't you assuming considerable in asking me that?" the man inquired, with a leer.

"No, I know you have them!" she retorted, fiercely.

"Well, I suppose you have reason to believe that I have," he admitted, then resumed: "No, I haven't opened them; to be perfectly frank, I didn't think it would be quite safe for me to break the official seal that guarded them."

"Why did you take them from the safe?" Imogen inquired. "You told me that night that you had taken nothing but a little money."

"I know I did," the detective replied, "and I had no intention of meddling with any papers when I opened the safe. I was furious when I found only that paltry sum there, for I expected to make a good haul, and I looked everything over pretty thoroughly, I had just replaced everything, as I thought, and shut the safe, when I heard a step outside the library door. Then I discovered that I had overlooked an envelope which had partially slipped under the safe. I seized it and thrust it into a pocket just as you entered the room. Then, while we talked, I forgot that I had them, and did not once suspect the nature of what I had taken until after I heard of Mr. Fletcher's arrest. Now, for my proposition: If you will raise a thousand pounds for me, I will hand these papers over to you, with a written statement that I stole them, and that will clear Fletcher at once from all suspicion."

"Raise a thousand pounds for you!" repeated Imogen, with mingled amazement and consternation. "When?"

"Now; this very night."

"Are you mad?"

"Never was more sane in my life," was the cool response. "Get me this money and I will clear the country before tomorrow morning; you shall never hear from me again, and I will also swear that I will never blow on you about that other affair."

"You might just as well ask me to get the moon for you," said Imogen, in a hopeless tone.

"Not at all. I happen to know that Judge Ashburton is a very rich old codger; go to him and get the money out of him, upon some pretense or other; you are a clever woman and can manage it, I am sure."

"If it is money you want, why have you not responded to the advertisements for the papers? There was a reward offered," Imogen returned, after a moment of thought.

"I know there was," said her companion, with a cunning smile, "but that advertisement was too shrewdly worded to suit me. Your old judge is also very clever, and he meant to catch the thief with the papers. You'll have to do this business for me—there is no other way," he concluded, doggedly.

"Suppose I refuse to do so?" queried Imogen.

"Then I will go at once and sell these secrets; then there will be another trial and your unimpeachable Mr. Fletcher will prove a felon and his fate will be sealed, while I will still have the old matter to hold over you," was the threatening reply.

"How can I be sure that you will keep your word—that you will not continue to hold it over me, even if I get you this money?"

"I told you I'd leave the country. I want to go back to America, for I'm dead tired of England."

"Where are the papers?" questioned Imogen. "If I could manage to get the money for you tonight could you deliver them to me before the court sits tomorrow morning?"

"I could deliver them to you this moment if you could produce the thousand pounds," said the detective, as he clapped one hand significantly over a breast pocket.

"How am I to know that they have not been tampered with?"

"I told you that I have not opened them."

"I know you said so, but I want proof," said Imogen, doubtfully.

"Well, you are about as suspicious as they make 'em," the man retorted, with an expressive shrug of his shoulders.

He unbuttoned his coat and, running his hand into an inside pocket, drew forth a bulky official-looking package which he held up before her.

"Read for yourself," he said, "there is the address: 'Roland Fletcher, Esq.' Now, look on this side," reversing the package, "and you will see that it is sealed with three seals, neither of which has been broken. No, madam, I know too much to tamper with these seals; but, as I told you before, I never dreamed that this envelope contained matters of such vital importance until I heard of Mr. Fletcher's arrest, and then, I'm free to confess, I was rather sorry I had them, and I didn't quite know what to do with them. I knew, of course, that you'd suspect where they were, but I felt sure you'd keep mum, and then it occurred to me that I might make a nice little pile by working their return through you. I've tried to see you two or three times lately, but couldn't manage it. Tonight, however, I knew I'd have to get at you some way, or it would be too late, and so I shinned it up that waste pipe outside, as soon as I thought the coast was clear. Now, are you satisfied?"

"Yes, I'm satisfied that the papers are intact," Imogen thoughtfully replied, while her mind rapidly revolved certain conditions. She dare not go to the judge and ask for a thousand pounds. Such a request would appear the very height of presumption in her, unless she gave the real reason for wanting it, and she knew well enough that he would never pay it in that case; the straightforward old gentleman would never consent to buy off a thief in any such way. Besides, the very fact of such a proposition coming through her would look suspicious.

She certainly had no means of raising any such amount herself, for, even if she gave the man all she had and should sell every jewel she possessed, she could not meet his demand.

She might ask Will to lend it to her; but how could she ever repay the sum and what excuse could she give him for wanting so much?

She saw that Reardon was anxious to get rid of the papers—that he feared a felon's fate if they should be found in his possession.

She wondered how it would work to set some officer on his track and make him suffer to the extent of the law.

True, when he found himself cornered, he would revenge himself upon her by betraying her secret; but she could face him and deny it and claim that he was only trying to ruin her, because he had come to her to sell the papers and she had refused to give him the exorbitant price he had demanded for them.

She felt sure that he could never prove that she went aboard the vessel and exchanged those children, but he could prove that she had given birth to a child in Rome, and if he also knew, as he said he did know, where that perforated extension was, a revelation of those facts would be very detrimental to her.

Oh! she did not know what to do—whichever way she turned, danger and betrayal seemed to hedge her about. If she could only get him into her power and make him think she was going to give him up to the authorities, he might possibly weaken and surrender the package to her. But how—how could she accomplish such a coup?—and there was so little time before the verdict would be rendered.

"I do not think it will be possible to get the money," she finally remarked, as he made an impatient movement over her long silence.

"It'll do no harm to try—I've got to have it from somewhere," he said, with significant emphasis.

His retort angered her, and her eyes began to blaze.

Just at that moment she caught a sound that thrilled her like an electric shock; it was a voice outside her room.

It was Alice who was speaking. She was coming up-stairs to bed, and she had paused in the hall to say a last word or two to Will. A sudden impulse seized Imogen, and, without waiting to consider it, she sprang to her feet with an air of well-simulated alarm.

"Hark!" she said, in a low, startled tone, "here comes Olive—Mr. Fletcher's daughter. What shall I do with you? she always comes to say good night to me before she goes to bed. Oh! be quick! Step into this closet until she goes, and then I will go to the judge."

She sped swiftly across the room and opened a door.

The detective could hear the girl talking outside, and, under the pressure of the moment, he did not pause to consider what he was doing.

He also arose and passed into what he supposed to be a closet.

The next moment Imogen had closed and locked the door upon him.

TO BE CONTINUED.

EVERY little boy and girl wants a Teddy Bear and here is an opportunity for every father or mother who reads COMFORT to get one without expense. "Teddy" looks exactly as you see him in the picture above. He is a big shaggy fellow, nearly a foot tall, made of rich, handsome brown plush, paws lined with felt, carefully stitched and finished and his head, arms and legs are jointed in such a manner that you can place him in almost any position. He will stand up, sit up, stand on his head, go on all four feet, in fact, you can make him assume all kinds of positions that are so comical and lifelike that it makes the children scream with delight just to look at him. "Teddy" is so well made that no matter how roughly he is handled he cannot become broken and with ordinary care should last for years. Teddy Bears like this one generally cost a good round sum in the stores, but as we have imported a large quantity of them from Germany at a special low price we can well afford to give them away on terms so liberal that there is no reason why every boy and girl should not have one of them at once. We will send you "Teddy" free if you will accept the following special

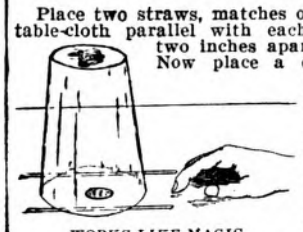
A Corner for Boys

By Uncle John

HERE it is April again, the first real spring month in the Northern states, but as it is still muddy and the weather and other conditions not very enticing for out-door sports, I give you instructions for making things to occupy your spare time until the wild flowers bloom and the birds come.

And speaking of the birds reminds me to say that the little feathered songsters that will soon be with us, searching out favorable places to build their nests and rear their young, are our friends and should be protected in every possible way. They are busy from sunrise to sunset hunting and eating the worms, bugs, grubs and plant lice that are such pests to the farmers and damage or destroy the fruit trees and growing crops.

The scientists tell us that if it were not for the help of our bird friends these insect pests would become so numerous as to destroy the crops and human beings would starve.

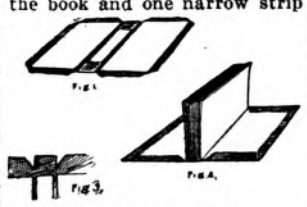


Don't harm the birds; don't frighten them when they are building their nests, and above all don't disturb their nests when they are hatching their eggs or raising their young.

Robbing a bird's nest is a crime punishable by fine or imprisonment under the law of nearly all the states and any boy who is mean and cruel enough to break that law should also receive a thrashing from his parents that he will remember all his life.

The birds soon learn to know their friends, and if you let them alone they will build their nests in the trees and vines and shrubs near your house and cheer you with their company and their song.

A Coin Trick

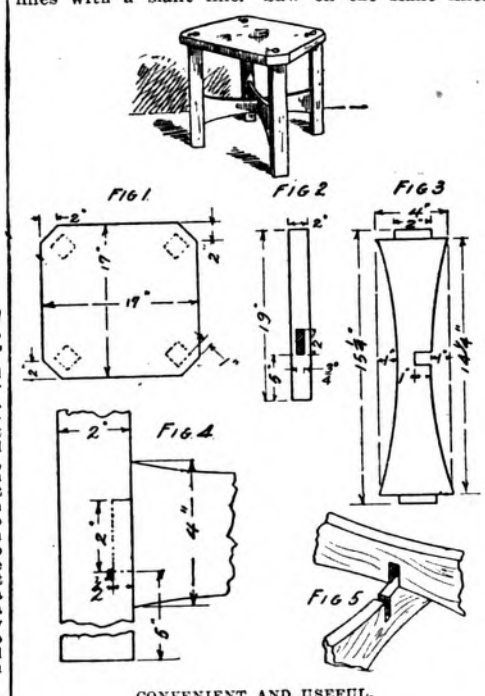


Place two straws, matches or toothpicks on the table-cloth parallel with each other and about two inches apart as shown in cut. Now place a coin, preferably a dime, between the straws, and put a glass mouth down over the coin on top of the straws. The question now is, can you take the coin from under the glass without touching it with your hands or any object and without removing or touching the glass or straws. The way to do it is to place your hand in the position of hand shown in the drawing and scratch the table-cloth rapidly. As though it were a thing of life the coin will rapidly move toward the forefinger. Try it and see.

WORKS LIKE MAGIC.

Binding a Book

The simplest way I know of covering a book is to cut out three pieces of heavy cardboard, two for the side covers of the book and one narrow strip for the back. They are then placed alongside each other as shown in Fig. I and a piece of oil cloth or leather is firmly pasted to all three, and the edges of the cloth or leather turned over and stuck down as shown in illustration, after this has been neatly done place the cover on a smooth table and weight it down with books, letting it remain a day or two for the paste to set. When thoroughly dry brush a thick coating of glue on the top surface of the narrow strip in the center and set the leaves into it. You must then allow the glue to set about twenty-four hours and after that your book will be as good as new and should last a lifetime.



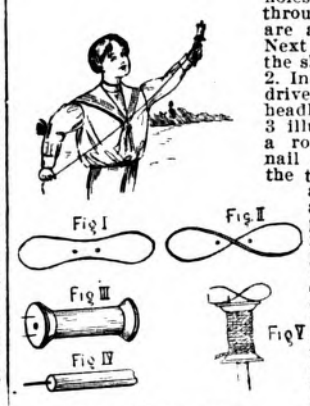
REBIND OLD BOOKS.

A Little Experiment

Crystals of beautiful form may be made by any boy in the following manner. Dissolve three teaspoonfuls of common baking soda in a glass of water and place a small stick or pencil across the top of the glass. Tie a thread to a Lima bean or large pea and let it hang from the cross stick on top of the glass so that it will reach about half way to the bottom. In a few minutes tiny white spines that resemble frost or snow will begin to deposit on the outer surface of the bean. This happens because the bean is porous and soaks up the water rapidly but the soda in solution cannot enter the bean and so remains outside. If you let it remain for an hour the bean will become completely coated with crystals.

A Stool

Here is a good design for beginners in wood working. It can be used as a stool to sit on, a foot rest, or a stand for a large potted plant. The drawings herewith make it easy for you to go ahead with the construction but a word of advice may add to their clearness. In cutting the corners off the top, shown in Fig. 1, measure two inches along each side and connect the ends of the short lines with a slant line. Saw on the slant line.

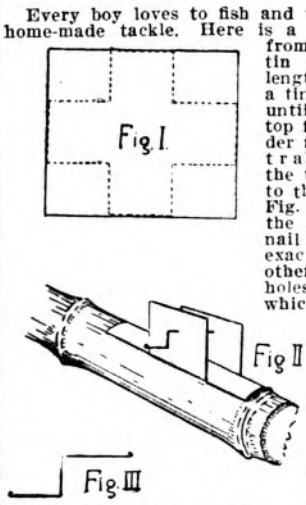


CONVENIENT AND USEFUL.

Mark the squares that the top of the legs are to fit on as shown. Fig. 2 is a plan of the leg. The slot shown is about one inch deep and is to receive an end of one of the diagonal pieces that cross each other under the stand. To cut the slots you bore holes with a one inch bit and then square up the space with a wood chisel. Figs. 3 and 5 show the crosspieces so clearly that no comment is necessary. The top is fastened to the legs with large screws. Holes must be bored through both pieces before the screw is inserted, otherwise there is danger of splitting. Mission stain polished with wax is an appropriate finish.

A Little Flyer

Here is an amusing scientific toy that may be made by even the youngest of my readers in a short space of time. From a baking powder can cut a piece of tin three inches long and of the shape and proportions shown in Fig. I. The holes are punched through with a nail and are a half inch apart. Next bend the tin to the shape shown in Fig. 2. Into a common spool drive two brads or headless nails as Fig. 3 illustrates. Fig. 4 is a round stick with a nail driven firmly into the top end. All parts are now complete and to be used are put together in the manner made plain by Fig. 5. First place the curved piece of tin on the spool, letting the two brads come up through the holes, and then put the nail end of the stick into the bore in the center of the spool. Wind a cord around the spool as you would around a top to spin it; hold it in the manner shown in the top drawing and give the free end of the cord a swift pull. The tin flyer will be made to rotate very rapidly and this motion will cause it to ascend at least fifty feet high. There is a fine bit of science involved in the working of this toy and I sincerely hope you will make it and write me of your success.



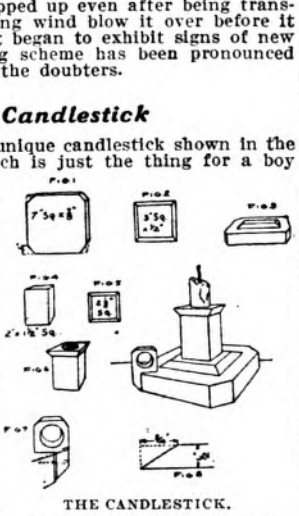
THE BOY'S DELIGHT.

Earning Money

Boys who live in the country have a chance to earn money as the spring opens by starting flowering plants and making hanging baskets for city folks. The youthful merchant should first acquaint himself with the kind of flowers and vines most in demand and start his seedlings early. He can then find time to go around and take orders for baskets of potted plants which are eagerly sought for in May and early June. Wire baskets can be bought from seed dealers for ten cents each and enough of moss to line a dozen will cost you only one dollar. After being lined with moss fill them with rich, black soil and put in your plants, say two geraniums, a fuschia, a sprig of asparagus, a wandering Jew vine, or the black-eyed Susan. The total cost of the filling should not exceed twenty cents and the selling price runs from one dollar for the small size to three dollars for the largest. This allows you a good profit for the work and with a capital of five dollars you could probably earn thirty dollars your first season. After that you will have regular customers and will gradually learn more about the business. If there is a big town near you this plan is well worth trying

A Fishline Reel

Every boy loves to fish and takes pride in his home-made tackle. Here is a handy reel made from a piece of flat tin and a ten-inch length of wire. Place a tin can on the stove until the bottom and top fall off and the solder runs from the central seam. Hammer the tin flat and cut it to the shape shown in Fig. 1. Bend up two of the sides and with a nail punch two holes exactly opposite each other. Through these holes put the wire which is first bent to a crank shape as shown in Fig. 3. Bend over the end of the wire to prevent it from pulling out. The whole device is then tacked to the fish pole as in Fig. 2. Tie the line to it and wind up by turning the crank. In this way you will find it an easy matter to keep your line free from tangles.

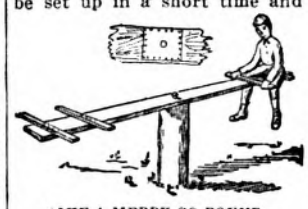


KEEPS THE LINE FROM TANGLING.

Moving a Tree

Americans are proud of their great mechanical triumphs but it is doubtful if we ever achieved anything to equal the feat of a German firm which successfully moved and transplanted a yew tree seven hundred years old. The distance traversed was considerably more than a mile. Expert botanists began to prepare the giant tree for its journey three years before the actual moving was done. An excavation was made around the base and roots were gradually clipped off so that all vitality would not be lost at once. An enormous wagon was then built and the tree, with many tons of earth clinging to its roots, was hoisted in. Ropes tied to its upper branches and made fast to the big wagon held it erect. Slowly it was moved along and finally planted in the hole that had been scientifically prepared for it. The tree had to be propped up even after being transplanted lest a strong wind blow it over before it took root. Soon it began to exhibit signs of new life and the daring scheme has been pronounced a success even by the doubters.

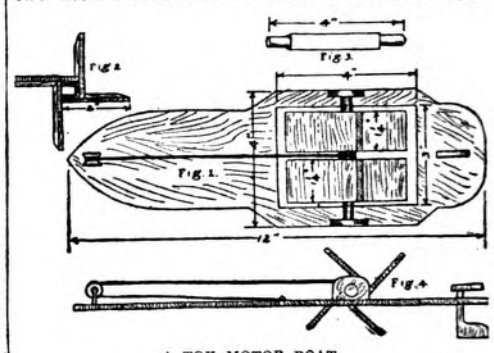
A Candlestick



The pretty and unique candlestick shown in the accompanying sketch is just the thing for a boy to make and own. Very little lumber is required but it should be of the best quality. White oak is of course the first choice with walnut, maple and chestnut as good substitutes. The first piece we begin on should be seven inches square. Saw off the corners and smooth well with sandpaper. Upon the center of this block we fasten with screws a piece three inches square and half as thick as the first piece. The upright piece with the one inch hole bored in the center comes next. It is fastened with glue. Fig. 7 shows the shape of the handle and the way it is secured in place. Fig. 8 shows the right bevel to give the two thin blocks, one on the top of the upright piece and the other under it. Finish with a coat of filler, stain and wax. The wax gives a rich, satiny appearance and is better than varnish. You can obtain it wherever paints are sold.

THE CANDLESTICK.

The Whirligig



There are some things so good that they never grow old. This whirligig is one of them. It can be set up in a short time and it will yield many hours of good out-door sport. Sink a sound post into the ground to a depth of three feet and let about the same distance extend above ground. A hole one inch in diameter is bored in the top of the post and a heavy plank also bored in the exact center is bolted loosely on. The part of the plank that comes in contact with the top of the post may be reinforced with tin as shown in the small sketch. One person sits on each end of the plank and a third lad pushes them around. In the picture one end of the riding board is left unoccupied so that you may see how the cross-pieces are put on.

LIKE A MERRY-GO-ROUND.

A Model Boat

Here is a model boat that differs materially from the common type of self-propelling gliders. Get a thin piece of poplar, or any wood that cuts easily, and with your pocket knife cut it to the shape shown in the large diagram in the center. The axle is made of a square stick whittled round at both ends as shown in Fig. 3. The bearing, or part upon which the axle rests, is formed of two little blocks with round holes bored in them to receive the ends of the axle. This is shown plainly in Fig. 4. There are two paddle wheels. Each one is made of four pieces of cigar box wood joined so as to leave a square hole in the center as Fig. 2 illustrates. The axle passes through the square hole and the blades are then tacked to it with light brads. A little pulley or spool is mounted on a staple or piece of wire as shown at the left end of Fig. 1 and also Fig. 4. A strong rubber band cut, is arranged as a belt as in Fig. 4, with one end fastened to the boat's deck and the other end to the axle. When all is ready place the boat in the water and give the wheel a dozen turns, then let go, and the blades will buzz around and send the boat forward for a distance of twenty feet. Try this plan and write me a letter about it.

In May COMFORT I shall show you how to make a lot of things especially adapted to summer sports and out-door recreation. Till then be good and have a good time, too. UNCLE JOHN.

National Forest Grazing

"Lots of people don't know anything at all about our national forest area and what is being done with it," said a governmental looking party, "but the government is going right ahead with the work. As evidence of what is doing in the mater of grazing on these lands let me say that last year more than 27,000 stockmen paid for grazing permits on the 160 national forests we have. These including Alaska and Porto Rico amount to about 187 million acres. Of the 27,466 permits, 22,032 were for grazing 1,557,188 cattle, and 5,434 were for grazing 7,867,851 sheep and goats. For 1915 nearly 11 million animals can be grazed, including about two million head of horses and cattle, nine million sheep and goats and 65,000 hogs. This means an increase over last year of 38,000 horses and cattle and 347,000 sheep and goats. And this increase is on an acreage of nearly a million less than at the beginning of 1913. But the carrying capacity of our forest areas has been increasing gradually each year owing to a better utilizing of the forage resources. You see, Uncle Sam manages his property much better than private citizens do and he handles the stock as they never did and makes the most out of every acre of grazing land. At least, if he doesn't do it now, he is getting there and by and by we will wonder why it took us so long to find out how to look after grazing land and handle stock as it should be handled."

"Virtue itself offends when coupled with forbidding manners."—Bishop Middleton.

In order to meet the demand for information made by COMFORT subscribers on the kindred subjects of Etiquette and Personal Appearance, this column will be devoted to them, and all questions will be answered, but no inquirer shall ask more than two questions each month. We would suggest to readers to cut this column out and paste it in a scrap book. Address letters to Etiquette Editor, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

E. P. M., Arma, Texas.—It would be "entirely in harmony with conventionalities" for you to accept the invitation of your friend to visit her, even though her brother who has been paying you attention should be a visitor at the same time.

Brown Eyes, Canton, Kans.—Etiquetticians have not yet determined what a gentleman means when he touches his lips four times with his fingers in front of a lady when she is looking at him, nor yet again what is meant when he looks cross-eyed at the lady when he is walking on the street. It may be inferred that he is throwing kisses to her in the first instance, but the cross-eyed proposition remains a mystery.

Yellow Curls, Grider, Ark.—It is bad form for gentlemen to call their lady friends by "cute and sweet names." But it seems impossible to correct the habit. (2) Oct. 9, 1898, Tuesday; Oct. 4, 1900, Thursday. (3) Girls should not go out at night, unless properly accompanied. Moonlight hay-rides are all right, with older persons as chaperons, but not at this season.

E. B., Amarillo, Texas.—It would be proper for you to go to the show at the opera house, notwithstanding one of the ushers used to be your best young man until you quarreled. Of course, you should return his smile. What do you want with it, now that you have quarreled?

Blue Eyes, St. Joseph, Mo.—As you did not meet the twins at the depot—you should say "station" not "depot"—it was quite proper for you to write and ask them to call at your house, but it was not very good form to write to their sister and ask her to tell them "Hello" for you. That is rather common. (2) It is quite as proper to sit on a settee with a young man making his first call, as it is at any other time. Only don't get too close together. (3) Do not kiss or be kissed unless engaged.

Mrs. J. W., Maquoteka, La.—The lady may shake hands with the gentleman or may not as she chooses. It is friendlier if she does.

K. L. D., Bourbon, Ind.—We think, instead of being hasty and leaving your husband, that you use all your powers of persuasion to brace him up and bring him to a realizing sense of his condition. He is by no means hopeless yet, and we believe if you will take a firm and kindly stand that he will come to himself again and be a good husband and a useful man. Let him understand clearly that you will leave him if he persists in his present course. Insist upon your rights as a woman, wife and mother and submit to no imposition.

Junior, Lowden, Ia.—A gentleman should inscribe on his signet-ring the initial of his last name. In any use of one initial only the name should be the person's last name.

City Girls, Grundy, Mo.—What to say to a bride after the ceremony depends upon circumstances and should come spontaneously from the heart. If you have to be told what to say, you had better say nothing. (2) Why shouldn't a girl of limited means accept the attention of a rich young man? Nine times in ten the poor girls are every way superior to the rich young man.

Blue Eyes, Rosa, Ark.—If parents have no better judgment than to permit fifteen and sixteen-year-old daughters to go around with young men, the girls themselves ought to know that they are too young and inexperienced to attempt such association. Teach your parents, if they can't teach you. (2) An undivorced man passing himself off as unmarried is not the kind of a man for a girl to marry when he has secured his divorce. He is a deceiver by nature and to be shunned. (3) Beware of the foolish young man who asks a girl if she loves him before he has told her he loves her. Beware of him anyhow, if he begins to talk love right off the bat. He talks that way to every girl.

Troubled Wife, Tyler, Texas.—Your husband is one of those domestic tyrants who as husbands assume to know everything about the house, which is the wife's own territory, and you must declare your independence now and prove to him that you know your business as well as he knows his and you know your own business much better than he knows it. You are entitled to a fair share of the income to use as you please, and being a sensible and careful woman you should insist upon having it and have it. Farmers' wives in all well-regulated families, have certain products of the farm which they look after as their pin-money and no properly regulated husband will object to his wife having what is hers. Under the circumstances you must assert yourself and have it out with your husband as to your proper place in the firm. Thousands of women all over this country are very much better house managers than their husbands, but they tamely submit to being bossed and the husbands go about as though they were superior beings, whose sole privilege is bossing everything. Possibly some women need such bossing, but most of them do not and they should not submit to what they know is wrong. In the old times that was considered the wifely thing to do, but women's condition has changed mightily in these days, and they can take their proper place in the married relation if they have the spirit and the sense to do it. Now, proceed to have an understanding with your husband and make it so plain that he cannot get away from it. Otherwise you will be his property all your life, and we may say in all sincerity, that if you know better and can do better and do not, you deserve to have any treatment he may give you. Begin by reading him this advice as your platform of principles and action. Read him the story "Bull Nettles," in March COMFORT.

Rosebud, Buena Vista, Va.—It is quite improper for a fifteen-year-old girl to permit a man of twenty-three to call on her and to remain as late as two A. M., and wholly unladylike for her to go out on the street to look for him after church if he has not been there. If you have parents, don't they know better than to permit you to do such things?

T. O. M., Moorhead, Minn.—Unless the lady is all temper and no common sense she will not resent a gentleman's going to a dance with another lady after she has twice declined to go with him. (2) When a lady has grown older than all the unmarried men in her community and lost her popularity, we don't know what she should do, but we think if she has good tact she can make herself useful and popular. Etiquette makes no provision for such a condition. (3) The lady should make it conspicuously and almost painfully evident to the gentleman who insists upon paying her lover's attentions that she has no use for him in that capacity. She may adopt her own means for doing this and all the rules of etiquette will protect her in any course she may pursue.

Gray Eyes, New Meadows, Idaho.—There is no rule known whereby a husband may be made affectionate and give his wife words of endearment. You say you never quarrel and "get along fine," and a great many wives think if their married lives were like that, it would be all they would ask. We cannot tell you what to do to secure what you lack in your husband's manner towards you, but we suggest that you should find some consolation in the thought that it might be a great deal worse. Then there are your "dear little children." They count for something, don't they? It might be worse, especially if he was lavishing loving words on other women.

Brown Eyes, Frankfort, Ind.—To get track of the man you want to find you should write for information to Secretary of War, Washington, D. C. As he went into the army, a record of him is kept at the Department and you may be able to locate him in this way.

the stamp for the benefit of the writer. That does not mean the sisters I am asking to help me. I hope to help them in return.

Miss Carrie Cates, I see from your off-hand way in answering letters, that you have many things to learn. I can tell you something interesting if you will write to me.

Mrs. D. Illig, your instructive letter must be very helpful to the mothers who teach their children at home. I have no little ones, but I know it would be a great pleasure to teach children as you suggest. I hope you will write again.

Will the Mrs. Adney who wrote to me when I lived at Gresham, Colo. write again?

I would like to exchange letters with some of the Florida sisters.

A cheer for dear old "Grandma." She knows what to do for the naughty boys and girls.

Kindest wishes to you all, MRS. ELNORA STEED.

1021 West 2nd St., ABILENE, KANS.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

We have taken COMFORT for years, but this is my first attempt to gain admittance to the corner.

I am twenty-two years of age, a brunette, five feet four inches in height, and weigh about one hundred and ten pounds.

Mrs. Zada Callaway, you are the only one I have ever heard of that spells your name as I do mine; glad to know of you.

To those who sent cards to Nettie Jones of Oakland, Cal. (whose name was in COMFORT Postal Requests.) will say that she is a very dear friend of mine, we having lived in the same apartment house in Oakland. I have been home almost a year now, but we are still corresponding.

I have lived in Abilene eight years; it is a beautiful town, nearly all paved, and well lighted and is the county seat of Dickinson county, and the home of the famous Sand Springs Water, which is 99 99-100 per cent pure.

Now for my "mite."

To relieve headache, press first two fingers of left hand on first vertebræ where neck joins body (the first one you can feel plainly), then with right hand on forehead press slowly back, resisting slightly, as far as head will go. Hold in this position a few moments then slowly bend to normal position. A nurse told me this. Try it, it's a sure cure for nervous headache.

Sisters, let me tell you how to clean a hair switch. If just a little dusty, dip in gasoline. If very dirty, braid switch loosely or double several times, soap well, have good sudsy, warm water, squeeze switch until suds look dirty. Do this in several waters until suds are clean, then rinse in clear warm water until all the soap is out.

I make switches in my spare hours. I used to do this work altogether. Let me warn all the hairdressers to always disinfect all combings in gasoline before straightening. I learned this only after my hair began coming out in handfuls, and also found it had affected my lungs. Am gradually getting over both by good care of my scalp and much fresh air.

If any of you are interested in physical culture or are vegetarians, would be delighted to hear from you. Also would like to hear from our Arkansas sisters, as I am interested in that state.

I think I see Mrs. Wilkinson frowning at me, so I will go, with regards to each and everyone of you.
Sincerely, ZADA MERL HOLEMAN.

Best Ways of Doing Things Around the Home

Sprinkle clothes with hot water and they will iron easier. MRS. ODELL ETHRIDGE, Celeste, Texas.

To remove grease spots from wall paper, hold a piece of blotting paper over the spot and press with hot iron. MRS. M. M. CUBBISON, Moran, Kans.

A tin cup three quarters full of water, placed in the oven while baking potatoes will cause them to bake softer and better.

When vegetables or flowers are slightly frost bitten, sprinkling with cold water before the sun shines on them will often save them.
S. L. PENDERGRASS, Macon, Ga.

If the stove is cracked a good cement can be made of equal parts of wood ashes and salt, reduced to a paste with cold water. Fill the cracks when stove is cold and it will soon harden.
MRS. DE JOHN, Canon City, Colo.

Dustless dust cloth, one pint kerosene, one third ounce oil of paraffin, five cents' worth of oil of lavender. Mix well. This amount will dampen six yards of black cheese-cloth, which makes twelve dusters. Dampen cloths, hang in the air a few minutes then put away in some large can or box with a cover.
MRS. CHAS. BREADON, Black Creek, N. Y.

Pick peas while green and tender and dry in the pod for use during the winter.
MRS. WM. WHERRETT, Tenino, Wash.

When grinding raisins, if cold water is poured over them they will not stick to the grinder.
MISS MAYME HAWTHORN, Hydetown, Pa.

Easter eggs, wrap the eggs tightly and carefully in bits of bright calico that will fade. Boil for half an hour. Patterns and colors will be transferred to the egg shell. The children will enjoy these.

To remove finger marks from varnished furniture, use sweet oil.

Bar soap when first bought should be cut into square pieces and put in a dry place. It will last longer after shrinking and drying.

To remove fresh paint from the floor, cover at once with vinegar and wipe off with a soft cloth.

A good way to wash bottles and vinegar cruets is to put in some uncooked rice and shake well.

When grease is spilled on the kitchen floor pour cold water upon it at once. This hardens it and prevents soaking into the boards.

Bedbugs. To exterminate these pests apply freely a mixture composed of one pint of turpentine and one ounce of corrosive sublimate. If applied early in the day the scent of the turpentine will be gone by night. This is a poison so keep it away from children, also label the bottle plainly. L. E. KERR, Ft. Smith, Ark.

When clothes are folded off the rack after ironing, examine each piece carefully and see that none are put away that need mending or buttons.
MRS. GEO. G. TUBBS, Montevideo, Minn.

When grease spatters on the stove, sprinkle a little salt on it and the house will not be filled with smoke.
MISS LESLIE HARRIS, Trout Creek, Mont.

Remedies

GALL STONES.—Take a large dose of Epsom Salts and several hours later a small glass of pure olive oil. This should be repeated several times with intervals of perhaps four days between. The salts clear the bowels and the oil softens the gall stones.
MISS BESSIE L. ESTES, Tabor, Iowa.

To induce sleep, bathe the feet in hot water.
MRS ODELL ETHRIDGE, Celeste Texas.

SPRAIN.—Scrape or grate raw beets and bind on part injured. Renew when dry. A few applications will afford relief.

RUSTY NAIL OR WIRE SCRATCHES.—Bind crushed peach tree leaves to affected part.
MRS. GARSHWILER, Franklin, Ind.

BURNS.—Olive oil and corn-starch is an excellent remedy for a burn and often prevents scars. Apply olive oil to fresh burn and then as much corn-starch as will stick. Do not rub the burn.
MISS LESLIE HARRIS, Trout Creek, Mont.

The Family Doctor

So many inquiries are received from COMFORT subscribers concerning the health of the family that this column will be devoted to answering them. The remedies and advice here given are intended only for simple cases; serious cases should be addressed to physicians, not to us.

Address The Family Doctor, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

NOTICE.—As the privileges of this and all other departments of COMFORT are for subscribers only, no attention will be given any inquiry which does not bear the writer's correct name and address. Initials only, or a fictitious name, if requested, will appear in the published answer, but the inquiry must invariably be signed by the writer's true name.

Mrs. A. H., Kenwood, Fla.—Medicine will do you no permanent good for so-called malaria, if you live in a malarial neighborhood. Quinine is the usual remedy, but no definite rule of quantity can be given, because in some malarial sections the people almost eat it. It will affect the hearing when taken to excess. You had better move away than to fill yourself up with medicine.

Mrs. C. C., Hinckley, Minn.—Kidney and bladder troubles are too serious ailments for you to attempt to doctor yourself. You will only make matters worse as you would do in trying to do anything else you knew nothing about. The doctor's bill may be larger than you think it should be, but your health and strength are worth all they cost, and you cannot get them back by trusting yourself to treatment from anybody except a physician who can examine you and give you what you need. Other COMFORT readers please take notice.

E. H., Altura, Minn.—The ordinary remedy for warts is lunar caustic, which burns them off. But as yours are small and numerous, they are probably due to some nervous trouble or other and you should consult a physician.

Brunette, Chelsea, Ia.—You are another one of those COMFORT mothers who are trying to bring a child through all the ills of children without knowing anything about what to do. The wonder is that your child is alive, at all. Take the advice of your friends and of us and go to a doctor with the baby. You are guessing at what should be done and also expect us to guess at it and prescribe. We decline to assist in ruining the future health of your child.

L. V. H., Baudette, Minn.—Stuttering is due to diffidence, self-consciousness or nervousness and usually can be cured by treatment in the nature of training, but practictioners skilled and competent to give the proper treatment are not commonly found. Send your boy, if possible, to someone of the institutes where the best treatment may be had. Do not delay, because it will become more difficult to remedy as the boy grows older and the habit becomes fixed. (2) You must know what causes the spots on your face before treating them, and only a doctor who can examine them can be expected to be of service.

N. C., Columbia, S. C.—Olive oil, that is, pure olive oil, is probably better than cotton seed oil but either is an excellent lubricant for the bowels. Take one or two tablespoonfuls with your meals. The pain which you think is colic may be from some bladder trouble and you should see a doctor. It may be from the operation for appendicitis.

A. A. W., Crozet, Va.—The finger nails are subject to various diseases, but they cannot be treated except by a physician who can make a personal examination and determine causes. We advise COMFORT readers who are so troubled not to neglect their nails if the trouble reappears or continues.

Mrs. C. T., Harrold, S. Dak.—Falling hair may be the result of disease of the scalp, or other disturbance lying more deeply, or it may be natural as is the case in many instances of young men becoming bald. When this latter is the cause, very little can be done to hold it in place, but in the former if the disease is properly diagnosed and treated the hair may be made healthy and normal. You should consult a physician who knows something about the hair, not necessarily a specialist, and get his advice and treatment. The various hair tonics to be had at drug-stores are good enough for the ordinary hair troubles, but are of no value when other than local disease causes the loss of hair. If your husband at twenty-four is losing his hair and it is not a falling in his family, he should go to a physician not a drug-store.

Mrs. R. L., Decatur, Ga.—If you have pellagra, a most serious and often fatal disease, you should know much more about how it should be treated than merely what you should eat. See a physician, and the best you know. Also write to your State Board of Health for additional information.

W. M., Saugertias, N. Y.—Red precipitate ointment is the usual remedy for freezing of feet or other parts of the body after the frost has been taken out. But when the freezing has been deep the resulting sore is very difficult to remedy and very careful and often long treatment is required under a physician's direction.

Dollie, Tucson, Ariz.—First off, stop worrying about your relatives back East. If anything is going to happen to them, it will happen just the same whether you are there, or in Arizona, or Africa, and you cannot be any prevention. So why worry? Most of your other troubles are due to your disturbed nerves and if you will take the advice of your home doctor—he knows your case better than any distant doctor could—and not bother about yourself you will be quite as well as the average woman of your age.

J. R. J., Dexter, Mo.—There is nothing the matter with you except a kind of a foolish nervous fear that something will be the matter with you. Plenty of young people get fits like that and sometimes make themselves really sick just thinking about themselves. Buy a health magazine and read up on deep breathing and other good rules of exercise and sane living and eating. You are ignorant and need knowledge. You have no more tapeworm than you have boa constrictor. If you had either you would be hungry all the time, instead of thinking you have no appetite. You are not in love, are you? Nineteen-year-old boys sometimes become thin when they have that complaint. But don't worry, you'll outgrow it.

Anxious, Senecaville, Ohio.—At a guess, for you give few satisfactory symptoms, we should say your husband's trouble is indigestion, the common complaint, and he should change his diet completely and eat only such food as agrees with him, chewing every mouthful to a pulp before swallowing it. It is not so much what people eat, allowing that they eat well-cooked, sensible food in not too large quantities, as it is how they eat it—throwing down their throats in a hurry and rushing off without ever giving the digestive organs a chance to do their work. To have a healthy body, there must be a healthy mind and the healthy mind thinks of the stomach's work and does not give it impossible tasks.

V. W., Wenatchee, Wash.—Sweaty hands are due sometimes to nervousness and the prevention of the perspiration is difficult. The hands should be kept open as much as possible and exposed to the air to keep them dry. As an internal remedy take one pill of one-sixtieth grain of strychina sulphate after each meal for twenty days. Ask the druggist about this.

Mrs. H. J., Lowell, Mass.—There is no universal remedy for constipation, so we cannot give you either a formula or a diet. Generally speaking the patient must decide what his particular stomach can most easily assimilate, and then eat only such food. No two stomachs are alike in their demands. There are dozens of laxatives, some good for one person and others good for others, and the one best adapted to your needs is the one you should use. One which is good for the majority, but not for all, is olive oil, an excellent intestinal lubricant. Take one or two tablespoonfuls of pure olive oil at mealtime, either during, or before or after. This will not begin to act at once, but its effect is sure and good. Don't get cheap and adulterated oil.

Mrs. F. C., S. Auburn, Nebr.—The physician in charge of your case can best tell you what to do to remove or prevent the annoying spots on your skin, as he should know what causes them and be able to prescribe the proper remedy. Have you asked him?

F. W. T., Plentywood, Mont.—The intermittent red flushes of your face may be due to several causes, some that may be remedied, and others which you must endure because it is the nature of your circulation. Before any treatment can be prescribed the cause must be known and only an examination can determine that.

other day you like to call it falls, so long as one day out of seven is set aside for rest and worship. That is the main thing, and the only thing that matters—all the rest is of no consequence whatsoever. Some people it seems study the Bible solely with a view to finding texts, the meaning of which are so obscure that different interpretations can be put upon them. This gives them the longed-for opportunity of finding an excuse for differing with all other churches. Then before you know it another sect is built up, confident that it is the only one that has the right of way on the celestial road to the world beyond. And so they go on ad infinitum, and everyone who does not believe as this one or that one believes, is going to make the early acquaintance of the Old Boy below. Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath. The Russians celebrate their Christmas twelve days later than ours. As long as they celebrate it sometime what's the odds? And so if it pleases some people to choose the Jewish Sabbath as their day of rest, and we prefer to have our Sunday on the first day of the week, again what's the odds? Christianity is on trial before the world, or rather churchianity is. There is enough work for Christian denominations to do in abolishing war, poverty, disease, sin and moral death and more than enough to do to lift men to a higher plane of Christian brotherhood, where they will do unto others as they would have others do unto them. What is to be gained by splitting hairs as to whether Sunday falls on Tuesday, Monday or Friday or any other old day. What we should strive to do is to have Sunday every day of the week, and keep religion from being put away in moth balls six days out of seven. Bet your life the people who are quibbling about these things are not making any determined effort to rescue the two million child slaves that nice Christian gentlemen are grinding into profits beneath the cruel heels of industrial exploitation. If the Christian church is to justify its existence, it should get together in one united body, presenting a mighty front to the evils of our time. Let us tackle the big things first. Let us clear the field, throw out the rocks of oppression, root up the weeds of greed and prepare the soil in the proper fashion for the harvest of God. Until we do this, our work is vain, we are building on the sands, and the voice of the church is as one crying in the wilderness. There are material problems man must solve. They must clothe the body and feed the gnawing stomach ere the spirit life can bloom and flower. We've had two thousand years of churchianity, many generations of warring sects. Then in spite of it all we are presented with the bleeding spectacle of Belgium and Poland and nearer at home Ludlow and Crome, New Jersey. I look into the hearts and lives of tens of thousands of people yearly and know what they think and how they feel, how they live and what they know (and God knows and I know how little they do know compared to what they ought to know). Humanity wants rehabilitating and rebuilding from the bottom up. The foundation is all wrong. The tree is planted in a soil that can only bring forth bitter fruit. There has got to be a replanting. A brighter day is dawning (now don't think I'm trying to give a boost to another sect when I say that) and the war I hope will hasten that day instead of retarding it and whe that day comes Christ will rule in the hearts of men and man's brotherhood will not be an empty dream. When too that day comes the theological hair splitters and other gloomy ghosts of a benighted era will vamoose to the woods and the tall grass of oblivion forevermore.

"Ring out the old, ring in the new,
Ring out the false, ring in the true,
And hail the Christ that is to be."

P. O. Box 13. WILLIAMS, IND.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE AND COUSINS:

I received my membership card and button and was pleased with them. We have taken COMFORT for several years and think we could not do without it.

Well, Uncle Charlie, I guess I will describe our town next. There are about two hundred and fifty people that live in Williams. The most of the town is up on a hill. We have one depot, one hotel, one flour mill, an electric light plant, a post-office, five stores, three blacksmith shops, one barber shop and a telephone exchange. White river goes past Williams. There are some nice fish caught out of the river here. A person can get a few nibbles most any time. Uncle Charlie if you and Billie the Goat will come to Williams I will take you fishing.

I am seventeen years old, weigh one hundred and eighteen pounds, am five feet eight inches tall. I have dark brown hair and brown eyes and I am not very fair skinned.

Hoping to hear from all. Your cousin,

STACIA BOWDEN. (No. 39,979).

That's quite a big city of yours Stacia, and there is so much of it you seem to have got it plentifully distributed, part on the top of the hill and part at the bottom I suppose. I remember I was in a very large city once, it consisted of one house, and it broke our hearts to think we could not build part of that "city" on the top of the hill and part at the bottom, but as the top of the hill was a mile up in the air we didn't have enough lumber to do the job. I'm very much interested in the fishing business in Williams, Ind. It's quite exciting to hear about nice fish being caught out of the river. I always thought that fish were caught in a river, but possibly the fish of Williams, Indiana, are amphibious, living on land or in the water; and I suppose one afternoon, when the sun was shining brightly, the fish put on their best Sunday clothes and hoisting their pink parasols, started out for a constitutional. I can in imagination, see them now, gazing at the many beautiful art exhibits in the windows of the three blacksmiths' shops and dropping in the barber shop for afternoon tea and a hair cut, and while getting their toes manicured, you, Stacia, of course came along and caught them out of the river, and took them home and dropped them in the frying pan. Those must be nice, obliging fish in your section of the country. I remember getting caught out of the river once myself. I had been swimming and when I came out on the bank of the stream I found someone had stolen my clothes, then some dogs came up and thought I was a new kind of rabbit. I was wishing I had been for at least I would have had a nice fur coat on. The dogs chased me until I ran into the arms of a policeman who loaned me a barrel to walk home in. Ever after that when I went swimming I took my clothes into the water with me and sat on them so that no one could steal them. Better be sure than sorry. It must be nice to know that in Williams, Indiana, you can get a few nibbles any time. As you don't seem to have any restaurants, I'm wondering where you get your nibbles. Of course nobody need go short of a nibble as long as you have a flour mill. In a burst of confidence you inform us that White river goes past Williams, but you forgot to tell us whether it goes past the part that is at the bottom of the hill or the part that is at the top. Maybe, dear, you'll tell us that later on.

DEWITT, ILL.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:

I am a lady of eighteen summers, have light hair, and gray eyes, or in other words a "blonde." At the present I am single, not knowing how long I'll remain single, it would be impossible to relate. I live in the country on a one hundred and sixty acre farm. My parents are thrifty farmers. I keep very busy for all it takes is Will Power. I have one married sister, and one niece, of coarse Uncle, I don't like to tell very many people I have a niece, cause it makes me feel old to be called auntie.

I enjoy taking care of house plants. If you were a little closer, I'd send you a bunch of blossoms to put in your office. I am very fond of flowers. For pets I have a pair of Italian birds. The singer is a dandy. His name is "Pete." Good birds go by that name. He learns all of the latest stunts. He can do the "tango" and furnish his own music when a mirror is placed so he can see himself. My little hen bird is setting on four eggs, will hatch this week.

I've been exposed to the mumps. Do you think I'll take them? If I don't take them day after tomorrow, I'll think I'm mump proof. If I should want to take the mumps, would you please send me directions?

Hoping to hear from you. Your niece,

ELVAETTA WEBB.

Alva Etta, you say it would be impossible to relate, but you don't tell me what it would be impossible to relate. Why leave us in the lurch

HOW HE QUIT TOBACCO

This veteran, S. B. Lamphere, was addicted to the excessive use of tobacco for many years. He wanted to quit but needed something to help him.

He learned of a free book that tells about tobacco habit and how to conquer it quickly, easily and safely. In a recent letter he writes: "I have no desire for tobacco any more. I feel like a new man."

Any one desiring a copy of this book on tobacco habit, smoking and chewing, can get it free, postpaid by writing to Edward J. Woods, N 147, Station E, New York City. You will be surprised and pleased. Look for quieter nerves, stronger heart, better digestion, improved eyesight, increased vigor, longer life and other advantages if you quit poisoning yourself.

A Gold Ring for Baby

Premium No. 7262

Premium No. 7272

THESE seamless gold-filled rings are the two most popular styles for babies and young children. No. 7262 is a flat band ring with a beautiful scroll design and set with two turquoise and one pearl. No. 7272 is a pretty chased design without stones. Please bear in mind that these rings are not "electro-plated" or "gold-finished" but genuine 14K gold-filled which means that they are just as handsome as a solid gold ring and will wear almost as long. They come in sizes from 0 to 4 inclusive and be sure to give size wanted when ordering. If you are uncertain as to what size you want then you should measure baby's ring finger by placing a strip of paper around the second joint so that the ends will just meet and then pin or paste the strip of paper to your letter. Do not send it loose in the envelope. Also be sure to say in your letter whether you want ring No. 7262 or 7272.

Club Offer. For two 15-month subscriptions to COMFORT at 25 cents each we will send you your choice of either one of these handsome gold-filled baby rings free by Parcel Post prepaid. Be sure to state number and size wanted.

Six Wheel Chairs in March

274 is COMFORT'S Total to Date

Six wheel chairs in March equals our January record, and with the four in February makes a total of sixteen for the first three months of this year. That is good; it is encouraging. Now if we can only keep up that average rate through the next nine months it will bring our total for the year 1915 up to 64. We ought to do that and better too, and we can if our readers will take hold and boost as they should.

I am not scolding those who do help for not having done more—of course I want them to do all they can, for they are our main reliance—but the trouble is that all the work for the Wheel-Chair Club is done by a few. I am appealing especially to those that don't help and am trying to induce them to do something, to send at least one subscription to help provide wheel chairs for the hundreds of needy, suffering shut-ins.

Following are the names of the recipients of the six March wheel chairs. The figures after their names indicate the number of subscriptions sent in by them or by their friends in their behalf.

Walter Layton, Albermarle, R. R. 2, N. C., 200; James Roland, Burnsville, N. C., 154; Luther Silver, Prentis, Okla., 119; Walter Ridgway, Shepherdsville, Ky., 107; Mary E. Horne, Roseboro, N. C., 100; John W. Nolte, Clearwater, Kans., 95.

Walter Layton needs a wheel chair if any man does. His is indeed a distressing case. He is a hopeless, helpless cripple with a broken back and paralyzed from his hips down, caused by an accident in a sawmill last July. He has a wife and five small children and, as his accident has cut off his means of support, they are in needy circumstances. The 200 subscriptions that his friends and neighbors got for him came to me all in one bunch and I ordered a wheel chair to be shipped to him the same day.

The 154 subscriptions for James Roland's chair have all come in since the middle of January. I can't tell you much about his condition as he has not given me the full particulars as yet.

Luther Silver is another crippled, helpless father. He has a wife and three little boys, the oldest nine and the youngest less than two years old. Since last May his lower limbs have been crippled by paralysis. His sister, Mrs. G. M. Stewart, and Mrs. G. G. Richardson sent in the 119 subscriptions for him.

Walter Ridgway is a ten-year-old boy who has never known any of the joys of childhood. He has been utterly helpless from birth and cannot even feed himself. His sister, Ethel Ridgway, sent all the 107 subscriptions for him, and she writes that she is very desirous to get the chair so she can take her brother out for sun and air.

Miss Mary E. Horne is unable to walk as the result of spinal trouble from which she has suffered for the last six years. She expects her wheel chair to afford her great relief.

John W. Nolte is 68 years old and the last four years the entire left side of his body has been paralyzed. Last summer he fell from the porch and broke his right hip. He can use his right arm and hand, and that is all. The wheel chair will be a great comfort to him and a help to those who have to care for him.

This is a pitiable array of sufferers, yet it is no more than a fair sample of the host of others that are looking to COMFORT'S Wheel-Chair Club for help.

My good friends, will you not respond to their appeals?

We have an interesting Roll of Honor this month and some good letters of thanks below.

Sincerely yours,
W. H. GANNETT, Publisher of COMFORT.

P. S. For the information of our many new subscribers let me explain that for each and every 200 new 15-months subscriptions to COMFORT sent in either singly or in clubs by persons who direct that they are to be credited to COMFORT'S WHEEL-CHAIR CLUB instead of claiming the premiums to which they would be entitled, I give a FIRST-CLASS INVALID WHEEL CHAIR to some worthy, destitute, crippled Shut-in and pay the freight, too. It is a large and expensive premium for me to give for that number of subscribers, but I am always glad to do my part a little faster each month than you do yours.

Subscription price is 25 cents, but if sent in clubs of five or more for the Wheel-Chair Club, I accept them at 20 cents each.

COMFORT'S Wheel Chair Work a Blessing to the Poor Cripples

INKA, R. R. 5, Box 4, MISS.

MR. W. H. GANNETT:

DEAR FRIEND:—I received the wheel chair you sent me all right and I like it fine. I thank you and all who helped me more than I can tell. I have not walked or had my feet on the ground in fourteen years. I hope the Lord will bless and reward you for the good work you are doing for it is a blessing to the poor cripples. Please excuse bad writing for I am suffering very badly with my rheumatism today. Very truly yours,

CALLIE HALL.

Almost Helpless but with COMFORT Wheel Chair Can be Taken Out in the Air

EDENVILLE, Dec., 1914, MICH.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:

I received my wheel chair Thursday, and it is indeed a beautiful gift. I can do very little to help myself, but now I have got the chair it is easy to move me around, and to take me out into the air. I want to thank you and Mr. Gannett and all who helped me get the chair. Very gratefully yours, GEORGE R. SHAW.

The Roll of Honor comprises the names of those who have sent five or more subscriptions to credit of the Wheel-Chair Club during the month previous. Following each name is the number of subscriptions sent.

In this department will be carefully considered any legal problem which may be submitted by a subscriber. All opinions given herein will be prepared at our expense by eminent counsel.

Inasmuch as it is one of the principal missions of COMFORT to aid in upbuilding and upholding the sanctity of the home, no advice will be given on matters pertaining to divorce. Any paid-up subscriber to COMFORT is welcome to submit inquiries, which, so far as possible, will be answered in this department. If any reader, other than a subscriber, wishes to take advantage of this privilege, it may be done by sending twenty-five (25) cents, in silver or stamps, for a 15-month subscription to COMFORT thus obtaining all the benefits which our subscribers enjoy including a copy of the magazine for fifteen months.

Should any subscriber desire an immediate, special opinion on any legal question, privately mailed, it may be had by sending one dollar with a letter asking such advice, addressing the same to "THE EDITOR, COMFORT'S HOME LAWYER," Augusta, Maine, and in reply a carefully prepared opinion will be sent in an early mail.

Full names and addresses must be signed by all persons seeking advice in this column but not necessarily for publication. Unless otherwise requested, initials only will be published.

Mrs. J. G. B., Indiana.—Under the laws of California, we are of the opinion that upon the death of a married man, leaving no will, and leaving a widow and leaving more than one child or one child and descendants of a deceased child, the widow would receive, after payment of debts and administration expenses, one third of both the real and personal property, the balance going in equal shares to the children, the descendants of a deceased child taking the parent's share, and that she would receive in addition thereto her one half of all the community property owned by the husband and wife at the time of the husband's death; under the laws of Texas and under similar circumstances we think the widow would receive her one half of the community property, her one third of the personal property absolutely and a one third for life in her husband's real estate; in California we think the widow's share would be increased to one half in case there was but one child, or one line of descent, but that this would not be the case in Texas where the widow's share is only one third in either event, and the wife's interest in the real estate is limited to a life estate; we think community exists in both states; we do not think the widow's share is affected in either state by reason of her being a second wife, nor are the shares of the children of the second marriage any larger than the shares of the children of the first marriage; we think you should be careful not to confuse the intestacy laws with cases where the decedent leaves a will.

J. S., Oregon.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that at the time of the death of your first husband, if he left no will, and left him surviving a widow and children or descendants as his heirs at law and next of kin, and if his death occurred at a recent time so as to come under the present law, after payment of debts, you were entitled to receive one half of the personal property absolutely and dower of one half for life of his real estate, with remainder to his children in equal shares, the descendants of any child who predeceased him taking the parent's share, and that any person having an interest in your husband's estate can, through the proper action or proceeding in court, compel the partition of the real estate and a division of the personal property, if no actual partition of the real estate can be made the courts will compel a sale of same and proper division of the money proceeds thereof; upon your death, leaving no will, we think your second husband, after payment of debts, would receive one half of your personal property absolutely and curtesy of one half for life in your real estate, the curtesy would not attach to the real estate left by your first husband as your dower interest in that dies with you; we are assuming that the children you mention belong to you, as in case you leave no lineal descendants, and leave no will, your husband would receive your whole estate after payment of debts.

W. A. R., Tennessee.—We think your chances of recovering any portion of the real estate, owned by your grandfather in Alabama and abandoned during the Civil war, very remote, unless some steps have been taken for its recovery before this time, or unless the present holders thereof fail to substantiate possession for a proper number of years, the exact number depending upon facts not supplied in your communication to us.

P. O. B., Illinois.—We think your municipal government has the legal right to pass and enforce any reasonable ordinance regulating the use of the streets.

Mrs. I. O. P., Pennsylvania.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that upon the death of a married man, leaving no will, and leaving no issue the widow is entitled to receive the real or personal estate or both to the aggregate value of five thousand dollars absolutely in addition to the widow's exemption, and if the estate exceeds that amount, in addition thereto, one half the remaining real estate for life, and one half of the remaining personal property absolutely, and if he leaves no known heirs she takes all absolutely; if, however, the husband leaves a widow and children or issue, the widow receives one third of the real estate for life and one third of the personal estate absolutely, the balance going in equal shares to the children, the children of a deceased child taking the parent's share.

Mrs. J. C. J., Missouri.—We think the man who claims his mother agreed with him that the note she held for moneys loaned by her to him was to be destroyed and not paid after her death, can be compelled to establish such agreement by outside and impartial evidence, and that in the absence of any written agreement, such contention would be closely scrutinized by the courts; we think the jurisdiction of the courts of a state does not extend outside the state, but that a resident of one state can bring an action against the resident of another state in the Federal courts, or in the state courts of the state in which the defendant resides.

Mrs. J. J., Kansas.—We think the contract for the purchase of real estate should provide for the time of payment of the purchase price, and that in the absence of any such provision, the payment should be made at the time the deed is delivered.

A. H. N. D., South Dakota.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that a married man can sell and convey his real estate and give good title thereto without his wife's signature to the deed.

Miss R. O., California.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that marriages are prohibited between white persons and persons of negro descent, and we think this prohibition extends to all persons of negro descent regardless of just what the proportion of negro blood may be; we think it probable that a native of the islands you mention may be of mixed blood.

E. H., Illinois.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that the statute of limitations runs against unwritten or verbal contracts in five years, the statute, however, being extended in the case of minors, insane or incompetent persons, or in case the debtor is a non-resident at the time the right of action accrues.

M. A. B., North Dakota.—Under the laws of Wisconsin, we are of the opinion that the surviving husband should pay the taxes upon the real estate of his deceased wife, held by him as tenant by the curtesy, and we do not think he can procure an absolute title to such property by reason of such payments.

Mrs. A. C., Michigan.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that in order to constitute a valid or legal marriage it is necessary that the parties thereto procure a marriage license and have a marriage ceremony performed by a minister or some public official who by virtue of his office has the right to perform such ceremonies; of course, to such extent such ceremony must be public, and the minister or other official performing the ceremony is required to make a return to the proper official that such marriage has been performed, but it is optional with the parties as to whether they shall send out invitation or announcement cards.

A. R. L., North Dakota.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that the custody of the children is one of the questions for the court to decide in a divorce or separation acton, brought by one of the parties to a marriage against the other.

Mrs. S. E. V., Massachusetts.—We think the payment of dividends on the stock of a corporation depends upon the earnings of the corporation and the action of the board of directors, and that it would depend upon the corporate charter as to whether such dividends are cumulative; we have no knowledge as to whether there is any market for the stock you hold, nor do you state any circumstances as to the manner in which you were led to invest in this stock, these facts would have much to do with your chances of getting your money out of this investment.

you; but you seemed to have no thought except for pretty clothes.

"But this morning at church, I looked at your Easter bonnet—and it was last year's! I don't know anything about dresses, but I do recognize that bonnet, for I remember admiring it last year. Then I noticed your mother's new things, and all at once I saw you for what you really are. Geneva, you were willing to forego your own pleasure for your mother's sake—and I love you for it! I'm sorry I ever considered you vain and selfish, and I want to spend my whole lifetime making amends. Geneva, dear, will you marry me?"

Geneva was too happy to reply in words, but somehow—however it happened—when Mrs. Wilsey returned to the room, they told her they were engaged.

Some other girl is wearing the apple-blossom gown and the quaint little poke bonnet, but Geneva doesn't care—really does not care! For she owes her happiness to an Easter bonnet that was a year old and decidedly out of style.

legs and licked up, there is no doubt that the flies cause the trouble, and in either case the treatment which we prescribed—to spray fly repellants on the cattle in summer, and wash their backs with strong salt and water or a 1-50 solution of coal tar dip in early winter and a few weeks later will help keep off the flies and kill the small grubs, while the large ones should be squeezed out.

ONION MAGGOT.—What is the cause of white worms eating the roots of my onions? Please advise me if there is any way to prevent them.

MRS. S. B. P., Elkhart, Ind.

A.—There are two kinds of white worms that may injure onions,—the onion maggot, a small white grub that works inside the bulb, and common white grubs, the larvae of the June beetle. There is little that can be done for the onion maggot. See back numbers of this paper in which this question is fully discussed. The common white grub is most abundant on sod land. Since it lives over winter in the soil it is pretty difficult to get at it. The adult beetles may be caught at night. By making use of a strong light they may be lured into a trap and destroyed. The best known remedy for both these pests is crop rotation. Don't put onions on sod or on the same land on which they were grown last year.

KOHLRABI.—Can the vegetable Kohlrabi be kept through the winter in a cellar without becoming tough or decaying? When must the seed be planted and the plants gathered? Should they be hung up by the roots like a cabbage? MRS. H. C., Trout Creek, Mont.

A.—Kohlrabi can be kept through the winter on the stem on which it is grown in a cool, dry cellar either by hanging by the stem or by burying this stem in clean, moist sand. The cellar must be cool, held at a uniform temperature and not too moist. The seed should be planted at the usual spring planting time after the ground is warm, and the crop gathered late in the fall before freezing weather sets in.

THRIFTLESS GRAPE VINE.—Can you tell me why my grape vine does not bear? It is twenty years old. It will bud and then blight. I would like to know why the buds always blight. A. B. S. Winthrop, N. Y.

A.—The earth all around the roots and for a distance back from the main stem should be replaced with fresh, rich soil before buds form, or you should dig deeply and turn under a quantity of well-rotted manure as soon as possible in spring. Also work wood ashes into the surface soil and then mulch heavily with well-rotted manure. The vine should be thoroughly pruned by an expert. A grape vine should be pruned in the fall when done growing; if pruned in the spring it is likely to bleed injuriously.

ECZEMA CAN BE CURED TO STAY, and when I say cured, I mean just what I say—CURED, and not merely patched up for a while, to return worse than before. Now, I do not care what all you have used, nor how many doctors have told you that you could not be cured—all I ask is just a chance to show you that I know what I am talking about. If you will write me TO-DAY, I will send you a FREE TRIAL of my mild, soothing, guaranteed cure that will convince you more in a day than I or anyone else could in a month's time. If you are disgusted and discouraged, I dare you to give me a chance to prove my claims. By writing me to-day you will enjoy more real comfort than you had ever thought this world holds for you. Just try it, and you will see I am telling you the truth.

Five Different Varieties

Gorgeous Giant Flowering GLADIOLUS

We Will Give You Five Bulbs And Every One Of Them Will Bloom This Season

WE have arranged with one of the largest flower growers in the country to supply our readers with five different varieties of the new improved type of Gladiolus. They are the most gorgeous and brilliant you ever saw and can in no way be compared with the kinds seen in the ordinary flower garden. They bloom more than any other spring planting bulbs and require but very little care. They are unequalled for cutting as they last two weeks in water. They start blooming in early summer and keep at it until cut off by frost. In this splendid collection we give you the America which grows erect flower spikes two to three feet long bearing a great number of large spreading blossoms. Its color is an exquisitely soft lavender pink, the same as seen in the most beautiful Cattleya Orchids. The Augusta is the finest white Gladiolus in existence, with blue antlers and a slight tinge of pink on the interior of the petals. If you cut the spikes of this variety before the flowers are open and allow them to open in water you will get a pure white flower. The Baron Hulot grows long graceful spikes of good size bearing well opened flowers of a beautiful dark rich indigo blue. The Canary Bird grows spikes which show eight and sometimes ten blossoms open at one time and the color is a pure canary yellow that is both pleasing and attractive. Mrs. Frances King is the finest Gladiolus for decorative purposes owing to its immense size and brilliant color. Its spikes are four feet high with from eighteen to twenty flowers on a spike, six or eight flowers being open at one time. The flowers measure from four to six inches across and the color is a handsome light scarlet. Remember we give you free all five varieties described above on this offer and we positively guarantee that every one of them will bloom this season. We will cheerfully replace free any bulb or bulbs that do not prove absolutely satisfactory. The bulbs will be ready for planting as soon as you receive them or if you prefer you can plant them at any later date as they will keep indefinitely if you put them in a dark, dry place.

BY PARCEL POST PREPAID FOR TWO SUBSCRIPTIONS!

Girl's Waterproof Cape

A Great PROTECTOR From WIND and RAIN

Made of striped rubberized cloth with suitable lining, and the best feature of this cape is the hood. Girls going to school do not like to carry an umbrella, and this cape can be worn either in hot or cold weather. If in winter a sweater or coat can be worn underneath, and the child is not only dry but perfectly warm. There are two openings in the cape for the arms, but the garment is large enough so the books or packages can be carried underneath, which makes it much better than a Rain Coat. The shoulders are shaped so as to give it a very attractive look. This cape comes in a very dark drab color with lighter drab stripes. They are so pretty any girl will be proud to wear one. Sizes 6 to 14 years. When ordering better order it larger than necessary so to have it of sufficient size to go over a heavy coat or other garments. Boys can easily get up clubs and thus get one of these Rain Capes for their sisters. Girls like to get subscribers to COMFORT where they can so easily earn such a sensible premium so as to keep warm and dry during the rainy season. We are prepared to fill all orders promptly.

Special Club Offer:

For a club of only seven subscribers to COMFORT at 25 cents each for 15 months, we will send you by Parcel Post one of these serviceable Rain Capes. Premium No. 529.

while attempting to guess the dark secrets of your heart. You say I keep busy for all it takes is Will Power. Would you mind telling me who this fellow Will Power is? I've heard a great deal of him lately. I suppose he is related to Jack Frost, who I understand is a sister of Alf-Alfa. Anyway I'm glad that Will Power is lots of assistance. Keep him at it. The busier a boy is the better for his health. You say "Of coarse Uncle." I wish you to understand that I am not coarse. I of course abhor coarse people. Try a u instead of an a next time Alva. Excuse me for abbreviating your name. I like the first half immensely, but the second half sounds like a restaurant and suggests cannibalistic tendencies. When your Italian birds can sing English I shall be glad to hear them. You mention that you have a bird named Pete and that good birds go by that name. You are quite right my dear, they do. I had a canary by the name of Pete and to prove that good birds go by that name, he flew out of the window one day, and I was so heart broken by his loss that I have never cared to replace him. You inform us that your little hen bird is setting on four eggs, and he will hatch this week. That must be some bird to hatch a whole week. You are very foolish to take the mumps. Why not leave them alone. Of course if you insist on taking the mumps that is your business, but I wouldn't advise you to do it. Before you can take them of course you've got to catch them. The best way to catch the mumps is to get a shot gun and an electric search-light and go out in the woods on a dark night in the middle of the day on some fine spring morning in December, preferably on the 39th of the month, and after a few weeks you will doubtless, with the assistance of a good mump dog, get on the trail of the mump family. After throwing your search-lights on the highest roots of the trees, you will doubtless see Mr. and Mrs. Mump and all the mump family roosting on a limb. If you want to catch them alive, climb the tree and branch out or shoot them dead with a piece of rock and catch them in your mouth as they are falling. Then you will have the mumps. If you want to be mump proof boil two mumps, one red and one green over a hot fire for three weeks and two days, forty minutes and five hours, stirring the contents gradually with the left foot, and then anoint yourself from head to foot in the mump gravy. After bathing swallow the gravy and you will be mump proof for life. A man named Mumpford gave me this prescription. Try it and you will find it a sure preventive.

Comfort's League of Cousins

The League of Cousins was founded as a means of bringing the scattered members of COMFORT'S immense circle of readers into one big, happy family. Its aim is to promote a feeling of kinship and relationship among all readers. It was primarily started as a society for the juvenile members of COMFORT'S family, only, but those of more mature years clamored for admittance so persistently that it was deemed advisable to impose no age limit; thus all are eligible to admittance into our League provided they conform to its rules and are animated by the child spirit.

Membership is restricted to COMFORT subscribers and costs thirty cents, only five cents more than the regular subscription to COMFORT which is included. The thirty cents makes you a member of the League and gives you an attractive League button with the letters "C. L. O. C.," a handsome certificate of membership with your name engrossed thereon, and the privilege of having your name in the letter list, also a paid-in-advance subscription to COMFORT. You continue a League member as long as you keep up your subscription to COMFORT. There are no annual dues, so after you have once joined all you have to do to keep in good standing is to keep your subscription to COMFORT paid up.

Please observe carefully the following directions which explain exactly

How to become a Member

Send thirty cents to COMFORT'S Subscription Department, Augusta, Maine, with your request to be admitted into COMFORT'S LEAGUE OF COUSINS, and you will at once receive the League button and your membership certificate and number; you will also receive COMFORT for 15 months if you are a new subscriber; but if you are already a subscriber your subscription will be renewed or extended two full years beyond date of expiration, if you remit 35 cents.

Or, if your subscription is already paid in advance, you can take a friend's 15-months subscription at 25 cents and send it in with five cents of your own, thirty cents in all, with your request for membership, and we will send you the button and membership certificate, and send COMFORT to your friend for 15 months. League subscriptions do not count in premium clubs.

NEVER apply for membership without enclosing thirty cents to include a new subscription or a renewal.

The League numbering over forty thousand members, undoubtedly is the greatest society of young people on earth. It costs but thirty cents to join, and that gives you at least a 15-month subscription to COMFORT also, without extra cost.

Never in the world's history was so much given for so little. Never could thirty cents be invested to such advantage, and bring such splendid returns. Don't hesitate. Join us at once and induce your friends to do likewise.

All those League members who desire a list of the cousins residing in the several states, can secure the same by sending a stamped addressed envelope and five cents in stamps to Nellie Rutherford, 1299 Park Place, Brooklyn, New York grand secretary.

Special Notice

Never write a subscription or renewal order or application for membership in the body of a letter. Write your subscription or renewal and membership application on a separate sheet of paper, separate from your letter. We have to put all subscription orders on our subscription file at once; so if it is written on the same sheet as your letter, the whole letter has to go on to the subscription file at once and thus can receive no attention from Uncle Charlie.

Never send subscriptions to Uncle Charlie nor to the Secretary of the League; they bother him and cause confusion and delay.

Address all letters to COMFORT, Augusta, Maine, and they will promptly reach the head of the department for which they are intended.

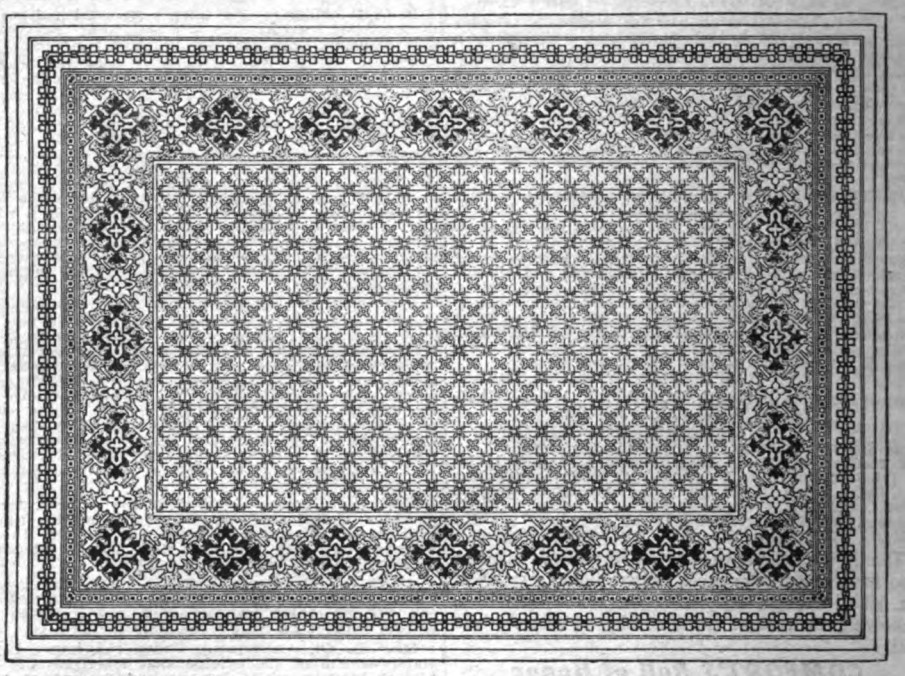
Sister: Read My Free Offer!

I am a woman.
I know a woman's trials.
I know her need of sympathy and help.

If you, my sister, are unhappy because of ill-health, if you feel unfit for household duties, social pleasures, or daily employment, write and tell me just how you suffer, and ask for my free ten days' trial of a home treatment suited to your needs. Men cannot understand women's sufferings. What we women know from experience, we know better than any man. I want to tell you how to cure yourself at home at a cost of about 12 cents a week.



If you suffer from women's peculiar ailments causing pain in the head, back, or bowels, feeling of weight and dragging down sensation, falling or displacement of pelvic organs, causing kidney and bladder weakness or constipation and piles, painful or irregular periods. catarrhal conditions and discharges, extreme nervousness, depressed spirits, melancholy, desire to cry, fear of something evil about to happen, creeping feeling along the spine, palpitation, hot flashes, weariness, sallow complexion with dark circles under the eyes, pain in the left breast or general feeling that life is not worth living.

I INVITE YOU TO SEND TODAY FOR MY FREE TEN DAYS' TREATMENT and learn how these ailments can be easily and surely conquered at home without the dangers and expense of an operation. When you are cured, and able to enjoy life again, you can pass the good word along to some other sufferer. My home treatment is for young or old. To Mothers of Daughters, I will explain how to overcome green sickness (chlorosis), irregularities headaches, and lassitude in young women and restore them to plumpness and health. Tell me if you are worried about your daughter. Remember it costs you nothing to give my home treatment a ten days' trial, and does not interfere with daily work. If health is worth asking for, then accept my generous offer and write for the free treatment, including my illustrated booklet, "Women's Own Medical Adviser." I will send all in plain wrappers postpaid. To save time, you can cut out this offer, mark your feelings, and return to me. Send today, as you may not see this offer again. Address

Sent You Free And Prepaid For A Club Of Five!

Absolutely Waterproof—Dirtproof—Sanitary!

Water Cannot Rot It, Sun Cannot Fade It. It Lies Flat Without Nailing or Paste, Will Not Curl Up or Kick Up At The Edges, Will Stand The Hardest Kind Of Wear!

NO MORE trouble with unsightly, ill-smelling, dirt and germ laden grass, matting, fiber or fabric rugs or oil cloths. Every woman who has had experience with a single one of these old-fashioned methods of floor coverings knows how unsatisfactory they are, and expensive too, because they wear out so fast it is necessary to keep buying new ones all the time. Here, however, is a rug that will actually give years of constant service—a rug which is absolutely waterproof all the way through—which is not injured or even affected by heat, cold, water or changes of temperature—which neither fades nor rots no matter where you put it in-doors or out. It is not oilcloth—it is not linoleum—it is not made of grass, fiber or fabric—it is not like any other form of floor covering in the world. It is known as "Congoleum," a combination of a special wool mixture, waterproof paint and asphaltum. When you wash the floor or porch you can wash the Congoleum rug at the same time without taking it up. You can leave it out on the porch all summer or all winter or the year round and it will not rot, fade or get that jaded look that other rugs do after exposure to sun and wear. You can use it on the bathroom floor, the pantry floor, under the refrigerator, under the stove or as an ordinary rug in any room in the house, in fact, there is not a single requirement that this rug will not fill. It is absolutely sanitary because having a hard solid surface the dust, dirt and disease germs positively cannot get into it. No nails, tacks or paste are necessary to keep it down because it always lies flat on the floor and the edges will positively not curl or buckle, thus tripping up everybody who walks over it. These Congoleum rugs cost no more and in some cases actually less than other forms of floor covering and they will wear ten times as long, therefore they are the most economical as well as the most serviceable and satisfactory rug to buy. They come in different attractive designs and beautiful combinations of shades and colors. As a premium for our readers we have selected the pattern illustrated above as the most suitable for all-round purposes. It is one and one half yards long and a yard wide. The color scheme is subdued and very charming and it will make an attractive appearance regardless of whether you use it as a porch rug or in kitchen, pantry or any other room in the house. We are positive that every woman who secures one of these rugs will want two or three more at once, therefore we worked hard with the manufacturers to get a special low price on them so that we could give them in return for a very few subscriptions. In this we succeeded as you will note by reading the following

Club Offer. For a club of five 15-month subscriptions to COMFORT at 25 cents each, we will send you one Congoleum rug free by Parcel Post prepaid. Premium No. 7205.

Your Last Chance to Win

COMFORT'S Cash Prize Contest Closes April 30. No Time For You To Lose If You Want To Win An April Prize And Perhaps A Grand Prize Also.

ONLY ONE more month remains in which our readers may share in COMFORT'S Grand Distribution of Cash Prizes. The contest ends promptly 12 o'clock midnight, April 30, and all subscriptions must be mailed to us not later than 12 o'clock midnight, April 30, in order to be counted on the prizes. The April Monthly Prizes are the same as those of March except that the first prize is from $30.00 to $180.00 as explained below and there are Fifty Consolation Prizes of $1.00 each. At the close of the contest we will also distribute 44 Grand Cash Prizes ranging from $5.00 to $150.00. You still have time to win an April prize and a Grand Prize also, but don't wait, because every minute counts. Start a club today to be entered to your credit on the April Prizes and Grand Prizes too.

You Cannot Lose—You Get Your Premiums Sure

From now on any club you send in will bring you a fine premium sure and may help win a Cash Prize for you also because the same clubs you get up for any of our premiums are also placed to your credit on the Monthly Cash Prizes and Grand Prizes too, if you request it. It only remains for you to send in enough subscriptions to win a Cash Prize any one month or each month for the six months. And remember that every Monthly Prize you win puts you just so much nearer one of the Grand Prizes to be awarded at the close of the contest April 1915. And you still get your regular club premiums just the same. All this money which you may easily win if you will but make the effort is extra and in addition to the premiums which you may select from our catalogue or any issue of COMFORT and which will be sent to you immediately upon receipt of every club you send in.

How Monthly Prizes Double

If you win a monthly prize one month we pay you at once; if you win any monthly prize the next month we pay you double the amount of your second month's prize, and we will continue to pay you double each successive month that you continue to win any monthly prize. The doubling begins with December.

How Monthly Prizes Thribble

If you win the same Monthly Prize three months in succession we pay you double the amount the second month and three times the amount the third month and we continue to pay you three times the amount each successive month that you continue to win the same monthly prize. If, however, you should win the first monthly prize each month for the whole six months, then we will pay you four times the amount of that prize the fourth month, five times the amount the fifth month and six times the amount the sixth month. The thribbling begins with January.

The Consolation Prizes

In addition to the regular Monthly Prizes we shall also in November award 75 Consolation Prizes of $1.00 each, and in the months of December, January, February and March 100 Consolation Prizes of $1.00 each and in April 50 Consolation Prizes of $1.00 each to such women entering the Monthly Contests of those months and failing to win as we think worthy of reward for their unsuccessful efforts. Remember however that these Consolation Prizes do not double or thribble like the Monthly Prizes.

Opening and Closing Dates

Each Monthly Contest (after November) opens on the first day of the month and ends at midnight of the last day of the same month. If you mail Subscriptions on the last day of a month they will be counted to your credit in the contest for that month, providing the postmark on the envelope shows it. This gives an equal opportunity to all of our readers who enter these contests no matter how far off they live. The monthly prizes, each month, are paid to those who send in the most 25-cent subscriptions to COMFORT during the particular month for which the prizes are offered, the first monthly prize for the largest number of subscriptions, the second Monthly Prize for the next largest number, and so on down the list for the month.

917 Cash Prizes In All!

EVERY ONE of the Cash Prizes offered in this contest will actually be paid to the men, women, boys and girls who enter and who send in a sufficient number of subscriptions to COMFORT before April 30, 1915. No partiality will be shown to any contestant. Every subscription sent in by you will, if you so desire, be placed to your credit on the Monthly Prizes and Grand Prizes also and whatever prize you win each month will be paid to you in money promptly at the end of the month in which you win it. And at the close of the contest if there is also a Grand Cash Prize coming to you it will be paid to you immediately after the closing date. There will be no unfair treatment, no waiting, no disappointments for you in this contest. You will be given a square deal first, last and all the time. But when sending your subscriptions be sure to say you want them entered to your credit on the cash prizes otherwise we will not know that you are in the contest. How The Grand Prizes Are to be Awarded Promptly at the close of the contest April 30, 1915 we shall also award 44 Grand Prizes as published elsewhere on this page. The Capital Grand Prize of $150.00 will go to the contestant who sends in the largest number of 25-cent subscriptions from the first day of October 1914 to the last day of next April. The second Grand Prize of $100 will go to the contestant who sends in the next largest number and so on. Remember these Grand Prizes come on top of the Monthly Prizes and the premiums that you are sure of anyway. Please bear in mind that you do not have to stay in the contest the entire six months in order to win a Grand Cash Prize. In addition to your Monthly Prize you may also win a Grand Prize in a single month—the first month, last month or any other month. Several contestants have done this in our previous contests.

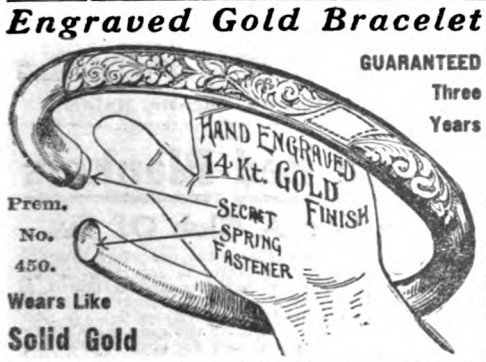
Small Clubs Win The Prizes

Remember that small clubs win the Cash Prizes in these contests. Contrary to what you may have believed and what some people may try to tell you, you don't have to send in big clubs and lots of clubs in order to win the Monthly Prizes and perhaps a Grand Prize also in addition to your regular club premiums. Lots of people in our last year's contest carried off prizes month after month with clubs as small as 15 subscriptions, 20 subscriptions and so on up to 25 subscriptions. You are just as likely to be as fortunate in this contest, but of course you realize that the more subscriptions you send in each month, the better will be your chances.

You May win as Much as $780

The contestant who wins the first Monthly Prize each month for the entire six months will of course also win the Capital Grand Prize of $150.00 thereby winning a total of $780.00. To this fortunate contestant we will pay $30.00 for November, $60.00 for December, $90.00 for January, $120 for February, $150 for March and $180 for April which amounts to $630 and this added to the Capital Grand Prize of $150 makes the splendid sum of $780.



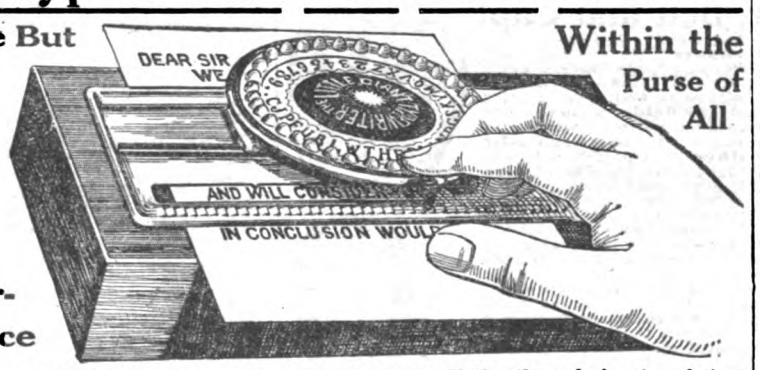
Rules and Conditions

1. Send subscription clubs, large or small, as often as you like. Name the club premiums you want.
2. In mailing subscriptions intended for the prize competition, be sure to address them to COMFORT Prize Department, Augusta, Maine, or we shall not know they are for the prize contest.
3. Subscriptions mailed on last day of a month will be counted into that month's contest provided the postmark on the envelope shows it. This makes it fair for all, no matter how far off they live.
4. The prizes will be awarded on the basis of fifteen-month subscriptions, but other subscriptions will be accepted and counted in this prize contest as follows: A 50-cent three-year subscription equals two fifteen-month subscriptions. One two-year renewal equals one fifteen-month subscription. So send in either kind of COMFORT subscriptions or renewals and they will all count.
5. In case of a tie, the prize for which two or more contestants are tied will be awarded and paid in full to each contestant tied for that prize, doubling or thribbling such prize to such, if any, of the tied contestants as are entitled to double or thribble.

Mail The Coupon With A Small Club

You will earn a fine premium and you may start a Cash Prize your way also simply by sending us the coupon printed at the left along with two or more subscriptions to COMFORT. Then follow up your first club with another club as soon as possible. We will send you the premiums which you select from any issue of COMFORT or from our regular catalogue just as fast as you send in your clubs. They alone will more than pay you for your trouble. But remember that you may also win a Cash Prize every month. Start a club today. You have everything to gain and nothing to lose. You cannot possibly lose because you are SURE to get a premium anyway for every club you send in. Start now and win an April prize and a Grand Prize too.

Engraved Gold Bracelet



THIS Round Bracelet with artistic engraving and unique Spring Fastening is the most attractive pattern we have seen this season. Not too large but large enough and as it is perfectly round, it fits well and becomes all ages and wears like Solid Gold. There is a demand for bracelets of enormous size, but this style is medium large and nearly three inches in diameter; we consider it a beautiful pattern. This bracelet is the very latest style so you will want one while fashionable, and as we guarantee fit and wear, you need not hesitate to order.

Special Offer: For one new 15-months subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 25 cents or for your own subscription or renewal or extension of your present subscription for one year at 25 cents and 10 cents extra (35 cents in all) we will send you this Bracelet free by parcel post prepaid.

A Real Typewriter For Real Work!

Small In Size But Perfect In Operation. Adapted To Either Personal Or Business Correspondence

Within the Purse of All

THIS is not a toy, but a practical, satisfactory machine that writes very distinctly and almost as fast as some typewriters costing $10.00 and more. It is a great deal larger than it appears to be in the above illustration, has every letter in the alphabet, all the numerals from one to ten, and the punctuation marks. You can use any size letter paper on this machine up to 5 inches in width and any length desired. For personal or business correspondence, making out statements, bills, addressing envelopes, etc., this machine answers every purpose. It is very easy to understand and operate, in fact a child can write on it after a few hours' practice. It is practically indestructible as it is made all of metal and positively cannot get out of order. We are sure that this typewriter will give the best of satisfaction because it is a real machine that will do real work. We will send you this practical typewriter guaranteed to be exactly as above illustrated and described with full directions for operating and a good supply of the best quality copying ink, carefully packed in a strong compact box upon the terms of the following

Club Offer. For a club of only four 15-months subscriptions to COMFORT at 25 cents each, or two 3-years subscriptions at 50 cents each, we will send you this typewriter and complete outfit free by Parcel Post prepaid. Premium No. 586.

Wizard Water Pistol

Given For One Subscription

Premium No. 716

TO all appearances this is a regular, full size, "six shooter" but instead of shooting the deadly bullet it squirts a solid stream of water 30 feet straight to the mark you aim it at. To load this pistol you stick the muzzle into water and pull the trigger three or four times. After it is loaded you discharge it by pulling the trigger just the same as you would an ordinary revolver. After it is loaded it is good for ten shots (of water) before it is necessary to load it again. Boys and girls can have loads of fun with this water pistol by giving their friends surprise "shower baths" and as it shoots nothing but water it is of course perfectly harmless to the smallest child. The "Wizard" is shaped exactly like a regular revolver; is 5 inches long, handsomely nickel plated and beautifully finished. You can obtain this water pistol free upon the terms of the following special offers:

Offer No. 716 A. For one new 15-month subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 25 cents, we will send you the Wizard water pistol free by Parcel Post prepaid.

Offer No. 716 B. For your own subscription, or renewal or extension of your present subscription, to COMFORT for one year at 25 cents and 10 cents additional (35 cents in all), we will send you the Wizard Water Pistol free and prepaid. Premium No. 716. Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

ROSES!

6 Beautiful Monthly Blooming Roses Delivered to Your Door For One New Subscription!

BEAUTIFUL Charming Roses in profusion that anybody can grow in any climate and in almost any soil. Again this season we offer our readers a splendid opportunity to secure without money cost a rare collection of six, hardy, vigorous growing rose plants that will bloom and bloom all summer transforming your flower garden into a veritable paradise of delicious fragrance and radiant colors. The six varieties described below are strong, well-rooted plants ready to be transplanted to your garden as soon as you receive them and we guarantee that they will grow and thrive beautifully if given proper care and attention. No matter in what part of the United States you live, our growers will send them to you at the proper time to plant according to the schedule printed below. Please remember, however, that these dates may vary from ten to fifteen days in event of an extremely early or late spring, so you need not become anxious if they should not reach you just on the date named in schedule. The rose growers who supply us are perfectly familiar with planting conditions in your locality and you may depend upon them to forward the roses to you at the best time for you to put them in the ground. Following is a brief description of each of the six varieties of beautiful ever-blooming roses given you free on this great offer:

Crimson Crown For color effect and general bedding purposes here is a rose that is hard to equal It is a robust growing variety, quickly developing into a large shapely bush that is literally covered with immense clusters of deep crimson roses which are tinted a rich lemon-white at the base of each petal. The flowers are of attractive form and borne in such profusion as to give the plant a bright brilliant display from early spring until long after the late frosts.

Killarney Queen In this fine new rose some wonderful improvements have been made over the old pink Killarney and the grower now has as nearly a perfect variety as it seems possible to secure. The flowers are massive in size, very double and liberally produced. They are constructed of better substance and are of a richer dark deep pink color than the old variety. In rapid vigorous growing habit it cannot be equalled by any other rose in its class. It seems to be perfectly adapted to soil and weather conditions in all localities and if given some care, small plants will develop into fine large bushes the first season planted, returning for the little attention an abundance of magnificent fragrant flowers. This rose is a hardy everbloomer and flowers from early spring until after freezing weather in the fall.

Climbing American Beauty The American Beauty in all its glory and fragrance, develops into a hardy outdoor climbing rose. It is a prolific bloomer, with a strong habit of growth, thriving and blooming in almost any situation. The bush growing American Beauty is rarely satisfactory when planted in the open ground, but this new climbing variety has proved perfectly hardy in any part of the United States. One plant of this new rose will produce twenty times as many flowers as the old variety. The roses growing on a single stem measure three to four inches in diameter and possess the same delicious fragrance that the American Beauty alone has. This new rose must not be classed among the old-fashioned climbers of the rambler type, as it is distinct from them in its very superior quality. It has a fine foliage that does not burn, its thick glossy leaves remaining on the bush all summer. No lover of beautiful roses should fail to plant this fine climber, as it is a worthy ornament to any garden, and its beauty and fragrance will prove a lasting pleasure and delight.

Bessie Brown This wonderful rose is indeed a crowning masterpiece and has been hailed by flower-lovers everywhere as one of the greatest rose creations of modern times. With a hardy, vigorous constitution, growing to perfection in any soil or location, it has the most magnificent foliage that is possessed by any variety. It is a tremendous grower, producing flowers profusely all through the summer on strong erect stems. The handsome flowers are of unsurpassed beauty. They are full and deep, of a totally distinct character and formed of such substance as to last splendidly when cut. The color is an exquisite creamy white, delicately flushed pink.

Nita Weldon Here is another gold medal winner, well worthy a place in the heart and garden of every flower lover. In habit of growth it is perfection. Both the canes and foliage are of such strength and vigor as to withstand without injury the ravages of insects or disease. Neither soil conditions nor location seem to effect its rapid growth or liberal blooming qualities. The flowers are of globular form, very full and immense in size. They are deliciously fragrant and pure ivory-white with edges of petals tinted the faintest blush.

Lady Hillingdon In this variety has been found every valuable feature the flower-lover could desire of a deep golden everblooming rose. After being awarded gold medals over such varieties as "Sunburst" there is no ground to question its merits. It is a sturdy, vigorous grower, producing long strong stems which hold the beautiful pointed buds upright, making them especially desirable for cut flower purposes. The buds open slowly to full deep golden bloom which hold their form and color much longer than other varieties. In the garden its rich green foliage and abundance of flowers present such a beautiful display of color that it cannot be passed by the most casual observer without an expression of admiration.

Remember These roses are all strong healthy plants on their own roots and will be sent to you by Parcel Post prepaid packed in wet moss so that you will be sure to receive them in just as good condition as when they leave the greenhouse. You may accept this offer with the perfect assurance that these beautiful ever-blooming roses will grow and develop into rare specimen beauties. If any fail to grow we hereby guarantee to replace them for you free of all cost.

Offer 672 A. For one new 15-month subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 25 cents, we will send you these six beautiful roses free by Parcel Post prepaid.

Offer 672 B. For your own subscription or renewal or extension of your present subscription for one year at 25 cents, and 10 cents additional (35 cents in all), we will send you these six beautiful roses free by Parcel Post prepaid. If you want us to send them immediately be sure to say so in your order otherwise the roses will not be mailed to you until the proper time arrives for you to plant them in your garden.

You Can Get This DANDY STEVENS RIFLE FREE!

IF you want a real rifle —not a toy or the make-believe kind—then here's your chance to own a Stevens Rifle and best of all it won't cost you one cent of money. Of course, you know what the "Stevens" Rifle is. It is acknowledged to be one of the very best makes in the world manufactured by the famous Stevens Firearms Co. of Massachusetts. The rifle we offer you here is their "Little Scout" model and is the take-down pattern—that is by simply turning a screw you can remove the barrel from the stock which is a great help in cleaning the gun or packing it for travel. It shoots C. B. caps., .22 short, .22 long, or .22 long rifle rimfire cartridges, has an 18-inch round all-steel barrel, casehardened frame, blued steel butt plate, German silver knife-edge front and open rear sights, polished black walnut stock and weighs 2¾ pounds. This rifle is absolutely safe because it cannot be discharged until the cartridge is automatically locked in the chamber and there is positively no danger of back firing. For target practice and to take along on hunting and camping trips this is just the rifle that every red-blooded boy wants and should have because with it you are always sure of bagging all the small game that comes your way such as rabbits, squirrels, hawks and all kinds of game birds. We want every boy who reads this offer to have one of these splendid rifles and we are going to make it very easy for you to get one without spending a cent for it. Here's our free offer. Elegant Lady's Watch

HERE IS a watch that we are proud to offer and one that any lady or girl should feel proud to own. It is known as the "Leonard Dutchess" and is a perfect little beauty having all the refined, stylish features that are generally found only on the hightest priced solid gold watches. We show both the front and the back of the watch in above illustration so that you can gain some idea of its beautiful appearance, especially the fancy engraving on the back. This is a thin model watch, 6 size, stem wind, pendant set with antique bow and flat stem. The movement is damaskeed, quick train, hardened steel cut pinions, straight line escapement, every part carefully made and adjusted by skilled watch-makers in one of the largest watch factories in the United States. Best of all however, this watch cannot be told from a solid gold watch and it will wear like solid gold because the case is made of a solid composition of gilt metal that is the same color all the way through so that it will never tarnish or change color, but the longer it is worn, the brighter and better it will look. This dainty little timepiece is refined and stylish enough to satisfy the most exacting taste. We guarantee that it will keep perfect time and otherwise prove satisfactory or it may be returned to the factory any time within one year where it will either be repaired free of charge or a new watch sent in exchange. The factory's guarantee will be sent to you along with the watch and in addition we will ourselves guarantee that this watch will give you unlimited satisfaction. We have just added this elegant new watch to our list of premiums and are giving it away free on the terms of the following special Everybody is getting a collection of these beautiful Souvenir State Spoons. It is the greatest fad that ever struck this country. We know that there are thousands of COMFORT readers who are interested in securing a set of the Spoons so we have arranged with the R. Wallace & Sons Mfg. Co., Wallingford, Conn., to make for us a complete set of forty-eight Spoons—a Spoon, for each State in the Union. We have just received the first lot and they are beauties. They are heavily silver plated on a nickel silver base. The pattern is simply exquisite. You never saw anything lovelier. The illustration at the lower left-hand corner of this page gives you no idea of their real beauty. The bowls of the Spoons are perfectly smooth and polished to a dazzling brightness. The handle of each Spoon has the popular French Grey finish and is handsomely embossed with the arms of the United States—the flag and eagle—and the name and State Seal of the particular state which the Spoon represents. You will be perfectly delighted with these Spoons because they are without doubt the handsomest you ever saw and they are of such high quality that they will last you a lifetime. "Wallace" silverware is acknowledged to be one of the best brands made anywhere and these Spoons are MANUFACTURED AND GUARANTEED by them. You can use them on your table every day in the year and they will wear splendidly and give perfect satisfaction. You will find them just as USEFUL as they are ornamental. We are now ready to distribute these Souvenir State Spoons to readers of COMFORT on the terms of the liberal free offer explained below. Don't miss this chance to secure at least a set of six of these Spoons in addition to the handsome Sugar Shell illustrated herewith while this offer lasts. You can, of course, start your collection with one Spoon but by starting with a set of six Spoons we will give you absolutely Free this Handsome Patriotic Sugar Shell, the handle of which is decorated with the head of George Washington, the shield of the United States and the seal of the District of Columbia.

We Illustrate The Sugar Shell A Great Deal Larger Than It Really Is To Give You Some Idea Of The Handsome Embossed Design On The Handle.

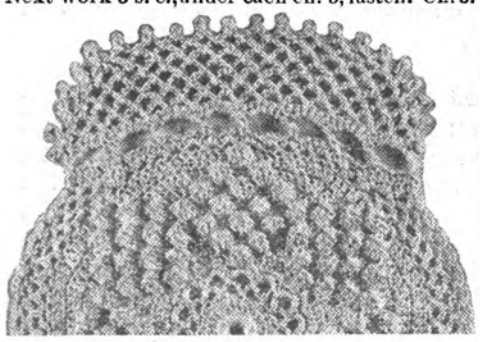
Coin Purse

THIS purse as illustrated was made of Coat's crochet cotton No. 5, in ecru. This shade being really preferable to white for a purse, as it does not show soil so quickly.



The finished purse is edged with loops of tatting, but if one cannot do this, the two sides may be crocheted together with a series of loops and picots. The front and back of the purse is also shown. To make the front begin in the center as follows: Wrap cotton 16 times around a pencil.

1st row.—Over this work 24 d. c.

2nd row.—1 s. c. in each st.

3rd row.—Ch. 2, fasten in top of second s. c., ch. 4, 1 s. c., in next second s. c. Continue thus, making 13 chains fastened in every other st. Finish with ch. 2 and 1 s. c. in first st.

4th row.—Ch. 5, 1 sl. st. under each ch. 2. Next work 5 s. c., under each ch. 5, fasten. Ch. 3.

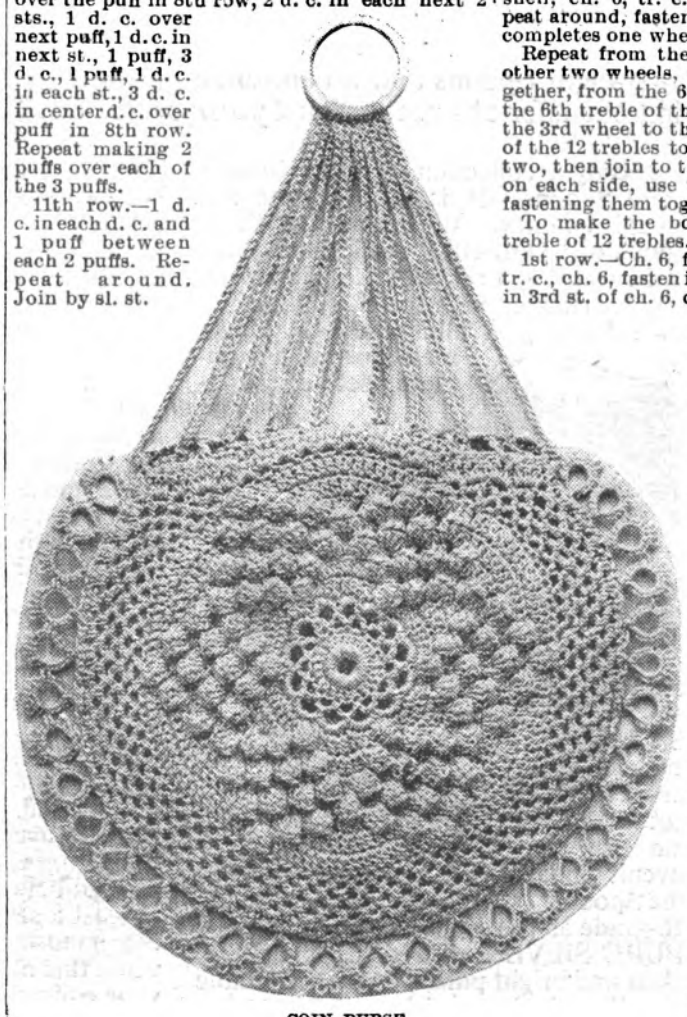
FLAP OF COIN PURSE.

5th row.—Commence star by crocheting 5 d. in center st. of loop, turn, drawing loop of fifth d. c., through top of first d. c. and draw up closely to form a puff. 1 d. c. in each of next 9 sts., 1 puff and repeat, making 5 puffs which will come over every second loop or chain. Join to first puff. Ch. 3.

6th row.—1 d. c. in first d. c. after first puff, 1 puff in next d. c., 6 d. c., 1 puff., 1 d. c., 1 d. c., over puff in last row, 1 d. c. in next st., 1 puff, 6 d. c. and 2 puffs over each puff in first, made in this way. 3 d. c. after the last puff, join to first puff with sl. st. Ch. 3.

7th row.—1 d. c., 1 puff, 3 d. c., 1 puff, 3 d. c., 1 puff, 3 d. c., 1 puff, continue to first puff, fasten, ch. 3.

8th row.—1 d. c., 1 puff, 3 d. c., continue to first puff, fasten. Ch. 3.



9th row.—3 d. c. over puff in last row, 1 d. c. on next d. c., 1 puff in next d. c., 3 d. c., 1 puff, continue making 3 puffs over each of the 5 points of the star with 3 d. c. between. Join, ch. 3.

BACK OF COIN PURSE.

10th row.—1 d. c. in st., 3 d. c. in center d. c. over the puff in 8th row, 2 d. c. in each next 2 sts., 1 d. c. over next puff, 1 d. c. in next st., 1 puff, 3 d. c., 1 puff, 1 d. c. in each st., 3 d. c. in center d. c. over puff in 8th row. Repeat making 2 puffs over each of the 3 puffs.

11th row.—1 d. c. in each d. c. and 1 puff between each 2 puffs. Repeat around. Join by sl. st.

COIN PURSE.

12th row.—Ch. 4, sl. st. in second st., ch. 4, sl. st., in next second st., repeat around.

13th row.—Fasten last ch. 4 in top of first ch. with 1 s. c. Repeat making ch. all round until puff on fifth point of star is reached. Turn with ch. 5, work back with chs. 4 until opposite puff on first point of star. Turn and work back and forth making in all five rows of chains excepting across the top, between the two points of the star as shown. This is left to fasten the flap to.

To Make Flap of Coin Purse

First work 3 treble crochet under each ch. 5 from the edge to first puff, between puffs across the top, work 3 d. c. under each ch. 4, 3 tr. c. under chs. 5, turn, ch. 7, 1 tr. c. on 6th tr. c. ch. 7, 1 tr. c. in next 6th st, repeat across. Turn. 5 s. c. under each ch., 1 s. c., on each tr. c. Turn, ch. 5, 1 sl. st. in 4th s. c., ch. 5, 1 sl. st. in next 4th st., turn. Ch. 5, 1 sl. st. under ch. 5, repeat making 6 rows to form the flap. Finish with a last row around the flap of chs. 5, catch back in 3rd ch. to form picot. Ch. 2, 1 s. c. under ch. 5. Repeat.

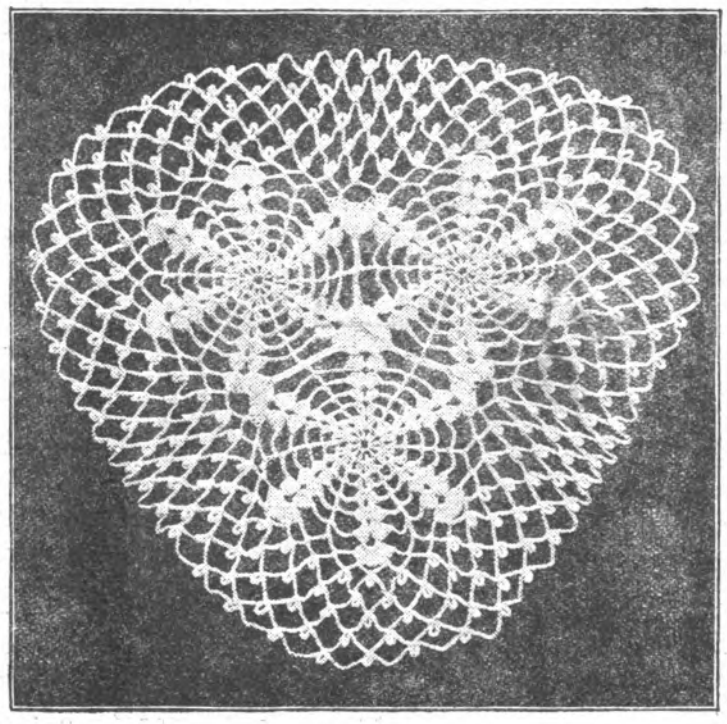
Back of Purse

Begin center in the same way only making 4 rows of ch. 5, last row worked over with 5 s. c., then 1 row of puffs with 3 d. c. between each.

1 row s. c., 3 rows of ch. 5, 1 row, 5 s. c. under each ch. 5, 3 rows, 1 s. c. in each st. 1 row puffs with 2 d. c. between, 3 rows 1 s. c. in each st., 3 rows of ch. 4, join the 2 sides and crochet together, then edge with tatting loops of 5 d. s., 1 p., 2 d. s., 3 p., 2 d. s., 1 p. 5 d. s., close.

Chaining Through the Flap

Join cotton in right-hand side of the top of the back of the purse. Make ch. 45 sts., 1 s. c., over ivory ring. Ch. 45, fold flap over on back of purse, and make 1 s. c. in top of back of the purse in the center of the first space in the flap. Ch. 44, 1 s. c. on ring. Ch. 44, 1 s. c. in back of purse in center of second space of flap. Ch. 44, 1 s. c. on ring, ch. 43, 1 s. c. in third space. Ch. 43, 1 s. c. on ring. Ch. 42, 1 s. c. in fourth space. Ch. 42, 1 s. c., on ring. Ch. 42, 1 s. c. in fifth space. Draw needle out. Turn flap up, make ch. 8, 1 s. c. in edge of back, in st., this side of last ch., work back over ch. 8, with s. c., this makes the little loop used in pulling the purse open. (See illustration back of purse.) Fold flap over again and continue to chain to the ring making the chains a stitch long, just as they were shortened.



MRS. CLARA EMERSON.

Crocheted Wheel Doily

Begin with chain 8 stitches, join in ring.

1st round.—Ch. 4, * 1 tr. c. in ring, ch. 1, repeat from * 11 times, join to 3rd st., of first ch. 4.

Repeat from the beginning for each of the other two wheels, then join two of them together, from the 6th treble of the 12 trebles to the 6th treble of the next 12 trebles, then join the 3rd wheel to these by placing the 6th treble of the 12 trebles to the 6th treble of the other two, then join to the 6th treble of the 12 trebles on each side, use the single crochet stitch in fastening them together.

To make the border, fasten thread in 3rd treble of 12 trebles.

1st row.—Ch. 6, fasten in 9th tr. c., of the 12 tr. c., ch. 6, fasten in 3rd st. of ch. 6, ch. 6, fasten in 3rd st. of ch. 6, ch. 6, fasten in 3rd treble of 12 tr. c., ch. 6, fasten in the 9th tr. c. of 12 tr. c., repeat all around.

2nd row.—(Ch. 10, fasten in 3rd st. of ch. 6, ch. 5, fasten in same st. to form a picot), repeat until 5 rounds have been made.

Break the thread, draw through the stitch and fasten.

NIDA HOPE.

Crocheted Dress Trimming

This shell pattern can be used as an insertion and by the addition of the fringe as shown in the illustration, makes an unusually effective edging.

Begin by making a chain of 45 stitches, turn.

1st row.—1 s. c. in the 7th st. from the needle, 3 d. c. in the next 3rd st., ch. 2, 3 d. c. in the same st. This makes a shell of 6 d. c. separated by ch. 2, all the shells are made in this way.

Fasten shell with 1 s. c. in the next 3rd st. Ch. 5, 1 s. c. in next 4th st., 1 shell in next 3rd st., 1 s. c. in next 3rd st., 1 shell in next 3rd. st., 1 s. c. in next 3rd st. 1 shell in next 3rd st. then 1 s.c., ch. 5, 1 s. c. in 4th st., 1 shell in next 3rd st., 1 s. c. in last st. Ch. 7, turn.

2nd row.—1 s. c. under ch. 2, in center of shell, ch. 3, 1 s. c. under same st., this makes picot in which a shell will be worked.

Ch. 5, 1 s. c. under ch. 5, ch. 5, 1 s. c. center next shell, repeat on next shell, ch. 5, and on last shell make 1 picot, ch. 5, 1 s. c. under ch. 5, ch. 5, 1 p. on last shell, ch. 5, 1 s. c. under loop in last row. Ch. 7, turn.

3rd row.—1 s. c. under ch., 1 shell in p., 1 s. c. under ch., ch. 5, 1 s. c., 1 shell in p., 1 s. c., ch. 5, 1 s. c., repeat over next 3 chs., 1 shell in last p., 1 s. c. Ch. 7, turn.

4th row.—1 p. on shell, ch. 5, 1 s. c., ch. 5, 1 p., ch. 5, 1 p., ch. 5, 1 p. on shell, ch. 5, 1 s. c., ch. 5, 1 p., ch. 5, 1 s. c., ch. 7, turn.

5th row.—1 s. c., under ch., 1 shell in p., 1 s. c., ch. 5, 1 s. c., 1 shell in p., 1 s. c., shells in next two picots, 1 s. c., ch. 5, 1 s. c., 1 shell, 1 s. c., ch. 7, turn.

6th row.—1 p. on shell, ch. 5, 1 s. c., ch. 5, 1 p., 4 chs. 5, 1 p. on last shell, ch. 5, 1 s. c., ch. 7, turn.

Next three rows of 20 sps. each.

Neckwear Suggestions

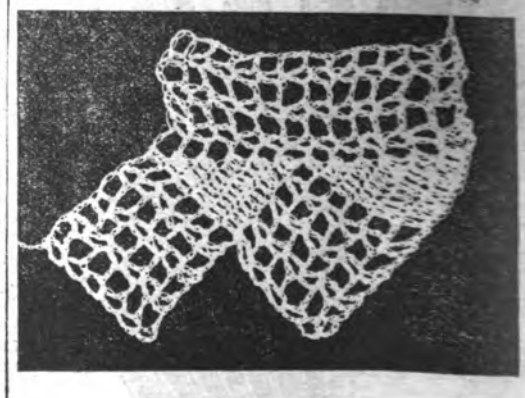
In these days of varied styles in neckwear, new ideas are always welcome and if one is only passably clever with the needle most dainty creations may result from the expenditure of a little time and thought.

Since the Robespierre collars have become the vogue, a knowledge of embroidery or fine stitching is no longer necessary in fashioning universally becoming neckwear.

Rolling up high in the back as they do and leaving an open V in front, they soften the lines of the neck and throat wonderfully. Their charm is doubly increased by the dainty frill which falls down the front.

Crocheted Edging

Begin with chain of 30 stitches, turn.



1st row.—2 d. c. in ninth st. of ch. * ch. 3, sk. 3, 2 d. c., repeat from * six times, ch. 5, turn.

2nd row.—1 d. c. between first 2 d. c., * ch. 3, 2 d. c. between next d. c., repeat from * twice, ch. 3, 1 d. c. between d. c., 3 d. c. under ch. 3, * ch. 3, 2 d. c. between d. c., repeat from * twice, ch. 3, 1 d. c., ch. 3, turn.

3rd row.—* ch. 3, 2 d. c., repeat from * twice, ch. 3, 2 d. c. under ch. 3, 4 d. c. on d. c., * ch. 3, 2 d. c., repeat from * three times, ch. 5, turn.

4th row.—1 d. c., * ch. 3, 2 d. c., repeat from * twice. ch. 3, 6 d. c. on d. c., 2 d. c. under ch. 3, * ch. 3, 2 d. c., repeat from * twice, ch. 3, 1 d. c., ch. 3, turn.

5th row.—* ch. 3, 2 d. c., repeat from * twice, ch. 3, 8 d. c., * ch. 3, 2 d. c., repeat from * three times, ch. 5, turn.

CROCHETED EDGING.

6th row.—1 d. c., * ch. 3, 2 d. c., repeat from * twice, ch. 3, 10 d. c., * ch. 3, 2 d. c., repeat from * twice, ch. 3, 1 d. c., ch. 3, turn.

7th row.—Repeat from first row only working into the lace instead of a chain.

Crumbs of Comfort

Idleness is the door to all vices.

The good is but the beautiful in action.

Men make laws; women make manners.

Marriage is sometimes only a long quarrel.

Love is a game at which one always cheats.

The loss of illusions is the death of the soul.

No one likes to be pitied on account of his errors.

Wine reddens the face to hide the blushes of shame.

If there is a fruit that can be eaten raw it is beauty.

With women, friendship ends when rivalry begins.

In jealousy there is usually more self-love than love.

A gold bit in his mouth does not make the horse any better.

There is nothing that fear or hope does not make men believe.

He who thinks himself good for everything is often good for nothing.

Beauty is the first gift nature gives to woman and the first she takes from her.

God created in our misery the kisses of children for the tears of the mothers.

What would we not give to still have in store half the time that we have wasted?

Heaven protect us from our friends; we can protect ourselves against our enemies.

The beauty of a young girl should speak to the imagination and not to the senses.

The greatest evidence of demoralization is the respect paid to wealth for money's sake.

Why should we complain when we are so little moved by the complaints of others?

The wealthiest man is he who is most economical; the poorest is he who is most miserly.

Woman is a charming creature who changes her heart as easily as she changes her gloves.

A child becomes for its parents, according to the training it receives, a blessing or a curse.

There is a greater difference between some men and others than there is between some men and the beasts.

The Littlest Lover

"MARGARET, suppose you and I cut out the acquaintance of Mr. Jack Ford."

"O-h!" drawled the girl under her breath. Her chin settled itself within the hollow of her hand and her eyes shot gleams of mingled merriment and audacity. With a gesture that was in itself a caress she put out her hand toward the young man who towered above her.

"Sit down, Robert," she commanded. "I can talk better when you are on a level with me." The man made no motion to obey but stood regarding her with grave eyes.

"Oh, you won't come down to my level, you superior being! Then I suppose I shall have to make a strenuous effort to climb up to yours." The girl pulled herself up by his coat sleeve and stood on tiptoe her laughing face in close proximity to his.

"Do you know, Robert, dear," she remarked, mischieveously irrelevant. "Miss Hooper says you are by far the handsomest man at the reception. I heard her say it. Now what do you think of that?"

The young man frowned. "Can't you be serious for one minute, Margaret? You know, I don't often interfere with your flirtations. Heaven knows, I have tried to be reasonable with you. I have not demanded all your time and attention. But I don't want such a fellow as Jack Ford hanging around my promised wife."

"Oh, Jack Ford," said Margaret innocently, "what difference does that make?"

"It makes a vast amount of difference whether his name is coupled with yours or not. I've stood a good deal of nonsense from you, little girl, but I won't stand for that."

"Honestly? Poor, dear boy!" She leaned toward him and brought her bewitching face so near to his that he all but fell into the trap set for him. He forced himself back in the nick of time. What an adorable little wretch she was! He took a desperate grip on his tottering determination. He must make her understand.

"Margaret,——" he began, but got no further.

"Ah, ha! here you are!" Jack Ford himself bore jauntily down upon the scene. He bowed low over Margaret's hand, and totally regardless of the blackness of Jordon's brow he slapped him familiarly on the shoulder.

"How are you, old man!" he exclaimed jovially, then turned with a smile to Margaret. "Miss Alden, my sister sent me to search you out and bring you to the conservatory. May I have the honor? With your permission, sir," essaying an elaborate bow of mock deference to Robert.

Margaret's eyes snapped mischievously. It was a situation altogether to her liking. As she was being borne away she cast a facetious glance over her shoulder. Robert's face was a study. Turning directly about, in the very face of the foppish young man at her side, she threw her lover an impulsive kiss.

Returning to the reception-room a half hour later Margaret was not a little surprised and nonplussed to find her betrothed conspicuous by his absence. It was a new departure. She shrugged her shoulders with a seriocomical air and wondered whimsically if the proverbial worm had turned.

It was wholly unlike Robert Jordon to abandon the field under any sort of provocation. If he had been a quitter.—well, if he had he could not have held capricious Margaret Alden as he had done. She gloried in his strength, and kept him in hot water accordingly.

To show how little she was disturbed by his absence she plunged into another reckless flirtation with Jack Ford, but the zest of the game was gone. There was no fun in it unless she could tease Robert. Presently, assuming an air of pensive innocence, she wandered over to the end of the veranda where her mother sat.

"Having a good time, little mother?" she asked. Then casually remarked as if on second thought, "You haven't seen anything of that big boy of mine around here, have you?"

"Robert?" questioned the mother. "Why, Robert left nearly half an hour ago. Did he not explain his going to you?"

"No, I didn't happen to be present just at that time." Margaret colored guiltily under her mother's searching eye, and executed a beseeching little pantomime. Mrs. Alden smiled, but preserved a discreet silence. She knew her willful girl.

Margaret always confided her worst escapades to her mother. It was the way she "appeased her troublesome conscience" she often laughingly averred. The troublesome conscience seemed to be getting in its work, for she soon sought her mother again.

"I am dead tired of this, mother," she said wearily, "let us go home." To which the mother acquiesced.

On reaching home they found the "other lover" in possession of the porch hammock working off his impatience by kicking the paint off the side of the house in his violent efforts to touch a certain point. Margaret sat down beside the six-year-old and he immediately began his usual bombardment.

"Where you been, Margaret?"

"Oh, to a tiresome reception." Margaret grimaced at the recollection. "It was a great bore."

"Didn't Robert be there?"

"Yes, Mr. Pry, Robert did be there."

"For why then didn't he come home with you?"

"For why then did he need to come home with me?" mimicked Margaret. "Couldn't my mother bring me home?"

"Y-e-s, but Robert al'ays does. For why didn't he?"

"Because he went away before we started home," said Margaret in a tone of finality calculated to settle the question. "Now, are you satisfied?"

"What for?" relentlessly pursued the embryo lawyer.

Margaret gave the hammock a little quick tilt that rolled the young inquisitor like a rubber ball out onto the soft rug. He clambered up sputtering indignantly:

"For what did you do that?"

In the little tussle for the possession of the hammock that followed he forgot for the time his cross-examination. When he was once more settled in his place, after a moment of silence, he started off on a new track.

"Marg'ret, what's a 'narnt flirt?"

"A what? Now what sort of a bee is buzzing in that gray matter of yours, you animated interrogation point?"

"I ain't a 'mated 'ter'gation point neither, Marg'ret Alden! I ist want to know what's a 'narnt flirt, 'cause I heard Miss Hooper say you're it."

"Oh!" There was a mixture of annoyance and portentious mischief in Margaret's face. "So Miss Hooper says I am an arrant flirt, does she?"

"Yes, she did, an' she said you ain't good 'nough for Robert, an' I ist told her my Marg'ret's whole wagon loads better'n her, an' Robert thinks so too!"

Margaret's dancing eyes became suddenly serious. "I am not so sure of that, honey boy," she said soberly. "I guess he thinks I am a pretty bad girl."

"But you ain't a 'narnt flirt, are you, Marg'ret? What's a 'narnt flirt?"

The timely intervention of the child's mother calling him home saved Margaret's face at last.

Left alone she swung slowly back and forth, a slight frown wrinkling her brow. Why should people indulge in idle gossip about her? Was she not the arbiter of her own actions? She arose and went into the house where she encountered her mother's grave face.

"I see I'm in for it," she remarked with a characteristic grimace. "I might as well make a full and complete confession." She brought a low stool and seated herself at her mother's knee.

"Where shall I begin? Let me see, where did I leave off last time?"

The upturned face was so alluringly sweet that the mother involuntarily bent and kissed it. She found it well nigh impossible to be severe, but she earnestly strove to do her duty.

"It really is a serious matter, dear," she said stroking her daughter's soft hair. "You must realize that a girl cannot be too careful of her reputation. People can only judge of your character by your outward actions, and so you ought not by word or deed to afford the slightest grounds for misinterpretation of your conduct."

"Oh, dear!" sighed the girl, "life is such a complicated affair. It's dreadful to have to be always on your good behavior."

"Not so dreadful as you think, daughter. You would be happier tonight if you had not teased Robert, now wouldn't you?"

"Perhaps," admitted Margaret, "but it is such fun to tease him." She laughed reminiscently. "The dear boy tries so hard to rise above all feelings of annoyance at anything I do. I like to make him come down."

"Which shows that he trusts you in the face of all your misconduct. But you will overstep yourself one of these days if you have not done it already. Robert is not going to stand everything. It would give my naughty girl no more than her deserts if her boy should throw her over and take Miss Hooper instead."

"Oh, mother! mother Alden!" Margaret buried her face in her mother's lap in order to smother the hysterical laughter. "Now you've gone and spoiled every single thing you've been saying to me and I shall go on being worse than ever! I do think we need some light on the situation." The irrepressible girl jumped up and switched on the electric light, then stood looking quizzically down at her mother.

"Say," she said suddenly, bending over and kissing her on each cheek, "do you know what I think? I think my little mother has been a madcap in her time. Come, 'fess up now, just once."

"Perhaps that is the reason I do not want my daughter to be one," answered the mother quietly. "It doesn't pay."

"Oh, yes, it does. I really think it does. It breaks the monotony of life, you know. But now I must retire to my own sacred precincts and write some letters. Good night, little mother mine." The girl turned at the door to waft back an alluring kiss and then went humming softly up the stairway.

After writing her letters and completing her other tasks of preparation for the night Margaret sat down before a picture of Robert Jordon that stood on her dressing table. She studied the features intently and her eyes filled with tears as she gazed into his strong, handsome boyish face. "You are the dearest boy in the world," she whispered, "and I will try to be more worthy of you." Then she got into bed and proceeded to forget all about her resolve.

Margaret rose next morning with an unaccountable feeling of depression. She had just started for the flower garden to seek some antidote for the uncomfortable sensation when the door burst open in her face and the other lover precipitated himself against her.

"Why, Morris Haley!" she cried catching him in her arms, "don't try to run over a young lady like that!" He wriggled himself loose.

"R-R-R-Robert's went away!" he stammered breathlessly, his eyes big with excitement.

"What!" Margaret turned pale, then laughed nervously. "Who said so?" she demanded a little shakily.

"My papa did! I heard him tell mamma 'at Robert went away, an' he said th' didn't anybody know when he'd come back!"

"Well, he could go away if he wanted to, couldn't he?" laughed Margaret.

"And not tell us!"

"Why, he didn't have to tell us if he didn't want to, did he?"

"But he al'ays does!" This establishment of new precedents was incomprehensible to the small mind.

"Well, never mind, deary, it's all right. I think he just went away on business and will soon be back and tell us all about it. You come over this afternoon and I'll pick you the biggest bouquet of roses you ever saw. Now, run along to school. Good by, sweetheart." Margaret threw him the usual kiss as the little feet sped happily away to kindergarten.

Late in the afternoon Margaret was ensconced in her favorite retreat in the garden, the rose bower, when a shrill little voice preceded a flying little figure.

"Marg'ret! Marg'ret! Where's you?"

She sat perfectly still fairly buried in roses.—roses in her hair, in her lap, all around her. Her is a pretty romance evolved in the pursuit and solution of a perplexing mystery. The wonderful voice of the unknown soprano, who appears unexpectedly in the choir and vanishes as by magic, thrills the astonished congregation and captivates the young minister's heart. Her identity skillfully concealed, for a long time she eludes his quest which finally ends in a strange discovery. Read this interesting story all complete in June COMFORT.

"THE MYSTERIOUS SOPRANO"

"The Rajah's Daughter"

Defenselessness of United States Is Alarming

THE frightful carnage in Europe has forced on our attention the question of how to avoid war,—whether by arming or disarming. We had hoped against hope (and millions persisted in that hope, futile though it was) that there was enough good sense in the world, no matter how great the armament of the European powers, to avert war

We flattered ourselves with the idea that with the Hague peace palace, the intermarriage of royalties the greater sense of national responsibility, the deeper appreciation of the value of human life, the spread of democratic ideals, the desire of the great banking houses to keep capital profitably and peacefully employed, would all tend to avert a universal clash of arms. Alas! we flattered ourselves too much. Dynastic ambitions were more powerful than democratic ideals, the spirit of nationalism instead of diminishing with time, experience has shown, has intensified, and the altruistic ideal of world-wide brotherhood, has become for the present at least an irridescent dream.

It was a rude shock to us all, for the things we had placed so much reliance upon, the things our better natures told us ought forever to still the thunder of guns and the clash of steel, turned out to be as flimsy as a spider's web in comparison with those twin Molochs, greed and ambition, which still rule in the hearts of those who control the destinies of nations.

Our peace dreams (thanks to living under democratic institutions and being nourished on democratic ideals) had carried us at least a century ahead of our time and with a sickening thud we have been brought back from the blue skies of hope and peace to the cold, cruel earth where every clod, in Europe at least, seems destined to be a soldier's sepulcher.

Let us reason together. Once our geographical position gave us immunity, but science has obliterated our isolation and at any moment, the thunder of an enemy's guns may be heard in our ports, our coast cities may crumble, our Atlantic seaboard be as desolate as war-stricken Belgium. Do we want to be overrun by the armed hordes of Europe and Asia? We certainly do not. We want to work out our salvation in our own way, and that the other American republics may do likewise; so we have issued notice of the "Munroe Doctrine" that no European or Asiatic nation shall be permitted to acquire another inch of territory upon this continent. This policy is vital to the interests of all America. Yet Europe does not take this declaration of ours seriously, for we have been only too painfully reminded of late that might and force are the only determining factors in national policies, and that no declarations or protests of ours will have any weight with the rulers of the world, unless backed up by big guns, smokeless powder, battleships, aeroplanes, submarines and men trained to handle them in war.

We may prate of disarmament in time of peace. To those who do not know the real dangers it sounds well as put forward by impractical theorists and visionaries, all of whom would, were the enemy at our gates, be screaming for soldiers, sailors and battleships to protect them the same as our missionaries in barbarous Turkey today are demanding U. S. battleships and marines to protect them.

Had Jean Jaures, the French Socialist leader, had his way in disarming France, the Paris he loved would by now in all probability be a part of the German Empire, for the German socialists are backing the Kaiser in his invasion of France. Had Britain listened to the warnings of Lord Roberts and other far-seeing men, Belgium today would not be a mass of smoking ruins, its wealthiest citizens standing in the bread line, a million of its people heart-broken refugees in foreign lands, and six millions more lying prostrate beneath the heel of the merciless conqueror.

Democracies despise war, and for that reason seldom prepare for it, or if they do prepare, prepare inadequately. Thus it was that neither England nor France could render to Belgium the timely help that might have saved her.

And right here let me expose the hollow hypocracy of the proposition that the Belgians might have avoided all trouble by permitting the Germans to occupy Belgium and make it a base of operations against France and England. Belgium was neutral, not concerned in the war, and it is the duty of a neutral country not to permit its territory or any part of it to be occupied, traversed, or made a base of as moral obligation and national honor, requires a neutral nation to defend its neutrality and resist with all its might any attempted violation of its territory by a belligerent.

Had the Belgians consented or even submitted, without resistance, to the Kaiser's proposal to march his army into their territory as a means of attacking France or England, it would have been an act of war on the part of Belgium against France or England. Therefore, the German invasion of Belgium forced war on the Belgians and left them only the choice of which side they would fight on

If there is a feud between two of your neighbors and you mind your own business and keep out of it, you are neutral. But if you should let one of them come into your house to shoot out of your window at the other you would be joining the feud and there would be no doubt which side you were on; and if the shot fired from your house with your knowledge and consent should kill the other neighbor the law would hold you guilty of murder equally with the man that fired it. International law applies the same rule to feuds between nations.

The case of Belgium illustrates how a nation, however peaceably disposed, may be forced into most disastrous war by a feud of its neighbors. If the German navy predominated as largely as the British navy does, and in the present war Germany saw fit to land an army anywhere on the coast of Maine and march across the State to attack Canada, the United States, in present condition of unpreparedness, could not muster force enough to prevent such an invasion.

What would this country say to a President or an administration that allowed Maine or any other State to be "Belgiumized"?

Directly we talk of adequately protecting our shores and raising a sufficient force to repel invasion, our ears are assaulted with the preposterous cries of militarism. This is the merest piffle. This is not a militaristic nation and never will be. The term militarism is greatly misunderstood. Militarism means that the military dominates the government as it does in certain European nations. The United States armies and navies are under the control of the people instead of the people being controlled by them, and the armed forces of the state are looked upon as necessary evils, tolerated under protest, instead of patriotic machines to be encouraged and worshipped.

In all branches of our military and naval arms we are deplorably deficient. It takes six months to create even apologies for soldiers, and longer time still is necessary to properly arm and equip them.

As to just what steps should be taken to protect our shores and the lives of our citizens from a foreign foe we can well leave to military and naval experts who are versed in such matters. Whether we adopt the Swiss system, an admirable system by the way, or some other system equally good, is immaterial as long as protection is given us. Let us be so well prepared for defense—and that is all we want—that no one will care to attack us. Our readers must learn to discriminate between aggressive militarism and defensive common sense. Armaments cost money but they cost little in comparison with war. Europe is an armed camp and Japan is a menace. Vain and foolish is that man who thinks we can keep our shores inviolate, our enormously wealthy country free from invasion by peace platitudes and soft talk. That may be done a hundred years hence, but until that time arrives we must be ready to meet the enemy at the gate with more than soft words. Envious eyes are always turned upon us, and we know not when the hour of our travail may come—and it may come quickly. .

Nation-Wide Prohibition of Liquor Is Coming in the U. S. as Well as in Europe

FROM the beginning of the war Earl Kitchener, head of the British War Department, has urged the suppression of the grogshops as a military necessity, and the government responded by shortening the daily period that the saloons are permitted to keep open and by otherwise restricting their business.

Even thus restricted and reduced the drink evil still remains the greatest menace that Great Britain has to contend with, and the highest officials of her government are strenuously advocating absolute prohibition throughout the United Kingdom, at least

"We are fighting Germany, Austria, and drink," declares Lloyd-George, British Chancellor of the Exchequer, "and, so far as I can see, the greatest of these three deadly foes is drink. If we are to settle with German militarism we must first of all settle with drink."

The chiefs of the British Navy Department are equally strong in their demand for the abolition of the liquor traffic.

Understand that this is not because of the direct effect of drink on the soldiers, man-o-war's-men and marines, for they are under military discipline and no liquor is permitted to reach the fighting men of the army and navy. It is because of liquor's weakening and demoralizing effect on the people at home causing idleness, poverty and distress, reducing their earning and producing power in every line of industry at a time when the nation's resources are being taxed to their utmost and there is pressing need of the best efforts of the entire population. The great problem is to supply the armies with food, clothing, ammunition and other war material, and the liquor-drinking by the workers in the docks, shipyards, arsenals and factories is crippling England's military operations.

To meet the situation while the question of legal prohibition is under consideration, King George has issued a proclamation urging everybody to practise total abstinence as a patriotic duty, during the war at least, and has set the example himself not only by his personal pledge to abstain but also by ordering that no liquor shall be served in the palace. Though the King of England has been shorn of nearly all governmental powers, his moral influence is all the greater for that reason and he still reigns supreme as the social head of the nation. Everybody looks to him for guidance in matters of etiquette, ceremonial and style.

As the King has banished liquor from his household, all the nobility and gentry must do likewise unless they are willing to be excluded from good society. The King has taken the pledge, and that makes it bad form for any English gentleman to take a drink. The employers of labor have agreed to imitate the King in setting an example of total abstinence before their workmen. From this the grand significance and mighty influence of King George's personal stand on the drink question is apparent. Great Britain is making rapid strides toward nation-wide prohibition.

Would to God we had a social ruler in the United States equally devoted to the cause of temperance and as powerful to make total abstinence fashionable in high life here On the contrary it is the fashion with American society leaders to sneer at prohibition, and when a consistent temperance man like Secretary of State Bryan abolishes the custom of serving liquors at state dinners given in honor of the diplomatic corps he is shamefully caricatured in the press and his praiseworthy action is ridiculed as "grape-juice diplomacy;" and Secretary of the Navy Daniels is abused for his order forbidding our naval officers to set a bad example to the enlisted men by keeping liquor and drinking aboard ship.

All our public officers should, like Vice-President Marshall and Secretaries Bryan and Daniels, set an example of total abstinence.

Do not vote for any candidate for office who does not advocate nation-wide prohibition and exemplify temperance principles in his own conduct.

In response to my request for an expression of opinion on my April editorial, the letters and post cards are beginning to pour in urging COMFORT to lead a movement for nation-wide prohibition by act of CONGRESS. I cordially thank those who have written pledging their active support and, as it is yet early, I hope to hear from enough others to make sure that it will be worth while to launch the campaign by means of petitions to Congress. You will hear from me again in my June editorial in which I expect to lay out a definite plan for circulating the petitions which are not yet ready as great care is required for their preparation. Meanwhile I would like to receive a post card or letter from those who have not written me when this reaches them.

There is a world-wide agitation in favor of prohibition of the liquor traffic. Shall the United States lag behind Europe in doing away with the drink evil?

This Department is conducted solely for the use of COMFORT sisters, whereby they may give expression to their ideas relative to the home and home surroundings, and to all matters pertaining to themselves and families; as well as opening a way for personal correspondence between each other.

Our object is to extend a helping hand to COMFORT subscribers; to become coworkers with all who seek friendship, encouragement, sympathy or assistance through the interchange of ideas.

Any abuse of this privilege, such as inviting correspondence for the purpose of offering an article for sale, or undertaking to charge a sum of money for ideas, recipes or information mentioned in any letter appearing in this department, if reported, will result in the offender being denied the use of these columns.

Do not ask us to print letters requesting patterns, quilt pieces, etc., for the purpose of, or with the expectation of receiving the equivalent in return, for this is not an exchange column.

Do not ask us to publish letters requesting money contributions or donations of any sort. Much as as we sympathize with the suffering and unfortunate, it is impossible to do this as we would be flooded with similar requests.

Do not request souvenir postals unless you have complied with the conditions which entitles you to such a notice. See postal request notice in another column.

We cordially invite mothers and daughters of all ages to write to COMFORT Sisters' Corner. Every letter will be carefully read and considered, and then the most helpful ones chosen for publication, whether the writer be an old or new subscriber.

Please write only on one side of the paper, and recipes on a separate sheet.

Always give your correct and full name and address, very plainly written; otherwise your letter will receive no attention.

Address all letters for this department to MRS. WHEELER WILKINSON, Care COMFORT, AUGUSTA, MAINE.

WITH the craze for old-fashioned furniture, china, silver and articles too countless to mention, it would be well if someone would put in practise the old-fashioned Sunday. To the average city dweller, Sunday means a longer time in the morning to sleep and rest from the toil of the week or the extra dissipation of the Saturday night theater or dinner party and then time to read a somewhat sensational Sunday newspaper. In the country, particularly in the summer, if the time is not devoted to actual work in the fields it is spent in repairing farming implements or possibly the younger members of the family choose that as an opportune time for a fishing trip, or a game of baseball in the corner lot or the pasture. To a certain extent that is all right and I heartily approve of and endorse the need of sleep and rest, for it seems that when God has given us strong and healthy bodies the least we can do in return is to take proper and intelligent care of them. Then also I do not disapprove of Sunday papers except when read to the exclusion of everything else. The young people on the farm need pleasure and relaxation too, but with the rest of careless humanity they forget that Sunday should be a day of rest and that it is God's day and should be consecrated to Him.

To go back to the Sundays our grandmothers tell us about, aided with a moderate imagination, we can almost see the family at the breakfast table where they had gathered at a slightly later hour than usual, then, after morning prayers, go with them in the big wagon to the church; after the sermon came the ride home to the plain yet bountiful dinner, then the afternoon for study of the Bible instead of the latest best seller and the singing of hymns, rather than the present day ragtime which is a desecration of real music. If not another church service in the evening there were family prayers at home, followed by an early hour of retiring.

Compare this with the strenuous Sundays of today and then wonder if you can why our homes lack that air of peace that marked the simple Sundays of our forefathers.—Ed.

ALICE, TEXAS.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND COMFORT SISTERS:

I have read COMFORT since I can remember and have often thought I would write but there were always so many interesting, instructive letters that I hardly felt my little mite would be needed. We live fourteen miles northwest of Alice, the county seat of Jim Wells county.

I enjoy reading the dear old COMFORT, from cover to cover, and read aloud to my husband's mother, who cannot see to read as well as I. We are left alone, she and I, with the children, and we are the best of friends. I have no mother. She is good and kind to me. And I hate to hear of mother-in-law and daughter not getting along together.

Sisters, here is a use for old stocking tops; pull them upon hand to clean out lamp glasses, then burn; also good to use when polishing stoves.

I am going to ask the dear sisters to help me. I have three requests and I sincerely hope they can help me. I will return the kindness in any way possible.

My gums are sore and seem to have receded from the teeth and left a dark ring where teeth are exposed. Have not the sisters some remedy to use? I have tried several remedies, also use dental paste, but my teeth get worse. Three teeth below and one above are affected.

What will take liver spots off my face? It is a sallow brown all over from under my chin to the roots of my hair and has been since I was twelve or fourteen years old. Should I take an internal remedy, external, or both, to remove this embarrassing defect?

Cannot someone help me to cure a boy of eight years from bed wetting?

I am quite small and very plain, but I have one of the dearest Johns. We have been married over five years. He is a large, strong, fine looking man, and has a refined face. I am indeed proud of my better half. I wish all of the sisters were blessed with a dear, good husband. We have large, healthy boys. The oldest is four, the next is three in a few days, and the baby is nine months old; one of the sweetest tempered, most playful, little tots I have ever seen. He worships his grandmother and will leave me to go to her, and she loves the little children dearly.

My husband's father died last September and since then we have lived with his mother on the home place, he being her only living son. And indeed, we are all more contented now than ever before, though times are harder and all necessities are higher. God is wise beyond all human conception.

Wishing all the contentment that an honest, helpful life can bring. Sincerely a friend,

MRS. IVA B. RICE.

Mrs. Rice. From your description I feel safe in saying that you are suffering from pyorrhea, more commonly known as Rigg's disease, and a reliable dentist is about the only hope for you, for I have never heard of any home treatment that would cure it. The exact cause of this disease is not known though it is thought that it results from some condition of the system for a great many people have it who take every care of the teeth. The pus forming germ works on the roots of the teeth, causing the gums to recede and the teeth to loosen and finally drop out if the disease is not checked. Until recent years no cure was known and many teeth were extracted which might have been saved. The first step is to remove the deposits. This is accomplished by the use of instruments designed for this purpose by which the irritant material can be removed without undue injury to the gum or tooth-structures. The use of an antiseptic mouth wash, for which your dentist should give you a prescription, together with proper brushing of the teeth, using a paste prepared especially for your needs, will do much toward correcting this condition, though in advanced cases more than one scraping will be necessary. Splints or bands are used as a last resort to hold loosened teeth and a serum or antitoxin has been discovered which is used in cases of long standing, so do not be discouraged but act at once as the disease will spread from one tooth to another and is contagious, so it is not only to your advantage to have the matter attended to but you have the safety of your family to consider as well. One cannot be too careful in caring for their teeth and remember that the gums need brushing or massaging to keep them healthy. I think it a good practise to visit a dentist at least twice a year and have the teeth carefully examined and any cavities filled that may be present. Teach your children to care for their teeth and it will save them much in the way of dentist's bills and discomfort in years to come. If I can give you any further help, I shall be glad of the opportunity. Yours must be a happy family and I hope your faith and trust in God will be the means of helping some discouraged sister who does not seem to realize that God sees and cares for all.—Ed.

Comfort's Sisters' Recipes and Everyday Helps

NO BUTTER OR EGG CAKE.—Two and one half cups of unsifted flour, two cups of sugar, one heaping tablespoon of lard, one and one half teaspoon of cinnamon, nutmeg to suit taste, two tablespoons of cocoa, one teaspoon of baking powder. Mix with one and one quarter cups of sour milk in which is dissolved one teaspoon baking soda.

ICING.—One cup granulated sugar, three quarters cup sweet milk, piece of butter the size of a walnut; do not stir. Boil until it thickens in cold water; take off, beat until cold enough to spread on cake; flavor with vanilla. Raisins or nuts are good mixed in cake.

MRS. SCHINDLER, Cincinnati, Ohio.

ELDERBERRY FLOWER WINE.—(Requested.) Four quarts boiling water, two quarts elderberry blossoms free from stems, four pints of sugar, juice of two lemons. Pour the boiling water over the blossoms, let stand ten hours, strain through cheese-cloth, add sugar and lemon juice, let ferment and as it runs out of the jug keep filling the jug up with sweetened water. Keep jug in a dark place. Fit for use in a few months after it gets through fermenting.

MRS. GEO. L. MYERS, Smith, Nevada.

CORN CHOWDER.—One pint of corn, one quart of milk, three tablespoons of butter, two tablespoons of flour, two eggs, one onion, salt and pepper; cook till done on slow fire.

MRS. CHAS. A. RIVERS, Voorkeeville, N. Y.

CORN OYSTERS.—One cup grated corn, one quarter cup cream, one well beaten egg, salt to taste; flour to make thick batter. Fry in hot, deep fat. Drop by spoonfuls about the size of an oyster. Drain on paper and serve hot.—Ed.

HOG'S-HEAD CHEESE. (Requested.)—Cook the meat, salting it. Five quarts lean, chopped fine, one quart fat, chopped fine, one quart water, one level tablespoon of pepper, two level tablespoons salt, three level tablespoons each of sage and celery leaves powdered. Celery gives it a fine flavor. Mix well and pack in pans. Slice and serve cold.

MRS. LIZZIE LAWLEY, Herron, Ill.

HOG'S-HEAD CHEESE. (Requested.)—Clean the head and cook till tender, then separate the meat from the bone, as hot as can be handled and chop fine in food chopper. Season to taste with salt, pepper and sage, then put in thin cheese-cloth sack and twist top to sack till cheese is formed in shape and the fat squeezed out. Let cool and cut in thin slices.

MRS. WILL DYCERT, Lenore, Idaho.

MACARONI WITH HAM.—To a quart of soaked macaroni add a medium-sized onion, fried in enough fat to keep it from sticking, and one cup of ground ham; one can of tomatoes, or a quart of tomatoes and cook a few minutes. Pour into baking dish, granite is best, and sprinkle with cheese. Bake till cheese is brown.

MRS. GEORGE TUBBS, Montevider, Minn.

PICKLED FISH. (Requested.)—Almost any kind of fish will do if fresh. Cut off heads and wash well; cover with salt over night; in morning cover with water, let come to a boil, remove from fire and skin; place in jar, cover with spiced vinegar, boiling hot; these are fine and keep well.

MRS. LILLIE DAVIS, St. David, Box 135, Ill.

POTATO SALAD.—Cook as many potatoes as there are people to be served if potatoes are small. Boil them with jackets on and when done throw them into very cold water and leave until they are lukewarm; then peel and slice them very thin. Moisten with vinegar diluted with water and let stand until cold enough to serve. For a salad for six persons take two red pimentoes from a 10-cent can of red peppers and cut them in strips, six green olives cut in thin slices, two tablespoons ground blanched almonds, four sour pickles and two hard boiled eggs cut in thin slices. Season the potatoes well with pepper and salt and a good dash of red pepper and mix all the other prepared ingredients well with the potatoes. Then mix well with sufficient mayonnaise dressing to make it rich and tasty. Lay on lettuce leaves and place six teaspoons of the mayonnaise on the top. The almonds will prove a delight and surprise.

BEEFSTEAK PIE.—Cut steak and a small slice of ham into dice, simmer for fifteen minutes with two chopped onions and a little butter. Add one pint each of stock and sliced potatoes, a little flour and salt and pepper to taste. Cook twenty minutes before pouring into crust-lined dish. Cover with good crust and bake.—Ed.

MEAT ROLLS.—This recipe will make enough for four persons. Take twenty-five cents' worth of round steak and put it through meat grinder. Take two slices of bacon cut in pieces, a medium-sized onion, half a green pepper, and put in a frying pan with a little butter. Brown slightly, add meat, three tablespoons tomatoes, and let steam two hours, turning often. Let cook very slowly, being careful that it does not get too dry. Season with salt, pepper and paprika. Make rich pie crust, fill with meat and make individual rolls. Bake till brown and serve with tomato sauce.

MRS. C. M. HIEL, 1121 Guerrero St., San Francisco, Cal.

STUFFED BEEF STEAK.—Take a large round steak about one inch thick and spread on table. Make a dressing of one cup mashed potatoes, two onions chopped fine, one cup sweet milk, one half cup boiling water, and enough bread to make a thick dressing. Add salt, pepper and sage to taste. Last of all add two well-beaten eggs then mix all thoroughly. Spread a thick layer of the dressing on the steak and roll up carefully. Wrap in a piece of thin muslin, tie at both ends and in the middle with twine string. Drop into boiling water and boil until tender. Lift out of water and let get cold. Slice and serve. It is delicious for lunches.

MRS. LIZZIE LAWLEY, Herrin, Ill.

SALMON SALAD.—Remove all the bones from a can of salmon and put the fish through a meat chopper with a head of celery and a half cupful of stuffed olives. Mix with a salad dressing and serve on lettuce.

FRUIT SALAD.—Cut three oranges in halves and remove the pulp with a spoon. To this pulp add three bananas, one small bunch of white grapes seeded and sliced, a half cupful of chopped almonds, a few strawberries, in season. Serve the salad in the orange cups, after mixing with a tablespoonful or two of salad dressing and a cupful of whipped cream.

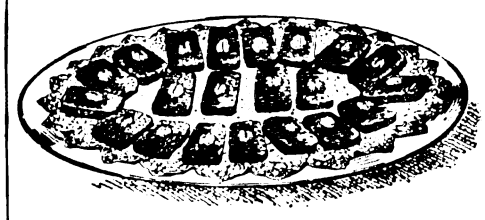
BELLE CHADBOURNE, Augusta, Maine.

SCRAMBLED EGGS WITH ONIONS.—Take as many onions as are needed, peel and cut in cubes, put butter in the frying pan with the onions and cook until soft. Then add salt and pepper. Beat as many eggs as are required, pour over the onions and fry like scrambled eggs. A good-sized onion and two eggs make a nice meal, but it all depends on one's appetite.

MRS. W. H. GARDINIER, 1026 Orange St., Youngstown, Ohio.

CHICKEN SCRAPPLE.—Dress a chicken as for frying; boil until very tender. Take meat off the bones and cut up fine. Put meat back in broth, salt to taste. Thicken this with corn-meal, let stand in flat pan until cold and then slice and fry. This is a good way to use up old or tough poultry.

MRS. F. E. OLIVERSON, Erie, Kans.



MOCK CHICKEN SALAD.—Cut leftover fresh shoulder in dice, chop some celery quite fine and mix the two with a good salad dressing and serve on lettuce leaves, and one could hardly tell the difference. Be sure and have shoulder lean. No fat is to be used.

PICKLED PIGS' FEET.—Take twelve pigs' feet, scrape and wash clean; put into a saucepan with enough hot, not boiling, water to cover. When partly done, salt. It requires four to five hours to boil soft. Pack in a stone jar or crock, and pour over them hot spiced vinegar. They will be ready to use in a day or two. If you wish them for breakfast, split them, make a batter of two eggs, a cup of milk, salt, a teaspoon of butter, with flour enough to make a thick batter; dip each piece in this and fry in hot lard. Or dip them in beaten egg and flour and fry.

SALMON LOAF.—One can salmon, two thirds cup of cracker crumbs, three quarters cup of milk, two eggs, one tablespoon of butter, one teaspoon salt, one teaspoon pepper; beat lemon into eggs, put fish and crackers in dish in layers. Steam one hour; serve with cream sauce.

MRS. EMMA STANTON, Connersville, Ind.

MARGUERITES.—Two eggs, one cup brown sugar, one half cup flour, one quarter teaspoon baking powder, pinch of salt, three quarters cup nuts, cut in small pieces. Fill small buttered tins with the mixture and place half of a walnut on each. Bake in moderate oven fifteen minutes.—Ed.

SILVER CAKE.—Whites six eggs, one cup milk, two cups sugar, two thirds cup butter, four cups flour, one quarter teaspoon salt, two teaspoons baking powder, one teaspoon extract. Cream the butter and sugar, add milk, then the flour mixed with salt and baking powder; then add the extract and the whipped whites. Beat well for ten minutes, and bake in moderate oven.

GOLD CAKE.—Yolks six eggs, one half cup butter, two cups sugar, one pint flour, one and one half teaspoon baking powder, one cup cream, one teaspoon extract. Cream butter and sugar, add yolks and cream, flour sifted with powder, and extract. Mix into firm, smooth batter and bake.

These cakes may be baked in loaf form or in layers, as desired. If in loaves or very deep mold, about forty minutes are required for baking. Use any filling or icing preferred.

MRS. J. M. SANER, JR., Iron City, Tenn.

QUEEN CAKE.—One cup butter, one cup sugar, four eggs, one cup seeded raisins, one cup milk, three cups flour, one half teaspoon salt, two teaspoons baking powder. Cream butter, sugar and yolks of eggs together, then add milk and raisins; flour, salt and baking powder together. Lastly fold in the whites of the eggs, beaten to a stiff froth.

MRS. G. S. HOZHANSEN, Festus, Mo.

SOFT MOLASSES COOKIES.—Scald one cup of molasses, pour it over one quarter cup of butter or lard, one half cup sugar, one half level teaspoon salt, and one tablespoon of ginger or any spices preferred; dissolve one half teaspoon soda in one quarter cup of cold water, add to the cooled molasses then stir in three or four cups of flour, making a soft dough to drop and spread in a pan or a stiff dough to roll and cut out.

MRS. BLANCHE GARDY, Aspen Hill, Tenn.

CRULLERS.—Two eggs and one half cup sugar beaten lightly together; one half cup sour cream, one half teaspoon baking soda, a little nutmeg; add two and one half cups flour, which will make a dough stiff enough to roll out on a floured board; then cut in about two and one half inch diamond shaped pieces, cut a slot in center and double one end through the hole. Drop into hot lard and let them turn to a light brown, these are excellent.

MRS. W. H. GARDINIER, 1026 Orange Street, Youngstown, Ohio.

RAISIN PIE.—Most of the raisin pie recipes I have seen have lemon in them, and as I do not care for it, perhaps some others would like this better: One cup raisins, two cups water, two tablespoons flour, salt. Boil for fifteen or twenty minutes, add water that has boiled away. Bake with two crusts.—Ed.

SOUR CREAM PIE.—One cup sour cream, yolks of two eggs, one tablespoon flour, one teaspoon cinnamon, one half of cloves, one teacup chopped raisins. Stir all together with one cup of sugar. Bake with one crust. Frost.

MARGARET FISCHER, Lakefield, Minn.

CREAM PIE.—One half cup sugar, one heaping tablespoon flour, two eggs; beat thoroughly; add enough cream to fill the pie pan which has been lined with crust; flavor with vanilla; bake in moderate oven.

SQUASH OR PUMPKIN PIE.—One cup squash or pumpkin, sifted; two eggs, one pint milk; stir squash and milk until smooth; set on back of stove to keep warm; add eggs, pinch salt, one half teaspoon cinnamon or nutmeg, one small cup sugar; bake with under crust.

MRS. ANDREW DABOVICH, Virginia, Nev.

DATE PUDDING.—One cup suet, chopped fine, one half cup molasses, one cup sweet milk, three and a half cups flour, one pound dates, seeded and chopped, one teaspoon soda dissolved in milk. Mix and steam three and a half hours.

MRS. DE JOHN, Canon City, Colo.

SWEET CRACKERS. (Requested.)—Two and one half cups sugar, one cup lard, five cents' worth of baking ammonia, five cents' worth of lemon oil, two eggs; soak the ammonia in the milk, mix flour until it gets as hard as you can work it in; cut into squares one half inch thick and bake in a hot oven.

MRS. OLGA WENNER, Seven Persons, Alta.

DEVIL CAKE.—One half cup of grated chocolate, one half cup cold coffee, one cup of brown sugar, yolk of one egg, one teaspoon of vanilla if desired; stir together and cook to a cream, let cool and add to the following: One cup brown sugar, one half cup butter, one half cup cold coffee, two eggs, two and one half cups flour, one teaspoon cream of tartar, one teaspoon soda, dissolve the soda in the coffee and cream tartar in flour; beat well.

MRS. IDA HEADLAND, Fairmont, W. Va.

BANANA CAKE. (Requested.)—One half cup butter, one cup sugar, one half cup milk, two scant cups flour, one and one half teaspoons baking powder, whites of four eggs, one half teaspoon vanilla. Mix flour and baking powder. Cream butter and sugar, add milk and flour alternately, then vanilla and beaten whites bake in three layer-tins in a hot oven. Add one half cup mashed bananas and use as filling. Dust top with powdered sugar.

LEMON CAKE. (Requested.)—One cup butter, two cups sugar, seven eggs, one and one half pints flour, one teaspoon baking powder, one teaspoon extract lemon. Rub to a light cream the butter and sugar; add the eggs, two at a time, beating five minutes after each add the flour sifted with the powder, and the extract; mix into a medium batter, bake in paper-lined tin, in a moderate oven forty minutes.

M. H. BLACK, 74 West 44th Street, Bayonne, N. J.

FRUIT CAKE WITHOUT EGGS.—One half cup brown sugar, one half cup molasses, one cup sour milk, one cup raisins, two cups flour, four tablespoons melted butter or other shortening, one teaspoon each of soda, cloves, nutmeg and cinnamon. Bake in moderate oven.

MRS. FRED CARPENTER, Hermon, N. Y.

TEA CAKES.—One quart of flour, three eggs, two cups sugar, butter size of an egg, one half teaspoon lemon and enough milk to make soft dough; roll out and cut with biscuit cutter. Bake in a moderate oven.

MRS. SMITH, Tennille, Ga.

BUTTERLESS, MILKLESS, EGGLESS CAKE.—Two cups of brown sugar, two thirds cup of shortening, two cups of water, three cups of seeded raisins, pinch of salt, two teaspoons cinnamon, one teaspoon cloves, one half teaspoon mace, if liked, one half teaspoon nutmeg, two teaspoons baking powder, one teaspoon soda, four cups of flour, three tablespoons warm water. If desired, a cup of chopped nuts can be added.

MRS. CHARLES RIVERS, Voorheeville, N. Y.

The City Man's Baked Beans

Baked for Men Who Don't Work Outdoors

Old-style baked beans, if men like them, may do for manual laborers. They can digest what office men cannot.

But the man who rides to inside work must foster his digestion. Under-baked beans are not good for him, and he knows it.

Yet men love Baked Beans. And the super-nutrition makes them ideal food.

That's one great reason for Van Camp's. They are baked for hours, in steam ovens, at 245 degrees. They come out mellow, mealy, easy to digest. There is no after-effect to destroy one's enjoyment.

VAN CAMP'S
PORK & BEANS BAKED WITH TOMATO SAUCE

Also Baked Without the Sauce

10, 15 and 20 Cents Per Can

Then you never tasted old-style Beans even one-half so delicious. In Van Camp's, no Beans are crisped, none broken. No hulls are apparent. You taste only mealy morsels.

Van Camp's have a zestful sauce baked in, a sauce that was never matched.

If you think that Baked Beans don't differ much, you'll find a surprise in Van Camp's. And you will thank us silently a thousand times for creating such a ready-baked dish.

Order a few meals now.

Buy a can of Van Camp's Beans to try. If you do not find them the best you ever ate, your grocer will refund your money.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

John Weston, old and wealthy, knowing he has but a few days to live, sends for Richard Burdon, his lawyer. Remembering a debt he owes Charles More, he revokes a will in favor of a younger brother's child and makes a new one, disposing of the lives and hearts of two, and leaves it for Mr. Burdon to carry out his bequests. The banker is found dead the next morning. Sixteen years later Sir Cyril More with wealth squandered and no aim in life, finds himself at Lucerne, Switzerland, where he meets Edna Weston, who has only Aunt Martha. Edna inquires of Sir Cyril if he knows Richard Burdon. Her father, on his death-bed charges her to go to him the first of the following September. Edna and her aunt board at the Pension, a Swiss boarding house and Sir Cyril leaves the Grand for the Pension Petre, where he gives his name to Edna and her aunt as Harold Payne. Seated in an arbor Cyril hears voices and recognizes Mr. Howley Jones, who admits being a chum of Cyril More, who has completely gone to the dogs, squandering all his money on Glitters. Edna listens and questions if he knows Sir Cyril and is it all true? He admits he has heard of him. Later Cyril meets Miss Glitters and requests her not to tell he is there. Passing on he sees Edna who has witnessed his greeting with Glitters.

A few days later, Aunt Martha, Edna, Sir Cyril and others go by train to the top of the Rigi. Returning, Cyril and Edna decide to walk down. A mist, preventing them from following the path, envelops them, and rather than have him leave her to find the path, she would rather die, Cyril clasps her in his arms, and she admits her love and promises to marry him. Without telling their secret, they go to a little Protestant church four hours' ride from Lucerne and are made one. Returning Edna realizes that Aunt Martha must be told. Coming to the Cathedral Edna recalls she has left her crepe shawl. Leaving her upon the Cathedral steps Cyril returns for it. Miss Glitters comes along and she remembers having seen Edna at the entrance of the Grand Hotel and knows she is waiting for the gentleman with whom she has seen her before. She tells Edna of his broken promises, shows her the face in the locket she wears, begs of her never to see him again and leaves her crushed with grief.

CHAPTER IX.

IN BITTER MISERY.

MOLLY GLITTERS went on her way, having, as she thought, perhaps for the first time in her life done her duty, and stretched out her hand to warn and perhaps save an innocent young girl from the snares of one of the most dangerous men of the day, with a most pleasantly approving conscience. It was quite a novel sensation for Molly, the feeling of having done the right thing, and having gone out of the way to do it, too; for Molly was not partial to young and simple girls—indeed, she had the usual antipathy of her class for them, and it had not been by any means an easy piece of good will which she had accomplished that morning. Molly went on her way, self-satisfied and complacent, and left behind her a tortured, anguished, racked woman, who was no more the Edna of an hour ago than the eagles one sees eating their hearts out in their cages at the zoo, are the monarchs of the sky, that soar above the Syrian hills.

Motionless, tearless, she sat, her head bent upon her hands, her heart burning like a red-hot coal.

What did it all mean? What was this frightful nightmare? Was it true? Could it be true that her life had finished that day—that she should never know happiness, never be able to laugh more?—for it came to that with her, she felt, if this were true.

Ah, no, it could not be true! What was she sitting here for? Why did she not go home? Why did he not come? She was half stunned by the sudden, too sudden, revelation to realize it at once, immediately; but, as the slow minutes tramped round the clock overhead, the truth grew upon her and made itself felt, and, with a moan, she hid her face, and knew that the joy of life was over for her.

The idol which she had worshiped as gold of the purest and finest type was suddenly shorn of its divinity and shown to be nothing better than common clay and dross.

It is not too much to say that as she recalled the face and figure of her husband of an hour, the girl, innocent to a fault, shuddered. Had she been a whit less innocent, had she known half as much as the generality of girls of only half her age, that knowledge would have allowed her to discriminate, to see how far Cyril had sinned, to weigh his sin in the balance, and make excuses for him; but Edna knew nothing save that the man she had thought so good—as pure and good, and noble and spotless as he was handsome—was something so different that she shrank from the mere thought of his presence, blushed and writhed under the remembrance of his passionate kisses, and moaned aloud a prayer that the good God might send death there and then to her, and save her.

Edna's love had been as pure and noble as herself. She had not loved Cyril's beauty, great as it was, proudly fond of it as she was; if he had come back to her with some great scar across his face that rendered it twice as hideous as it had been before been beautiful, her love would have had no abatement—it would rather have increased by so much of sweet, wifely pity and tenderness. But now! Oh, God! it was too fearful to think of, so fearful that she, in her great innocence, could not grasp the full sense of it; but this she knew, that the man she had given her young life and virgin love to, the man who had come to her and made her love him, who had stood between her and blotted out all else as small and unworthy of consideration—did not love her, could not love her, for he had loved—oh, God; not loved, but murmured words of love to—had kissed with kisses, such as he had given her, another—yes, many other women!

Her state of mind—its great and awful contrast to that sweet, expectant happiness of an hour ago—is difficult to describe, well-nigh impossible, yet easy to understand; it was as if the heavens had been suddenly darkened, all good, and faith in good, destroyed, and she herself were left to stand alone and battle against unconquerable, inevitable, overwhelming misery of evil.

She shed no tear, but her face was white and drawn, her eyes strained and wild with a vast agony, and her lips parched as with fever. And so the bride waited for the bridegroom!

The great clock above her struck the hour; three monks from the monastery on the hill came slowly up the steps, with bent heads and folded hands, and approached the smaller flight at the cathedral door.

They looked at her as they passed; one—an old man, with white hair shining beneath his brown cowl—paused and bent over her as she sat, her head upon her hand, her eyes fixed with a wan hopeless, startled look upon the street beneath.

"Are you in any trouble, my daughter?" he asked, with gentle gravity.

Edna looked up at him with absent stare, and slowly shook her head; and the monk, with a muttered "Peace be with you!" passed with bent head, into the dim light beyond the open door.

Trouble! Yes, a trouble no monk that ever wore sandal could cure—a trouble she must fight and struggle with, and, alas! bear alone.

The interruption, slight as it was, roused her; she could not stay there to attract notice and invite pity. With a weak, languid step, she rose, steadying her hand against the old, time-worn stonework of the porch—for she was giddy, and quivering like a wounded deer—and made her way to the quiet and seclusion of the little cemetery at the back; he must pass through it on his way, and would see her. There—sinking down upon one of the tombstones, in a little garden of crosses, with a pictured Madonna within sight, and a sculptured crucifixion overshadowing her—she waited.

She had not to wait long, for presently there came the quick, firm tread of a happy man, and Cyril, handsome as Apollo, and as light-hearted, humming some joyous air, came up the path.

He had been longer than he expected; there had been some difficulty, caused primarily by his original French, but he had got the shawl, it was on his arm, and he was eager and impatient to exchange its light weight for the scarcely heavier one of his darling's arm.

His! All the way from the station had that little word been ringing a merry chime in his ears. His! the dearest, sweetest, purest angel that had ever walked on earth in the guise of a woman, was his! He didn't deserve it—he least of all men living—but fate, a kindly fate, had chosen to be merciful and generous and had poured out upon him the greatest gift that a man had ever received.

With such thoughts as these, handsome, happy "Wicked Sir Cyril" strode along, impatient of every yard of the road that stretched between him and his bride.

She saw him the moment he came past the cathedral into the graveyard, but she could not speak or move.

She watched him as he paused and looked round impatiently and eagerly; then, as he caught sight of her and came toward her, picking his way among the tiny graves of the children, with their poor wreath of immortelles and summer flowers, she put her hand to her face, pushed back her hair and panted.

"My darling!" he exclaimed, half stumbling over a tiny grave; "I thought I had lost you, that you had run away from me—thought little of it, you know. Here's the shawl, a spoil and trophy of war! What a pity it is that there isn't one language, and that English! Such a babel as we made of it at that station. Ah——" he has come close enough to see her face now, and there is enough in it to make him stop short and catch his words up.

"Edna! Good God! what is the matter? Are you ill, my darling?"

And with an anxious, loving face he is on his knees beside her.

With a visible shudder she shrinks from him, and draws—not snatches, that would not be so coldly reasonable—draws her hand which he has taken.

She shakes her head slowly, and coldly puts his hand aside.

He stares at her with unbounded astonishment at first, then an apprehensive look comes into his face, and he puts his arm round her waist.

"Edna! My darling! What is it? What has happened? Why do you look so? Edna! you must be ill!"

She shakes her head slowly, and coldly puts his hand away from her; he is so petrified that he does not resist, and his hand falls upon the tombstone that is no colder than her fingers; then he looks round, as if for help, and is about to draw her to him, when she speaks.

"Do not—do not touch me!"

"Do not touch you!" he repeats, each word distinct and full of horrified alarm. "Why not? Edna are you mad?"

For a moment a swift light comes into her eyes. Perhaps she is; she thinks; then she remembers, and shuddering, puts him away from her.

"No, I am not mad," she says, and her voice is so hollow, so lifeless, so changed, that he starts as if he could not believe his ears. Before he can speak she opens her lips again.

"Why did you marry me?"

"Why did—I—marry you? Great Heaven! am I mad?" and for the moment he looks as if he were. "Why did I marry you—do you ask me that now? Because I loved you—but—but—why do you ask, my darling? What has come to you? I left you here, all right, not a quarter of an hour ago, and come back to find you like—like a ghost, and—for God's sake tell me what is the matter with you?"

"Because you loved me!" she says, heedless of his imploring prayer. "That is not true! you did not love me! No—no—no!"

Cyril rises to his feet slowly, like one in a trance, his face as white as hers, his eyes fixed with a puzzled agony, upon hers.

"What do you say, Edna? I must be mad or dreaming," and he puts his hand to his head. "For God's sake, tell me what has happened to make you like this! or—or——" and a sudden, ghastly smile comes upon his face—"or—is it a joke?"

She sits with bent head speechless, the picture of desolation and despair. There is a moment's silence, then it is broken by the music of the grand organ and the voices of the monks chanting a vesper hymn.

Softly the sacred strains that have floated upon every evening air for a thousand years fall upon the twilight and upon the ears of the two miserable creatures under the shadow of the cathedral walls.

"Edna," says Cyril, at last, his voice broken and working, "something has happened—you have heard something——"

He stops, and she raises her eyes to his.

"I have," she says, with a shudder.

His face darkens for a moment, then sets hard.

"Tell me what you have heard to change you to me like this—all in one quarter of an hour, Edna." Then his composure gives way, and a burst of anguish, terrible to behold in a man, shakes him from head to foot. "Oh, Edna, my darling! don't sit there looking so! You—you kill me! Tell me what it is! God knows if you loved me as I love you, you would be more merciful!"

"More merciful!" and now she is on her feet confronting him, her eyes ablaze with a woman's passion of sorrow and despair, her little hand clinched, her soul afire with jealousy, tortured love, virginal indignation. "If I have loved you! Oh, how can you stand there and say such words to me? As if I had not loved you! Keep away from me! I—I could not bear you to touch me! I—I hate you!"

Cyril started, and clinched his hands hard, and set his lips tight.

"Yes—you—all my love is turned to hate! How could it be otherwise while I have sense to think and heart to feel? Ah, you do not know what you have done! You have worse than killed me! Oh, I would die a thousand times rather than hear this! Don't speak—I will not listen! I have listened too much—too much!"

Then her tears flowed fast, but she put up her hand to keep him off, and he could but stand and groan.

"You know that I have heard all about you—about your wickedness and your falseness! You know it! I can see it by your face! Oh, why—why did you come to me and make me love you? Why—why? I did not seek you, I did not think of you; I did not come across your life and take it all up and waste it? Why did you do it? Why did you pretend to be all that is good, and kind, and noble, while you were wicked, and false, and base, all the while? Did I deceive you? Why did you deceive me? Why did you make me love you even against my will, and then throw off the mask and come back to me something quite different? What had I done that you should do me such a great wrong—oh! what have I done?"

In a low, passionate voice she charges him, and he can only stand dull and white as a statue, and by silence, deep and awful, plead guilty.

He does not know how she has discovered his deceit, he does not know how much she knows—it may be all; but he understands how her pure young soul shrinks from him! And what wonder, for, as he stands confronted by her innocence, her maidenly indignation—he shrinks from himself. And she is his wife! Has she forgotten that? This is their marriage day—tonight their nuptial night; she has not forgotten, her next words show it.

He expected to see a half-formed, fairly bred, but rather commonplace young woman.

"You do not answer; what can you say? Ah, it is all true what that woman said!" and she shudders.

A great light flashes upon Cyril's intelligence—that woman!

He takes a step toward her.

"Edna! for God's sake, tell me! Whom have you seen—who has been telling you——"

"Who?" she repeats, with a shudder of disgust and a vivid flush. "The woman you loved—the woman who wears your portrait—the woman who should have been your wife—one of the many you have 'loved'!"

Slowly, bitterly, as the bitterness comes upon herself, she pants the words at him.

Cyril stands with half-bent head and twitching lips.

There is a moment's silence; then, as the anthem rises solemnly, and the voices of the monks break out, again he speaks.

"Edna"—the voice hollow and trembling—"do not say any more. Come home; it is too late—after today's work——"

She hides her face with a moan.

"Too late!" she cries.

Cyril trembles in every limb, and his eyes devour her, imploringly, pitifully, hungrily.

"Great God! she hates, she loathes me," he mutters, and turns away to hide the anguish with which the conviction has stabbed him.

Then he turns to her, and, with clinched hands and dry, white lips, speaks to her.

"Edna, it is not too late! You need not shrink from me—you need not shudder; you are my wife—you are mine, to have and to hold. I could carry you away with me tonight." His voice trembles for a moment, and sounds hollow and uncertain when he goes on; "I could command you to come to me, here where I stand, and keep you until death should part us. Ah, you need not shrink!"—for instinctively she has drawn a little further away—"you do not know me, or you would not fear that I should force myself or my right on you. You are my wife—it is too late to prevent that, nothing can alter it—but you can be my wife only in name; we can part tonight. Do not fear—we will! You shall go back to your aunt, in all but the name of wife the same as when I first saw you. It is all I can do to repair the wrong I have done; I will do it—yes, let it cost me what it will, I will do it. Ah!"—and his voice deepens into sternness—"I do it for my sake as well as yours, for I would rather die than hold you by any tie than love. If you do not love me, if you have learned to hate me, no power on earth shall make you wife of mine!"

Then his voice breaks.

"Poor child!" he says, almost inaudibly. "My poor, sweet, little Edna! go back and learn to forgive me—if you can, to forget; as I shall never learn to forgive myself or forget you."

She sits as motionless as if she were a figure carved upon the tomb beneath her. Still the music of the organ and the chant of the monks fills up the pause.

"You may think—fear—that I may break this resolve," says Cyril's voice, so utterly unlike his, "You need not fear that. You will never have to complain of my crossing your path after tonight. I will never, by my presence, or by word or deed, remind you of my claim to you; from tonight you may look upon me as dead, as I shall be in all but reality, to the world in which you are likely to be. After tonight we shall never meet—we shall never meet again."

There comes a silence deep and awful. Is she deaf, or dead, that she sits so silent and signless?

Cyril pulls himself together with a shiver, and goes up to her.

"Good by, Edna," he says, "good by, for the last time!"

Then he bends over her and kisses the edge of the shawl. Does she feel that last, mad kiss? She may or may not. She makes no sign, and the man who has loved her, who—be his sins what they may—loves her as truly and passionately as any man has loved yet, turns and walks quickly away.

At the corner he looks back; is it with a last wild, groundless hope that love may prevail?

No, she is still motionless, unrelenting.

Then he bows his head to hide the working of his white, haggard face, and passes swiftly away.

A moment afterward the mute figure he has left behind him starts to her feet.

"What have I done? Oh! my love, come back!"

But it is too late; wicked Sir Cyril is halfway down the street and out of hearing, even of the voice of his bride—the one voice he loves best in the whole wide world.

Outside the "Grand" the usual small group of idlers are congregated; it is the half hour before dinner, and the well-dressed men and women who patronize the best hotel in Lucerne, are lounging about, gossiping with the half-abstracted air which is noticeable about the man or woman waiting for dinner.

Cyril, blind to everything and everybody, filled with this, the first misery of his life, is striding past, heedless and indifferent to the little buzz and flutter of the fashionables, when a richly dressed woman, who is standing near the end of the ornamental forecourt, bargaining for some ripe figs with the dark-haired Swiss girl from the market, utters an exclamation at sight of him—or his face really—and puts out her beringed glove to stop him.

Cyril stops dead short with a startled air, then seeing who it is that has stopped him, turns an ugly red, and with something like an oath shakes his arm free from her light grasp, and goes on—but only for a few steps. A sudden resolution sends him back, and walking past her, he makes a gesture toward the little English church that stands in the hotel grounds.

"Go—somewhere out of sight—I want to speak to you."

Molly Glitters hesitates a moment and pouts, then obeys and follows him.

"So," says Cyril, standing opposite her, his hands clasped on his stick, a scornful scowl upon his face, "you broke your promise, as I might have expected."

The fiery contempt in the latter words raise Miss Molly's ire.

"Now, Mr. Daredevil, I didn't come to be insulted!" she exclaims, angrily, eying him with mingled surprise and some honest concern, for there is a look on his face which she, intimately as she thinks she knows—or has known—him has never seen before. "And what's the matter? Have you been lifting your elbow"—she meant drinking—"already this morning? That's unlike you, Sir Cyril."

"What is that to you?" says Cyril, with haughty roughness. "Answer my question—why did you break your promise? Was it impossible for you to be truthful in small things as it is in more important ones?"

The bitter sneer touches her and takes her breath away.

"You have been drinking!" she says, under her breath, and with a passionate nod, "or else you wouldn't insult me like this—unless you're quite changed since I knew you—and—oh, my promise, eh? And who says I've broken it?"

"Don't lie!" he retorts, savagely. "I have just come away from some of your—with——"

A light breaks in upon her and she smiles—not sweetly—but the smile dies suddenly under the scorching fire of his eyes.

"Oh, that's the matter. You don't like to be interfered with. Let me tell you, Mr. Cyril, I don't care what you say, and how you look, I'm not a bit sorry, in fact, I'm very glad if I've balked you for once, and saved that poor little thing."

"Silence!" says Cyril, between his teeth; "don't take her name upon your lips."

Molly flushes.

"I don't know her name, and I don't want to! So I'm not good enough to speak it. It strikes me I should do less harm to her than you would. Oh, your black looks won't frighten me;"—but she trembles a little nevertheless—"I've spoiled your game, and there's an end of it, and it's no use your coming and wanting to knock me down, because you can't do it! If you had any proper feeling about you you'd thank me rather and get out of the way, glad that I've stopped it from being any worse."

"Hold your tongue!" says Cyril, hoarsely; "you don't understand—you talk of harm! Harm! You think I meant harm!"

She breaks in upon him with her sharp and not unmusical laugh.

"When did you mean anything else?"

The retort strikes home so sharply that he winces, and Molly, seeing her advantage, goes on, quickly:

"Come, Cyril, what's the use of carrying it off high with me? I've done a good action—the first in my life, perhaps, and you ought to be glad of it! For all your black looks now you'll forget her in a week, and"—taking no notice of the dark frown that greets her assertion, she continues: "And it isn't half as bad as it might be, for, as to my promise, I don't know that I've broken it after all—I didn't mention your name."

Cyril turns his eyes on her with a glare of surprise and incredulity.

"Ah!" says Molly, shrewdly; "meant no harm, eh? and didn't tell her your name! Well, perhaps it was best, and I've done no harm, for she didn't get it from me, poor little thing, and she never shall, that's more!"

Cyril stands, his hand pressing against his brow, his whole mind concentrated upon one thought.

"You didn't tell her who I was?" he says.

"I didn't!" answers Molly, emphatically.

"She does not know——"

"Unless you told her."

"And you will keep your promise? Oh, Molly, if I could trust you!"

Something in his voice, for the first time revealing the agony within, touches her.

She looks at him with careful scrutiny.

"Why, you are both as bad as one another! Who'd ever think that you'd be hit like this? Yes, you can trust me; I don't know why you should insult me like this—no one can say Moly Glitters can't keep her word."

"Hold to that still," says Cyril, with a little anxious sigh; "keep it from her, and I'll forgive you all else you've done. Promise me, once more!" he pleads now.

"I promise, and there's my hand upon it!" she answers, humbly.

Cyril touches her hand with a shudder—it is the hand that has struck down his happiness at one blow—and then turns away.

"You are off now, I suppose?" she asks. "Where to?"

He puts his hat over his forehead again, and looks down with the dark, brooding stare.

"Yes, I am off," he says; "I don't know where now. We shan't meet again, but I trust to you; whatever happens, you'll keep it from her. Good by."

"I will—good by," she says.

And then, with his head bent down, he walks hurriedly away.

HOP onto my lap and lend me your ears and intellects. I suppose you have heard (or at least about one in every hundred of you have, for very little worth while news gets into the country papers) that we are going to be investigated all over again. By the way the people and the institutions of this country get investigated every three minutes, either by Uncle Sam, the state authorities, or some other nosey individual, or set of individuals, you would imagine that somebody was taking an interest in us and was really anxious to find out why we are all so desperately happy and prosperous, why we are also luxuriously rich and scandalously healthy, why we have to luxuriate in so many hundreds of prisons, insane asylums, poor houses, vice dens, not to mention saloons, etc. Honestly you would think somebody was intensely worried about us all, and you will feel confident they are when I tell you that our poverty-stricken old friend, John D. Rockefeller is going to spend a hundred million dollars to investigate, not only the people of the U. S. A. but every other human microbe that tenaciously clings to this bleeding, suffering planet. Now if I really thought that after John D. had spent all this vast amount of money (money which the masses have so industriously toiled for and made for him) that he and his investigators would know any more about us and conditions generally than they do now, and would unselfishly plan, with the knowledge acquired, to make the world a better place for all of us to live in, I would say: "Go ahead John, and spend your money, and good luck to you." But after this and all other similar investigations, what happens? Tons of books containing the evidence are printed and filed away, a report is made, a few slight reforms are recommended which won't harm anybody and won't do any good, and things go on in the same bad old way. These investigations to my mind are a farce. We all know or ought to know what ails society. A few have too much and the rest of us have too little. There is plenty for all. Stores and factories groan with wealth, plenty to go around and and make everybody happy. But it's not allowed to go around. Wealth is forced into a few deep bottomless pockets causing congestion in one spot and economic anaemia and sterility everywhere else. What the world needs is justice, and that is just what wealth and privilege are determined not to give us if they can help it. If the world had justice there would not be any John D. or Jim G. with a hundred million dollars lying around loose to investigate anybody, and what is more there would not be anybody that would need investigating. Society however is not built on a foundation of justice, but of injustice and it is to the interest of those who control society to keep things just as they are, so that the old game of plucking and plundering, which enriches the few and impoverishes the many, can go on without interruption.

Now if the oil king were sincere in his desire to benefit society (and the money he controls has done many splendid things) why doesn't he spend say about ten cents, investigating himself? The masses of the people do not need any investigating. We know all about the various conditions that keep the wolf of poverty, want and worry at the door of so many millions of homes. What Mr. Rockefeller should do is to ask himself a few questions, and the first one I would suggest is this: "How did I come to have a hundred million dollars to throw away on a mere hobby, when millions of people in the country in which this money has been made, haven't even one dollar for bread let alone for folly? And again how comes it in a country that can hand hundreds of millions of dollars to me and my friends, that there are millions upon millions of people so wretchedly poverty stricken that they need putting under the microscope and prodding and investigating, questioning and examining just as a scientist examines a bunch of microbes." Mr. Rockefeller is not likely to ask himself that question. He knows without spending a cent what ails society, but he is too good a business man to admit that he does know. Most of the money that will be spent on this investigation has been made from a product which nature has been millions of years storing up in the bowels of the earth, and which if we had a government which cared one atom for the interests of the people, would never have been allowed to have passed into private hands and used as a weapon, a monopolistic weapon, to exploit the people and enrich a few men beyond the dreams of avarice.

Henry H. Klein in his work "Stand rd Oil, or The People," says: "This country is passing through an economic crisis which means freedom or slavery for the people. The economic life of the nation is being crushed out by the greed of those who control its industries and finance. Twenty persons own the majority of the stock in the Standard Oil. They are in control of the principal railroads, mines and public utilities; they have fully one billion dollars invested in other than Standard Oil securities; they control the newspapers through the advertising columns, and maintain an influence over education and religion through the colleges which they endow, and the churches and ministers which they support and pension. Their profits from all securities amount to a quarter of a billion dollars a year. In a few years at the present rate of profit making the Standard Oil will own practically everything of value in the United States." These figures ought to give you food for serious thought.

Now here is something you probably never have thought of, for the average individual seldom does any thinking, except as to where his next meal is coming from. You know the truth of the old saying that money makes money. After a man gets a certain amount of money, he doesn't work, his money works for him. He invests his cash and lives on the interest, and it is the toilers all over the earth that have to work and pay that interest. Suppose now I buy up all the peanuts in the country and control the peanut industry. In a year or two I find my profits are so large that I can not only control the peanut industry,but I've got a lot of superfluous capital to put into the wooden leg industry. In a year or two my profits on peanuts and wooden legs are so great, I begin investing in the false teeth industry, and so I go on, just as the Standard Oil has gone on, investing in banks, railroads, gobbling up this and gobbling up that, controlling the lives and destinies of millions of men, getting as much work from them as possible, and paying them as little as possible in return, exerting a baleful influence over legislators, defying our laws, bringing the courts and judges under suspicion, and even menacing the law making power of Congress. You see it's just like the little snowball that keeps getting bigger and bigger with every revolution, until it becomes of enormous and menacing size, capable of sweeping the democratic institutions of the country smash, crash to destruction. Mr. Rockefeller has built a magnificent university at Chicago, and he is quite capable of covering the country with similar institutions. If he feels so disposed he can pension all the professors who teach in those universities, and they would be rank ingrates if, knowing they were to be provided for in their old age by Standard Oil profits, they said one word against monopolists or monopolies. Not even a decent dog will bite the hand that feeds it, and in these uncertain days when there is only a step between parlor and poorhouse, we cannot blame a man, especially if he has a family to provide for, if he tries first of all to protect himself and his loved ones from hunger and want, misery and pauperism. If Standard Oil money were paying my rent and Steel Trust money buying my food, how could I ever have the nerve to knock my benefactors and talk right out of my heart to you about conditions which I know only too well menace the very foundations of our liberties and ideals?

You have told me thousands of times that I am helping you, and I am helping you only because I speak freely and plainly. If wealth were to control me I would be like a muzzled dog in the presence of a burglar—helpless. If I do not talk plainly and freely, I cannot make you think, and without thinking, the world can never move or get anywhere. It is a positive fact that no wrong can endure being thought about, and if you would all concentrate your minds on one wrong after another, they would all crumble and disappear for thought would crystalize into action. If wealth muzzles our press and our leaders of thought we are doomed. Give us the man who will tell the truth no matter who it hurts. But if Rockefeller's money buys bread for our teachers and thinkers isn't it natural to assume that a great deal of education will bear the imprint of the oil can? A courageous manufacturer startled the board of commerce in Detroit the other day by hurling at them these words which exploded with the force of a bomb shell: "You fellows sit back smug and complacent and don't give a damn what becomes of your workmen. This board never was a factor in the community and never will be until it becomes more useful to the people at large. You are simply great on handshaking and making things pleasant. I would suggest that the board drop all fads and devote itself to helping the unemployed. If you fellows didn't pay your men such rotten wages such help wouldn't be necessary. When your plants shut down you grease up the machinery and kick the men into the streets."

I quote this from one of New York's greatest and most conservative prints. We need men who dare to talk thus. Men only talk strongly when they feel deeply, and not until men's deepest emotions are stirred shall we awake and set our house in order. Bear in mind we can't reach the fount of a man's emotions if it has been plentifully sprinkled with oil. One of our greatest misfortunes is that money today is organized, while society is not. A writer in Collier's puts the matter thus: "There is no such thing as organized society no matter how often the empty phrase is used. None of us belong anywhere, we live where we please, work at something we have chosen or have happened into. What do you suppose any ancient Egyptian or Greek would think of our loosely scattered changing ways? How long would it take to convince such a one that we have a social system, pernicious or otherwise. The plain truth is that we have not. Our modern world has had thrown into it certain mighty forces of science and invention and change and the old arrangements have been broken up; the old voices of supernatural or caste society, are only petulant squeaks. We do not heed them any longer. We some day will have organizations of society based not on authority or fear, but on the co-operation of men, facing the facts of life in freedom and brotherliness. That is what we are working toward. But the events of 1914 serve to show how far we have fallen short from attainment."

Let us not be discouraged. When Thomas A. Edison speaks his countrymen are ever ready to listen. He says: "In two hundred years by the cheapening of commodities the ordinary laborer will live as well as a man does now with two hundred thousand annual income. Automatic machinery and scientific agriculture will bring this result, not individualism but social labor will dominate the future; you can't have individual machines and every man working for himself. Industry will constantly become more social and interdependent. There will be no manual labor in the factories in the future, the men in them will be strictly superintendents, watching the machinery to see that it works right. The work day I believe will be eight hours. Every man needs that much work to keep him out of mischief and to keep him happy, but it will be work with the brain, something men will be interested in, and done in wholesome, pleasant surroundings. Less and less men will be used as an engine or as a horse, and his brain will be employed to benefit himself and his fellows."

Two hundred years is a long way off. I do not believe we shall have to wait one fourth that time. All that is necessary to do is to get the mass of the people thinking and working along right lines. If the people would do that, the old American spirit of independence would be rekindled in the heart of the present generation, then we would have no one cringing to Carnegie for libraries or pleading to Rockefeller for universities or hookworm medicine. We have in this country the brains and the ability to abolish poverty, disease, crime, ignorance and nearly every other ailment, mental and physical. The great and necessary thing to do is to bridge that terrible gap which lies between the highly cultured, educated, able man of science and thought, and the poor, wronged duped, exploited toilers. Let Rockefeller devote his millions to bridging that gap, and the first step in that direction would be to imitate the methods of Henry Ford of Detroit. See that every man working for the Standard Oil and associated interests is receiving a wage that will allow him to rear his children in a comfortable home and under conditions which will enable them to grow up healthy, right-thinking, peace-loving, God-fearing American citizens. The people of the United States do not need investigating. They just want to be given an opportunity to develop along right lines, and as I have said many times before, give them justice and they will need no charity, and there will be no one with enough loose change to bestow charity on anyone. God speed that day. Meanwhile let us not forget that Rockefeller has spent two hundred and fifty million dollars for various educational and charitable purposes, while scores of men of vast wealth, equally capable of doing good have never given a single cent to help their fellow beings.

If you haven't a set of Uncle Charlie's three wonderful books your home is not complete and you are not equipped for the full enjoyment of life. Start in at once to obtain them.—they cost you no money, only a very little time and effort.—and keep at it until you have the entire set. The book of Poems is beautifully bound in ribbed silk stiff covers; the Story Book is bound in two styles, the one in ribbed silk stiff covers like the Poems, the other in paper covers; the Song Book is bound only in heavy paper covers. All can be had free as premiums; the Book of Poems or the Story Book in ribbed silk stiff covers, either one for a club of four subscriptions; the Song Book or the Story Book in handsome paper covers for a club of only two subscriptions. See full particulars at the end of this department. These three books are a library of endless joy and merriment, the best medicine to drive away the blues.

Now for the letters.

WHITESTONE, R. R. 1, S. C.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:

I want to see this song in Print written by Bessie Millwood.

The Lightling Express

The Lightling Express at the Depot Last night as it started on its way, all the Passengers on Board of the train they all seemed Happy and gay Except one young man was sitting By hinself was holding a Letter in his hand was plained to Be seen By the tears in His eyes that the contents made him feel sad.

chor

Plea.e Mister conductor don't Put me off your train, for the very best frind I have in this world is watting for me in pain mother is expeting to die in a moment sir and May not last through the day
I want to kiss mother goodby dear sir Before god takes her Away.

A stan old conductor then started around to get a ticket from everyone he came to this young man in grafted tones comanded his fair
I have no ticket the young man said I will Pay you back some day
I will put you off at the next station sir, but he stoped when he heard the man say

Repet chor

a little girl was sitting close by a Hearing what thay did say
She picked up his hat and colesion soon made and paid the boys way on train
Oblige to you Miss for your kindness to me you are welcome said she never fear
Each time the conductor would pase through the car those words would ring in his ears.

chor

mother was sick when I left home and needed a doctor Care
I came to your town Impolment to get but could not find work here a letter rived from sister this morning mother was dying said she and that is why I want to ride on your train thoe I have no money to Pay.

chor

I live on the farm and like it fine. I will Be 21 next May. Have light hair, grey eyes, weigh 120 pounds, am five fet tall. I am sending you a song I want you to print, it is a beautiful song, so I will close for this time.

your friend as every,
MISS BESSIE MILLWOOD.

Bessie, I am sorry you think The Lightling Express a "beautiful" song. The song tastes of the American people are not very high I regret to say. In every city there are of course a few cultured people who know a real song from punk and junk, but the punkier and junkier a song is the more chance it has to make a hit with the class of people who go wild over such dopey ditties as "Willie Get The Hammer, There's a Fly on Baby's Lip," "The Eggs My Mother's Chickens Laid For Me," "Take Back Your Heart I asked For Liver," "Grandma's Teeth Will Soon Fit Willie," "Did She Fall Or Was She Pushed." I have published the song as you wrote it Bessie, or nearly as you wrote it, for in its original form it is almost unprintable. The Lightling Express. I take it is your way of expressing The Lightning Express. Nothing like originality. In the first verse we see the young man sitting by "hinself." I've heard an Irishman talk of a hen as a hin. What's your idea in trying to convert a human being into poultry. Make it himself next time. In the chorus you have a capital B for Before and a small g for God. It's God that needs a capital letter and not before. In your second spasm you speak of a "stan" old conductor. No doubt you mean "stern" old conductor. You say he spoke in "grated tones." Conductors have done a lot of grafting in their time, but though grafting affects the pocketbook I'd no idea it affected the voice. Probably you mean "gruff tones." I think that's nearer the mark. You say the conductor commanded the boy's "fair." What was he trying to do, steal his complexion? I hope not as that would be a skin game. Most railroads run a skin game, so the conductor may possibly have been after his complexion as well as his fare. Note the difference between the spelling of the two words. Wasn't it perfectly lovely of the young man to promise the conductor he would pay him back some day and wouldn't it be perfectly lovely if we could all get aboard a train here in New York say, bound for San Francisco. With sleepers, meals, etc. that trip would only cost about $112. Then when the train started and the "stan" old conductor came round with his "grafted voice" and we found it inconvenient to hand him our complexions and still more inconvenient to whack up a hundred bones for the fare, we could pull a crumpled piece of paper out of our pockets, start our lamps leaking, and hand the conductor a bull con story that mother was dying from inflammation of the pocketbook and extreme stringency of the monetary system, and wanted to kiss us before she cashed in her checks. Then just as the "stan" old conductor decided to pull the bell rope and dump us on the prairie between New York and Yonkers, a little girl would pass around the hat, collect three cents and a pant's button, and the conductor would put the three cents in his pocket and give the company the pant's button, and take the whole bunch of us to San Francisco, and throw in a chop suey supper and a trip to the Barbary Coast for good measure, and mother would be down to the depot to meet us, dolled up in her Sunday best looking so fascinating, that the conductor would marry her right on the jump, and the train would have to walk back east the best way it could. Oh, I just tell you if life was like the song writers paint it, we'd be having more fun than a society dog at his own funeral. But alas, things never turn out that way. Bessie informs us that the little girl took up the poor young man's hat and made a "colesion." I've heard of a collection being made but never a colesion. A colesion I imagine must be an improvement on the old fashioned collection, a regular Wall Street hold up game judging from the results. I think I'll get Billy the Goat to pass around the hat and take up a colesion for me, so that I can hire Dr. Care, the gentleman referred to in the last verse, for a man who comes into violent collision with the "Lightling" Express is going to get it between his breakfast and his dinner time if he doesn't get off the track. Alas! the little girls who will get up a colesion for a man are mighty few and far between. In the last verse we are told that the young man went to town to get "empolment," which if I know anything about it is a new way for spelling employment. If I

Wash Day Dont's and Wash Day Do's

Don't boil or scald clothes; don't hard-rub them. Boiling and rough rubbing wear out fabrics much faster than actual use.

Don't waste fuel, time, strength, health, by doing your washing the old-fashioned way. There is an easier, quicker, better way—the Fels-Naptha way.

Do this the next time you wash:

Get Fels-Naptha Soap, soak the clothes in cool or lukewarm water for about thirty minutes after breakfast. Rub lightly, rinse, wring and hang out.

All the afternoon is left—you can sew, read, or go visiting—you'll not be too tired even to iron.

Changes a whole day's hard drudgery into a half day's easy work—because Fels-Naptha does the hard part of the washing for you.

Fels-Naptha Soap is just as wonderful for all soap and water housework as it is for washing clothes.

A Sacrifice to Love

By Hapsburg Liebe

Copyright, 1915, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher, Inc.

SHE was a little woman, bent and gray, was the Widow Sarah Lee Oliver, and the patience of her lined face was both beautiful and unforgetable. She lived alone in her two-roomed log house on the brow of the hill that overshadowed the little mountain town, Morrisville. Her husband had built the cabin there, at her wish; she had told him that the view was worth carrying water a long way. And her husband, also at her wish, had sawn out a low window in the western wall, from which she had seen thousands of sunsets, and from which she could see every house in the town below. He had called it the Sunset Window—and by that name did Sarah Lee still call it.

The air of the spring morning was to her like that of some especially hallowed Sabbath. The sun was warm and bright; a fresh breeze caressed the vines and the rosebushes with a gentleness almost human; hens clucked, birds sang, mud-wasps droned. It was the greatest day of old Sarah Lee's life; the happiest, the best, the sweetest. She had succeeded in her heaviest undertaking.

For her daughter Betty, a girl of nineteen, was to be home that day from having finished her schooling in the nearest city, which lay twenty miles west of Morrisville. Sarah Lee had worked and starved, suffered, almost bled, for years, that Betty might have an opportunity to become a woman of accomplishments.

The little woman had forgotten the old wound in her heart as she looked from the Sunset Window out across the rows of hewn log houses and to the scrub-bordered wagon road that stretched out like a dirty-white ribbon toward the railroad and the city. The wound was that her one son, six years older than Betty, had left home at the age of twelve, no word of any kind having been received from him during the whole thirteen years of his absence.

Although she knew that her daughter would not reach Morrisville until late in the afternoon, Sarah Lee began the very best dinner she could afford full two hours too early—she had two baked pheasants, vegetables, pies, jellies, a cake.

The sun sank lower and lower, and she watched breathlessly from the western indow for the homecoming of Betty. She would go to the wavy mirror and touch again and again her gray tresses to see that not a single lair was out of its place; she would carefully smooth down the folds in her fresh, dark percale dress, and see that her coarse shoes had not the slightest fleck of dust on them.

Then a black object appeared on the dirty-white ribbon of a road, in the distance. As it came nearer, she saw that it was a light vehicle drawn by a pair of mettlesome horses—and it was coming at what seemed to Sarah Lee a terrific pace! In front of the court house she saw a well-dressed young man alight, tie the reins to the hitching rack, and help a girl to the ground in a manner that was both courteous and masterful. She watched them closely, her eyes too dim to recognize her daughter—but she had no doubt that it was Betty.

The pair came hastily up the winding path. There was a rush of white, lacy garments, a vision of loveliness—and a pair of soft, warm arms went about Sarah Lee's old neck. The young man, strong looking and masterful as he appeared to be, turned his head to admire the little panorama spread out before him.

Sarah Lee Oliver, however, could not forget her inborn spirt of hospitality, even in her heaven of gladness. She cordially invited her daughter's escort into her humble home.

"Why, I didn't even tell you his name, mother!" Betty cried, her blue eyes shining with happiness. "That's Arnold Stewart—my mother. Wasn't it kind of him to bring me home?"

Arnold Stewart had addressed a thousand men during his short career as an attorney with much more confidence in himself than he had when he spoke his first words to Sarah Lee Oliver. For the light on the little widow's countenance was greater by far than the expression of any of the thousand masculine faces.

"It was a pleasure to bring your daughter home, I assure you," he managed to say, after the introduction. "So let's forget it."

"It was kind in you," declared Sarah Lee. "And you must have dinner with us, Mr. Stewart. I know you're hungry, after such a long drive. And I want you to eat like a horse!"

They laughed. Stewart entered the cabin, and accepted a creaking chair as graciously as though it were some magic throne. Then they had dinner, and the guest ate with a gusto he had rarely shown for food.

When it was over, he took little, bent Sarah Lee by the shoulders, looked smilingly down into her good face, and told her that he wished to marry her daughter.

"I admit it pleases me to hear you say that," said Sarah Lee, after a moment of silence, returning his sincere gaze with equal sincerity; "but I think you'd better not marry Betty."

"Why?"

"Must I go over it?" murmured the old woman. "She is too young to marry, for one reason. Besides, you are the son of a wealthy man, and naturally your people expect you to marry a wealthy woman. You see, Betty has written me about you."

Stewart smiled and shook his fine head slowly. "Money!" he exclaimed, a little bitterly. "Money! What is any money, compared to Betty Oliver?"

"The color of romance sometimes fails to last forever," said Sarah Lee. "And then—think of me, Mr. Stewart. What would I do without her? —not that——" she interrupted him with a hand raised to his broad shoulder. "I know you would say that I could live with you. There are things here that I could not leave, Mr. Stewart."

There followed a moment of awkward silence. Betty however, stepped into the breach.

"I told you all this, Arnold," she said softly. "I could never leave her, even for you, Arnold. It was her unceasing work and self denial that made my education possible, that made it possible for you to care for me. No, I owe her too much. I cannot go with you to your world, much as I—as I——"

She covered her face with her hands and ran, sobbing aloud, into the other room. She had defeated her purpose by breaking down. It caused old Sarah Lee to see matters in a different light. Betty loved him! Must Betty throw aside her happiness for her? Could she hold Betty from her heart's desire? For Betty would not have sobbed, had she not loved Arnold Stewart.

No, Sarah Lee decided, she couldn't. And as she looked Arnold Stewart over again she began to have a great faith in him.

"Arnold," she breathed, addressing him thus almost affectionately, "Betty is yours, if she wants to be—and it seems that she does. She's told me a great deal about you; and I believe you're a man all through. That's the highest compliment I know, Arnold. I ask only that you both come back here very often."

Sarah Lee's judgment was correct; Arnold Stewart was a man, all of a man; there was no skeleton in the closet of his life. It came to him dazedly that he must throw out of the weighing his own happiness; that he must think of the patient woman to whom Betty owed all. He paled, and his gaze, filled with pain, sought the floor.

But the little widow read his thoughts of sacrifice.

"I know what you're thinking," she said, her voice thick. "It's good of you. Don't you see that if you don't take her we'll all be unhappy? And I believe Betty would be missing a great deal by losing you. If you still want her, Arnold, she is yours."

Arnold Stewart's face jerked strangely as he caught the little old woman up in a hug that almost frightened her.

"I still want her!" he assured Sarah Lee.

Two months later they were married. Stewart's set immediately fell in love with Betty, as much so as the people of Morrisville had loved her mother before her. And the young couple did not forget, for all their happiness, the old woman living alone in the cabin on the hill that frowned down upon Morrisville. They visited her at every opportunity; gifts and money came regularly, while no week passed without a pressing letter concerning Sarah's Lee's making her home with them.

The last of these missives was especially urgent. It was in the form of a petition, and signed to it were the names of young Stewart's father and mother, as well as his own and Betty's. Sarah Lee kissed it, and went to the window that looked out across the little town and over miles of mountainous country stretching to the westward. The sun was going down, and rays of golden glory, interspersed with shafts of crimson and violet and purple, shot from the distant horizon like a heavenly aurora borealis. Sarah Lee read the letter again, and this time she bowed her gray head to the sill log and whispered brokenly to the silence:

"If I didn't have a boy out in the world, I'd go. But if he came home, he'd expect to find me here, so I must stay and wait."

She had always thought he had gone West, and he was therefore inseparably linked to the sunsets, linked by a bond that neither heaven nor earth could have forged anywhere except in the furnace of a mother's heart. And Sarah Lee prayed to the God that had made all the beautiful sunsets to send her wanderer home, just as she had prayed thousands of times before.

Insufferable sacrifice! But of such, surely, is the bleach that whitens souls.

The next morning, Mrs. Spurden, the town gossip, a fat, round, elderly woman, came toiling up the winding pathway, her flushed face telling Sarah Lee Oliver that she had big news before she had recovered her breath sufficiently to speak.

"Such an awful—climb!" she spouted disconnectedly. "Sary Lee—did you hear—about the desperado?"

Sarah Lee's heart almost stopped with a strange, smothering apprehension.

"What desperado?" she shot back.

"The desperado—the desperado that killed Mort Hendricks last night," panted the garrulous one. "Didn't you hear about it, Sary Lee?"

"I didn't hear of it," answered the little widow, holding herself calm despite her fears. "What was his name—well, just tell me all about it, Jane."

Mrs. Spurden had begun to breathe normally again. With the consciously proud air all gossips have when dispensing, she told her story:

"Last night, about an hour after dark, there stepped into Job Farrel's store a big, tall man dressed in reg'lar Western clothes—peak-ed, dove-colored hat, soft blue shirt, horsehair watch-chain, and so on. He was sunburned and reckless-lookin', my husband said.

"Well, Mort Hendricks was drinkin', and he stumbled against this man, steppin' on his foot. The desperado told him to please be careful, and said that his breath would wilt ragweeds, and he didn't want it in his face. Then Mort hauled off and slapped the desperado. You know how stout Mort was, Sary Lee. Well, he grabbed the desperado, and they begun to wrastle around. Finally they got outside the door, in the dark, and there the desperado stuck a big knife into Mort's side, killin' him right off. Sheriff Raines happened along, and caught the mu'derer red-handed. He's in the jail, now, Sary Lee."

"What do you think they will do with him?" asked the widow, having told herself that no son of hers would kill a man for such a trifle, and thus setting her mind at rest.

"Humph," grunted Mrs. Spurden, smilingly. "My husband heard old Judge Elwood—he's in town, you know, Sary Lee, it bein' court week here—heard the judge say that Morrisville would have its first hangin', or he'd miss his guess."

"But you didn't tell me his name," the widow reminded.

"He laughed a little, my husband said," replied the gossip, "and said that his name was John Doe for the present. Of course he denied that he done the killin'."

"Poor man!" murmured Sarah Lee, with the ready sympathy of one who has suffered much himself. "Is there any chance that he is innocent, Jane?"

"Why, of course not, Sary Lee!" Mrs. Spurden clipped. "Who on earth would have done it—stickin' the knife thataway—but the strange man? They almost seen him do it. Besides, who's got anything against Mort Hendricks, enough to do such a terrible thing as that?"

"The Hendrickses and the Raineses have a lot against each other," said Sarah Lee, speaking more to herself, perhaps, than to her visitor. "They have been at riflepoints as long as I've known them."

"But none of the Raineses would be guilty of such a sneaking trick as knifing an enemy," Mrs. Spurden retorted with spirit—for the Raineses were relatives of her husband's. "Why, Sary Lee, the Raineses are among the best people of the county: there's George Raines is the sheriff, and Bolton Raines is a magistrate. I know Mort and George Raines had a fight last week, but George Raines wouldn't kill a man unless it was to save himself, Sary Lee. Sary Lee," she went on triumphantly, her eyes narrowing, "didn't you have a boy to run off from home a long time ago?"

"Yes," the little woman admitted, with studied calmness.

"My husband whispered to me—but I won't tell it at all—whispered to me that this desperado looks a lot like your husband used to look," Mrs. Spurden said, no doubt feeling that she had ably retaliated for the suggestion that any of the Raineses could have done the terrible deed.

Sarah Lee Oliver forced a smile. "There is not the slightest chance that he is my son," she declared. "My blood and my husband's blood has no murder in it, Jane."

And there was that in her tones that caused the gossip to change the topic of conversation immediately. Sarah Lee Oliver was—figuratively—a fighter.

But the little widow's mind was not quite at rest now, despite the fact that there was no murder in the blood of her son. For he had resembled his father, had the boy Newton.

Justice in Morrisville was strict in its adherence to the law and quick. The young man accused of the killing of Morton Hendricks was brought to trial with little delay. He called himself John Doe with a peculiar twinkle in his deep, gray eyes and refused to say anything about his past. He talked only when it was absolutely necessary, and the burden of his speech was in the main stout declarations of his innocence. His attorney fought hard for him, but to no effect. The idea that the killing was connected in any way with the old feud between the Raineses and the Hendrickses was met by hoots and jeers.

There was a breathless silence in the courtroom. The rustling of the leaves on the gnarled maples without could be plainly heard. The far-away tinkle of cowbells became a roar. The neigh of a horse was almost startling. They were waiting for the return of the jury.

And they did not have long to wait. The twelve good men and true filed slowly to their places, their countenances heavy with the weight of the judgment they were to set upon the shoulders of a fellow man. Sara Lee Oliver, unable to entirely throw off the haunting fear that had fought continuously to sink its wolfish fangs into her soul, stood at one of the windows, on the outside, waiting to get a glimpse of the accused to see for herself that it was not her son.

Voices came to her dully. Then she caught a few words that jammed in her heart like leaden balls:

"Hanged by the neck until dead—Friday in October—jailyard—Morrisville!"

Her wrinkled face growing white with apprehension, she shifted her position; then she hastened to another window. She saw the prisoner now, standing erect, manful, his head up, his eyes deep and earnest. It seemed that he was mentally pitying those who had condemned him to death. She knew him, for all his grown-up air. It was indeed her son, this man who was to be hanged by the neck until dead—Friday in October—jailyard—Morrisville!

She reeled at the blow, and saved herself from falling only by her grasp on the windowsill. Her husband's blood, her own blood, the first life she had held to her young breast, the child of her heart, the boy of the beautiful sunset land and of her thousands of prayers to God—a murderer!

Then he saw her and knew her. He saw her old eyes wide, staring, accusing, searching him through and through for the murder-blood. His lips moved, shaping soundlessly a single word, a word meant for her eyes alone—and which was caught by her eyes alone, because those in the courtroom had been too intent on watching the outcome of the trial to see the little woman at the window. The one word was—"Betty!"

Betty! So that was the reason he had refused to give his name! He would not have it said against Betty that her brother was hanged. If a murderer, then in one respect a noble murderer. It did not occur to this woman of sacrifices that he had also been trying to shield her from disgrace by calling himself John Doe.

Her mind in a chaotic state, Sarah Lee Oliver hastened up the winding pathway to the cabin on the hill and to the Sunset Window. The hazy autumn sun was going down in a bank of smoke from mountain fires; it was setting in a sea of death, cold, distant. Her eyes were dry. There were no more tears to shed. All was ended of her watching and praying and waiting; all was gone out into the great uselessness of earthly things. So this was the answer to her prayers! This was the reward of her beautiful faith! This was the wages of her eternal sacrifices!

Now more than ever before she felt that she had indeed made sacrifices, and that she had indeed had faith. It seemed so unkind of heaven. She wondered if God cared, watching the last rays of the dim sun's cold aurora as she wondered. Perhaps she was too little to come beneath His notice. There were so many, many people in the world; she was so small, so unimportant. And then the first rebellion of her life stirred within her. She turned her eyes again to the darkening west, and into the twilight's hush her quivering lips sent the words that, so long ago, had shaken the brow of Calvary's hill:

"Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani!"

The quiet that followed sank into her brain with a feeling of guilt, a feeling of shame. A belated brown sparrow flew to its nestingplace in a knothole in the log first above the Sunset Window—a sparrow.

Her lips moved again: " 'Not a sparrow falleth —' " and they continued to move: " 'Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death —' "

When night had come the little woman, seeming more bent, older, grayer, stole down through the darkness to the high fence that ran around the jail. She was going to see her son. She had not thought of the guard that paced on the outside of the fence. It was the sheriff himself, who would be on duty until midnight; and he recognized the familiar figure that crept along in the shadows.

"Sarah Lee!"

"Yes, it's Sarah Lee, George," she said lowly. She knew now that she would have need of a confidante, and decided to trust him with the secret. "George," she continued, "I must have a friend. I want you to swear that you won't betray us."

Wondering, Raines raised his hand and swore.

"George, for heaven's sake never tell it," Sarah Lee whispered tremulously. "The prisoner in there is my boy, who ran away from home thirteen years ago. I want to see him."

"Why, Sarah Lee Oliver!" There was genuine surprise and pain in the officer's words.

"Not so loud, George," cautioned the little widow, putting a hand on his arm. "Nobody must know it until we decide fully about it. You see, my son wouldn't tell his name, to save Betty from disgrace. I'm not ashamed to own my son, George, but I've got to see him first, and talk it over."

Sheriff Raines turned and unlocked the gate to the stockade, and Sarah Lee followed him through the dark night to the door of the strong, primitive prison. Another lock clicked, and they were inside the stuffy room.

"Newton!"

"Mother!" came from the pitchy gloom in a low cry of mingled joy and despair. He had known her voice, despite the years that had passed since he had seen her. "I'm so glad you came. Does anybody know of it except the sheriff?"

"Nobody," sobbed Sarah Lee, from her place on his broad breast. "George Raines was your father's friend, and he has sworn never to tell. But—but Newton, I cannot be ashamed to own you! Oh, I cannot! Newton Oliver, tell me the truth, before Almighty God—did you kill Morton Hendricks?"

He lifted her higher and kissed her in a manner that of itself was assurance of his innocence.

"Before Almighty God, I did not," he swore. "But there was no show for me. I could do nothing. The sentence cannot be undone now. I must be a martyr to justice, mother; and we must keep the secret for

Mr. Gannett Offers Prizes for Pictures of COMFORT Homes

My Dear Friends:

The descriptions of homes of our subscribers in their letters to our "Sisters' Corner" constitute one of the most interesting features of that department.

The Sisters say so, and so do others.

These glimpses of the homes and introductions to the family circle make them feel actually acquainted with each other as friends and almost as neighbors, besides gratifying a general desire to know how the manner of living is varied to meet conditions that differ so widely in different sections of our great country.

I want to supplement these word pictures by reproducing in COMFORT a series of photographs of homes of our subscribers in all the States.

Therefore, for satisfactory photographs of the most attractive homes of COMFORT subscribers I offer the following

List of Prizes

1st Prize - - - - - - -	$15.00	4th, 5th and 6th Prizes, Each	$3.00
2nd Prize - - - - - - -	$10.00	7th, 8th and 9th Prizes, Each	$2.00
3rd Prize - - - - - - -	$ 5.00	Next 5 Prizes, Each - - -	$1.00

CONDITIONS. The only requirements for entering this contest are that you must be a COMFORT subscriber and send me a photograph of the home you live in, with a brief description of yourself and other members of your family, and state your occupation, how long you have been a subscriber, and whether the home is owned or rented by you or by which member of your family. The photo and description must be mailed, postage prepaid, not later than the fifteenth day of June, when the contest will close and the prizes will be awarded and paid as soon as possible thereafter.

The photos may be of any size or in any style, even picture post cards will do, provided they are clear enough to make good pictures to print in COMFORT. It makes no difference how you got the picture,—whether taken by yourself or by a friend or by a paid photographer, it is all the same for this contest.

The prizes will be awarded and paid for the pictures of the fourteen most attractive homes according to my judgment of the photos. The largest and most pretentious houses may not win, for neatness and coziness with an air of thrift and comfort, and good sense, displayed in the buildings and their surroundings will be considered as important factors of attractiveness.

I will also pay one dollar each for any photos that I may wish to keep, other than the fourteen prize-winners. The others I will return if the owners so request and enclose postage for return.

Now this is an interesting prize contest, and to enter it costs you nothing, except a few cents for postage, if you have a picture of your home or a camera to take one with or can get a friend who has a camera to take the picture for you.

I hope that many more than the fourteen prize-winners will be such pictures as I shall wish to keep and pay for at one dollar each for my COMFORT home album.

REMEMBER: You must be a COMFORT subscriber to enter this contest but you don't have to be the owner of the home. Whichever member of the family, whether father, mother, husband, wife, son or daughter, is a COMFORT subscriber may send in the photo of the home and compete for the prizes.

Address Home Prize Contest, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine. Don't forget to enclose the written description, also the postage for return, if you care to have the picture returned in case it is not accepted for my album.

On a farm there are other things besides the buildings, such as domestic animals, farm machinery, or possibly an automobile that, if taken in the picture of the home, would make it more interesting, and if some of the family are included it will be no objection.

I hope your responses will be such as to enable me to make this an interesting feature of COMFORT.

Sincerely your friend,

W. H. GANNETT.

TOUGHEY

Childhood Adventures on a Texas Ranch

By Adele Steiner Burleson

Copyright, 1913, by Adele Steiner Burleson.
Serial right by W. H. Gannett, Pub., Inc.

SYNOPSIS OF WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE.

"Toughey" is a true story in which the author narrates the actual exploits and adventures of her three children and her own experiences during a summer, some dozen years ago, happily spent in rusticating on her ranch in a remote and somewhat wild part of Texas, far from their city home. This large domain, known as Steiner Valley, was inherited by Mrs. Burleson from her father, Dr. Steiner, who as surgeon in the U. S. army served with distinction through the war with Mexico which added Texas and an empire besides to the territory of the United States.

In mentioning herself and her husband (now Postmaster General, but then member of Congress) in the story she has modestly assumed the name of "Deering" which our readers are at liberty to change to Burleson.

The ranch, which is several miles in extent, is in part cultivated as a cotton plantation and the rest is used as a range for Mr. Burleson's great herd of Hereford cattle. The plantation is worked entirely by convict labor supplied by the state in return for a certain per cent of the crop, and besides the manager's house and the owner's summer cottage there is a cluster of buildings called "the camp" occupied by the convicts and guards.

All this is new and of somewhat startling interest to the children who are accustomed to city life.

According to the habit of the family, the two younger girls, with only a year's difference in their ages and being fast friends and playmates, are classed together under the generic designation of "the children." The eldest daughter, who, though only twelve years old, is several years their senior and bears herself toward them with a patronizing air of elderly dignity and wisdom that at times is somewhat galling to the little girls, is nicknamed "Toughey." This pet name had been conferred on her in babyhood by a college girl aunt in admiration of the child's coolness, grit and self-reliance manifest even at that tender age.

Len, the manager's son, is a bright boy and proves a faithful and efficient guide and assistant on excursions and outdoor sports.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE COON HUNT.

LONG before the appointed hour, the next night, Toughey and the children clad in overalls and their Washington snow boots which their mother insisted upon as a protection against prickly pear thorns and the green brier, were ready for the projected hunt.

"Tisn't ever going to be dark," declared the children, watching, with mutinous eyes, the lagging sunset and the slowly darkening skies.

THE COON DOGS.

But the darkness came at last and the start was made with old Isum, carrying a lighted lantern, in the lead, Mr. Deering, Len and the little girls following in an irregular group and the dogs ranging in the brush on either side of the road.

The old negro had contributed to the chase his own dog, a celebrated coon-hunter and known as Gramp. In his stiff yellow hair, uncouth proportions and morose temper one seemed to read his low origin. But his skill in trailing game and his perseverance in keeping it treed till such time as old Isum could appear on the scene with his gun and bring it down for his own and Gramp's dinner, pointed with equal clearness to some ancestor, along his obscure line, to whom he owed a heritage of good blood and cultivated instincts.

"Yo' aint gwinta git nuffin," remarked old Isum pessimistically. "'Tain't no time fur coons an' possuns."

"Oh, we'll get a few cats," said papa cheerfully.

"Cats!" exclaimed the children in astonished dismay.

"Skunks, honey," explained the old negro, "but dey ain't nuffin," he went on to say, "Dey des spoils de dogs."

"A dead skunk don't eat chickens," observed papa sententiously.

But Isum continued to grumble. He had lived in the woods for many years and was too good a sportsman to consider polecats true game. His complaints were interrupted by the savage barking of the dogs a short distance ahead. They were circling about some object, evidently unwilling to go close to it.

"I doan know what dat ken be," he murmured.

As he spoke, a high sharp rattle broke through the clamor of the dogs.

"By jinks!" exclaimed Len, "it's a rattler!"

"Stand back," commanded papa in a low tone, raising his rifle and taking careful aim.

The children cowered behind him and Toughey stepping to one side gazed with breathless interest at the coiled snake, focused in the light, tense and motionless save for the vibrant tail and thread like tongue. But its hour had come and in a moment more the dogs were veering away from its limp, shattered body, seeming to know by instinct that with their foe, though fallen, still dwelt the power of death.

Excited by the incident, the children discovered a rattlesnake in every katydid and fallen leaf, while even their elders were betrayed into occasional nervous starts.

Shortly afterwards old Tom gave tongue, and the party was again brought to a halt. After listening for a minute or two Isum walked on composedly.

"Dat dog done fool me all he's gwinta," he remarked.

"He seems to have struck a good trail," said Mr. Deering doubtfully, listening to the deep bell-tones of the hound.

"Lessen Jerry and Gramp takes up de trail," said the old negro, "yo sho gwinta git lef'."

"All right," said papa, giving in.

"We're depending on you Isum; I'm betting on your judgment."

The old negro chuckled.

"Yo ain't mek no misteke ef yo does," he said. "Yo and de chilluns 'll be traillin' all over dem mountains tell daybrek ef you 'pends on dat dog."

The matter being settled they moved on and presently old Tom, tiring of his cold trail, padded softly across the road and disappeared in the brush to take up the hunt again.

They now entered a short thick bottom, ending at its mouth where it joined the river, in a canyon of considerable proportions. Its big trees and thick undergrowth were supposed to afford cover for unnumbered coons, possums and skunks, and it was not long before Jerry's clear note was heard, causing old Isum to start forward in pursuit with some show of excitement.

"Not too fas';" he cautioned, "de trail mought run back, an' we don' wanta crowd de dogs."

But as the cries receded rapidly they pushed ahead with some speed and shortly found themselves on a narrow tongue of land with the river on one side and the canyon on the other. Here they waited hoping that the game would be treed where they could follow. But luck was against them, for Isum soon reported that the dogs were crossing the river.

"Hit's a coon," said the old negro, "dey sho am smat."

"It may recross the river," said papa, listening attentively to the cry of the dogs. But it did not, and Isum's long familiarity with the surrounding country presently enabled him to locate the dogs in an inaccesible canyon to which they had driven their quarry and where they were now awaiting the arrival of the huntsmen.

"Call them off and let's get away from the river," said Mr. Deering.

Isum sounded several loud blasts on his horn, and then several more, and then blew himself into a state of wrath and exhaustion in a vain effort to recover the dogs. They were too hot after their enemy to heed the command.

"Dey sho is hod to pull off," he said, exasperated by their obstinacy. Then added apologetically:

"But hit's better toe hav em stick, dan kerless like some dogs."

Mr. Deering agreed with him but it was decided that they should start back without the dogs.

The children were now discovered on a grassy spot, sound asleep. Their father laughed and shouldered one, while Len took the other.

"You see what happens when you take babies hunting," remarked Toughey severely.

"They shall go on their ponies next time," promised papa, to which the children gave sleepy acquiescence, while Toughey received it with an incredulous grunt.

They were overtaken by the dogs about half way home, but Mr. Deering's animated proposal that they go up the mountain and try their luck further was voted against by all save Toughey.

It was late when the party reached Pecan Hollow; later than they had expected it to be, as they realized when they turned over the limp little girls to a reproachful mamma, to whom no mention was made until the next day of the projected hunt on horseback.

Dreamless sleep prevailed throughout the little house that night.

* * * * * * * * * * *

A week later found the little party, mounted on horses, proceeding across the mountains to again try its luck in the field of sport. This time, by common consent, they avoided the thick river bottom with its entangling canyons, and headed for the open prairie.

The night was moonless and the stars were obscured by a light rack of clouds. Low on the southeastern horizon lay a storm cloud made visible now and then by a glare of lightning, like a smoldering fire fanned into fitful life by some passing breeze.

The children watched it with a creepy feeling, wondering what would happen if a storm should overtake them.

"It will go around us, I think," said papa in answer to their fearful questioning.

This was somewhat reassuring, but they regarded the slowly spreading cloud very much as Jack did the sleeping giant and they listened with strained anxiety to its low mutter of thunder, until old Tom, with blatant voice, awoke the echoes of the surrounding hollows and aroused their interest in the hunt.

This time, Jerry and Gramp were old Tom's confederates in leading them a wild chase over several miles of scrubby brush, until, brought up before an impossible line of wire fencing, they called off the dogs and made their way to a gate through which they now went into the hay pasture.

"That ran like a wolf," said Mr. Deering thoughtfully.

"It sho did," said Isum with some excitement. "I done sey dat dem goats o' yourn what yo sent up in de spring gwinta fotch many a coyote inta dese hollers."

This conversation was interrupted by an outburst from the dogs who had now, for the first time, encountered the long-looked for "cat" or skunk. Caught outside its hole on the open prairie, the slow moving animal had little chance for its life and was shown no quarter by the dogs. It was swiftly dispatched amidst wild cheering by the children.

Following almost immediately came Jerry's certain call. This time a mother cat with several young ones was brought to bay, and as they made their stand a little inside the remnant of an old fence, the hunting party, in order not to miss the fight, found it necessary to dismount and crawl through or under the loose strands of wire to the battle-field.

A skunk's only weapon is its scent glands, but it uses them with such powerful effect that dogs are frequently repulsed and dart away to give nose and jaws a vigorous rubbing on the grass.

In the dim light it was hard to tell one animal from the other and when a dark object separated itself from the struggling mass of creatures and rushed in the direction of the children they fled shrieking into the outer darkness. Finding themselves unattacked by the enemy, however, they returned, but soon discovered that the dogs were as objectionable as the cats.

Their efforts to keep out of the way of both friends and foes and at the same time encourage the dogs to do the skunks to death, led them into such extravagant capers, such frantic yelling, presenting a spectacle of such primitive savagery that Toughey, herself, hoarse from over much screaming, paused to watch them. She was uncertain whether to complain of them or sympathize with their strenuous enjoyment. She decided to speak to her father about it and when the last of the family of skunks had been shaken into a disfigured pelt, and the hunters again in the saddle, Toughey said:

"Papa, have you noticed the children?"

"Yes," he replied, "They appear to be having some fun."

"Don't you think, papa," she went on gravely, "that they're getting downright bloodthirsty?"

"Regular cannibals," he agreed cheerfully.

But when he heard Toughey's reproachful, "Oh, papa!" he became serious and explained that he was making war on the skunks in the interest of the quail and the Mongolian pheasants which he proposed to introduce on the Plantation that fall. His words relieved her scruples and she responded eagerly to the next cry of the dogs.

This time the hounds were out-generaled by their foe who took refuge in a large prickly-pear bush, from which strategic position it was easy to defy them. The cat knew well that she was safe from assault, for not since puppy days had any of these experienced old hunters attempted to storm a prickly-pear bush. Torture lay in the thousands of tiny needles with which nature had provided it.

So the dogs yelped for aid and old Isum settled the matter with a big stick.

As Isum had predicted, the dogs were now unfitted to follow a less pungent trail than that of the polecat, but of these they killed several in the course of the next hour or two.

While a fight was on, the children whistled and screamed themselves into a frenzy of delight, but during the quiet moments when the dogs were searching for prey, they drooped more and more until they were finally discovered by Toughey leaning forward on their ponies' necks, their little cheeks pressing the manes, dozing if not fast asleep. So the horn was sounded and the hunt was declared at an end. And it was well that it had ended, for the storm cloud was slowly spreading, the light clouds overhead were growing thicker and darker, and the increasing wind was becoming cold with the breath of unshed raindrops.

By riding rapidly, they reached home and the last pony was turned out, the last saddle hung on a nail under the protected corner of the gallery, and the sleepy children tucked into bed before the threatened flood descended. This time it brought no terrors to the little girls, for they neither heard nor saw it; by the next day it was done, leaving only a beautiful, fresh morning to tell the tale of its passage.

CONCLUDED NEXT MONTH.

FAIRBANKS, BOX 825, ALASKA.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:

I have just called for a few minutes' chat to gratify a longing I have had for many years, but like a good many other sisters I have been too timid but if I see this in print I may have courage to come again. I have been a COMFORT reader for the past five years and would miss its comfort very much should I be deprived of this dear paper, but hope I never shall be.

Now I am not cold, so do not draw my chair too close to the fire as it is only two or three degrees below zero and we Northerners think that pleasant weather.

I am not going to describe myself, but something more interesting. I wish to tell you some real facts about this far-away land of Alaska. It is not a land of ice and snow the year round as so many people are inclined to believe, we have long, dark, cold winters, it is true, the thermometer registering sixty degrees below zero for two or three days at a time and several times through a winter, but we have warm log cabins and frame houses with plenty of wood so we keep warm and comfortable. The days are short, the sun shines only two hours and forty-five minutes on the shortest day and often we do not see it at all if it happens to be a cold, foggy day, but we have electric lights so do not mind the darkness so much as you would think. The heavy frosts set in about the middle of September or first of October and we do not plant much outdoors before the middle or latter part of May. Do I hear the sisters saying, "My, what a short season!" Well I am not at all surprised to hear it, but wait a moment, and I will tell you why such things as potatoes, carrots, parsnips, beets and turnips can mature in so short a time; it is because we have sunshine night and day. On the 21st of June the sun just seems to set and rise again. We have a baseball game at midnight on that day so you see it is truly the land of the "Midnight Sun." Last summer we had so much rain that the gardens were not the success we hoped they would be, but this winter has been very warm; the coldest weather so far being twenty-five degrees below zero and that was only for a short time.

I realize Alaska has been given a great deal of publicity since the Alaska Railroad Bill passed and I fear it will be the means of tempting some poor man to leave his family with very little means and rush here before there is work enough to do to supply the hundreds of men that will flock here in the spring, so I want to sound a warning note to the COMFORT sisters; tell your husband not to be too hasty, but watch, for I know there will be some good advantages here in the near future for the right men, but it is like most countries, it takes men and women of strong will and muscle and active brain to make a success.

I have lived in the West all my life; Utah being my home state and was born in Salt Lake City. I would like to hear from some of the sisters there. I also lived in Alberta, Canada, for seven years and I have been in Alaska five years.

I have three children, Mary, aged nine, Frank, seven and Stella five years old, so you see two are in school; our schools could be better but they are very good at that; still we hope to better them as years go on.

My lack of education has been one long regret but I study with my children so will not give up and say "lost" for we are never too old to learn.

With best wishes to all of COMFORT's staff and sisters,

From your loving sister, MRS. ROY SHAFER.

Mrs. Shafer. There seems to be a sort of magic connected with the lands of the far North which makes letters from there doubly interesting and I feel sure you will receive a hearty welcome in our corner. I admire the spirit manifested in your desire for an education and most assuredly it is not too late. Your children will make more progress in their schoolwork if you keep abreast of them and are ready to help them. Good books are the best teachers and you will find that time spent in reading is not lost.—Ed.

MATTITUCK, L. I., N. Y.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:

This is the first time I have ever written for this column, although I have been reading and loving COMFORT for a number of years, and have sold quite a number of Uncle Charlie's Poem books for him, and through that work I became personally acquainted with him. And let me tell you right here that he thoroughly appreciates any effort you make for him and he certainly has proven it to me. I have never sent a name in for a book that he did not write me a nice long letter and his letters are fine and sound exactly like him. I know, you see, for I have visited him twice and my daughter has visited a week with him and Maria. I visited him the second week in January, and stayed a day and a night, and only regretted that I could not stay longer; as I enjoyed every moment I spent there.

His rooms show good taste and everything harmonizes. Everything at present is a warm red color. His pictures show the artist's taste. He has a piano and a Victrola and when I was there he had two canaries belonging to Eva Tanguay banging in his room, and they sang beautifully, but, what sounded best to me was Uncle Charlie's rich bass voice, singing every now and then a line or two of some of his favorite songs. He has a magnificent voice, and lovely, dreamy brown eyes, but I had better have a care how I tell you of any more of his charms or you will all be falling in love with him and I can assure you he is well cared for by Maria.

I think you will all agree with me when I say Uncle Charlie is a man with a big heart, full of sympathy and charity. He's full of fun too and can keep you laughing all day. I wonder how many of us could be as patient and jolly under like circumstances.

I have often heard it said of one after they had departed from this life, "None knew him but to love him, nor named him but to praise." I think it better to say kind things about our friends while they are here, don't you? I feel sure if you knew Uncle Charlie, you would feel as I do about him and the lines above seem fitting to him.

I cannot speak too highly of Maria. Twice she has visited me and my family, which consist of my husband and two daughters, we all love her, she is one of those people who wear well.

At present "Billy the Goat" is a pretty little German girl, and I think her all to the good.

My oldest daughter is eighteen years old, and has been a bookkeeper in a store for more than a year. I think every girl should know how to support herself, as it might become necessary. The younger daughter is thirteen years old; she was born on the day McKinley was shot, Sept. 6, 1901.

Wishing the sisters and all interested in COMFORT, the best of luck, Sincerely, MRS. GRACE E. DURYEE.

Mrs. Duryee. Perhaps your letter will convince many a Doubting Thomas that Uncle Charlie is not the mythical person they imagine him to be but all that your letter has pictured him—a patient, noble man, endeavoring to make the world a better place by his presence in it; I think he is succeeding. I agree with you that we should not save our kind words till too late and in that connection am printing the following poem which appeals to me strongly. I know Uncle Charlie appreciates the kind words and thoughts from the readers, and most assuredly he is grateful for the substantial aid you have rendered him through the sale of so many of his books.—Ed.

If I Should Die Tonight

"If I should die tonight,
My friends would look upon my quiet face
Before they laid it in its resting place,
And deem that death had left it almost fair;
And laying snow-white flowers against my hair,
Would smooth it down with tearful tenderness,
And fold my hands with lingering caress.
Poor hands, so empty and so cold tonight!

"If I should die tonight,
My friends would call to mind with loving thought,
Some kindly deeds the icy hands had wrought
Some gentle word the frozen lips had said;
Errands on which the willing feet had sped;
The memory of my selfishness and pride,
My hasty words would all be put aside,
And so I should be loved and mourned tonight.

"If I should die tonight
E'en hearts estranged would turn once more to me,
Recalling other days remorsefully.
The eyes that chill me with averted glance
Would look upon me as of yore, perchance
And soften in the old familiar way.
For who could war with dumb unconscious clay?
So I might rest forgiven of all tonight.

"Oh, friends, I pray tonight,
Keep not your kisses for my dead cold brow
The way is lonely, let me feel them now.
Think gently of me; I am travelworn;
My faltering feet are pierced with many a thorn.
Forgive, oh, hearts estranged, forgive, I plead!
When dreamless rest is mine I shall not need
The tenderness for which I long tonight."

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

Will you please allow me a place in your cozy corner? I have been a member of the C. L. O. C. for quite a while but desire to make the acquaintance of the many sisters.

I have been a reader and admirer of our grand paper, COMFORT, since I was quite small and a subscriber for some time.

COMFORT has my favorite motto, "Onward and Upward." There is something inspiring in those words; if we only stop to analyze them. What a mirror is our corner; reflecting different characters and homes.

The letters are very interesting; some are pathetic, some inspire to nobler aims and purposes through lessons of self-sacrifice; and others cause a desire to know the writer personally; that we might count them a link in the great chain of friendship. So many of the sisters' letters portray such a true Christian spirit.

Not long ago I was waiting for my train in the station of one of our large cities in this state. Presently a woman entered the waiting-room with three small children, the two youngest mere babies. She

What a Million Mothers Avoid

More than a million careful mothers have intuitively known the dangers of poisonous fly destroyers. They have known that such preparations contain arsenic in deadly quantities. They have realized the peril to little children that accompanies the use of fly poisons.

But for those who have not learned of these dangers, we quote from a recent issue of the Child Betterment Magazine, which comments upon 35 cases of children being poisoned last year:

"The danger to children is great, and the danger to adults is by no means inconsiderable."

In the December issue of the Michigan State Medical Journal, an editorial on the same subject cites 47 cases and goes on to state:

"Arsenical fly poisons are as dangerous as the 'phosphorus match. They should be abolished. There are as efficient and more sanitary ways of catching or killing flies. And fly poisons, if used at all, should not be used in homes where there are children, or where children visit."

Comfort Sisters' Corner

was escorted by a man who found a seat for her near enough to us that the conversation was easily understood. He disappeared and quickly returned and told her he had found a suitable hotel and invited her to accompany him. She wisely refused.

We learned afterward that he was a total stranger to her.

Not possessing an air of culture and refinement, either in manners or dress, she was shunned as an ogre or passed by unnoticed, except by some who forgot themselves so much as to stare continually. She approached our party and conversed with us telling us her story. Soon she passed on, still the victim of those chilly stares mingled with haughty looks. We felt that guardian angels were still on duty though.

Our train was called and as the scene came before us again in memory, we felt that the world still contained more Levites than good Samaritans.

There was no humiliation on the part of the Good Samaritan as he ministered to the needs of the wounded man for he possessed charity or perfect love.

It takes much grace to be Christlike; but our great Teacher said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

I am the youngest of the family and the only one at home. I live with my parents on the farm. We are located in the central part of the state. I have never lived in the city; but prefer the country life always. The city has its advantages but with the many modern conveniences country life is not so remote as formerly. Many of our country people are as cultured and refined as those you meet in the city. Of course we cannot do without the cities; neither can they discard us and prosper. But after all the sentiments expressed in the beautiful poem, written by John Howward Payne, while exiled, "There is no place like Home," applies to all.

Someone has said, "A Contented mind is a perpetual feast," then how richly endowed we are if we possess it together with the faculty of finding, "tongues in trees, books in the running brooks, sermons in stones," and God everywhere.

I will send one of my poems which I hope will encourage some dear sister in the performance of the many every-day tasks.

Just Persevere

"When the taskes that lie before you,
Seem as numerous as the stars,
And success seems just as possible
As a journey up to Mars;
'Tis no time now for despairing,
Just begin; and persevere.
You will be surprised how quickly
That each task will disappear.

"Takes a grim determination,
An unfaltering courage too.
To reach the heights of mountains,
That extend into the blue.
But if you keep climbing upward
With a guide to lead you on,
You will surely reach the summit
When the victory is won."

I hope I haven't tired dear Mrs. Wilkinson and you sisters with the length of my first call.

I will be pleased to hear from any of the sisters.

With best wishes to all, MISS NELLIE F. STOVALL.

Miss Stovall. The tone of your letter indicates that you have acquired the art of looking beyond the trivial every-day tasks to the final completion and that is half the battle. We are all willing to do the big things but it requires courage to do the little things well, without complaining.—Ed.

STONEBORO, R. R. 1, S. C.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

I saw so many interesting letters last month that I decided to try again.

I want to talk to the girls on character building."

I speak to girls because I'm a girl myself and know the heart of a girl.

First, let us study for a while and see if we can't get a clearer conception of what it really is to be a girl or woman in the truest sense of the word. Let us take for our motto the old philosopher's maxim, "Know thyself," by looking into our own lives for a moment and seeing just what there is in there.

I think when we are old enough to realize that we are existing and for a purpose, right then we should begin to study our nature, to detect our faults and shortcomings, and try hard to overcome them. Then we should try to develop the good qualities, those womanly virtues which God intended for woman to possess, for to be sure there is something good in everybody. We were all designed for a purpose, each has her sphere to fill in this world. Don't be discouraged because you can't climb high in the world and have honors heaped upon you. God has given you a talent; it may be one of those virtues—say kindness, a sweet, lovable disposition. That may seem as nothing to you, but did you know that is one of the greatest, if not the greatest, gift God could bestow upon woman—to be always cheerful and calm, never fretting and worrying over trifles, but carrying all to God in prayer. There is no limit to such a woman's influence. Girls, to those of you who are high tempered, easily vexed and, perhaps, to some extent quarrelsome, try to begin early in life by asking your Heavenly Father to help you to overcome these or any other fault in your nature.

We have it in our power to shape our own lives and by our example, influence the lives of others. Girls, what are we going to do?"

Are we going to make a generation of giddy, narrow-minded women who think of nothing else but dress and amusements? No, no; let us determine to be something—to make of ourselves noble, broad-minded women who will be a blessing to the world. Now is the time we are forming our characters. Every day we are growing better or worse, either by trying to overcome some faults and so make our lives purer and sweeter, or by willfully developing some spark of evil in our nature.

Have some aim in life, then shape everything to that end. Let everything you say and do be a step nearer the goal to which you climb. It is good for us to have in mind some ideal person, and who does not admire that lofty Christian character, that sweet Christ-like spirit in a woman? Then shape your lives by that character. Be very thoughtful, always thinking before you speak and act. Often we say some very unkind things, thoughtlessly of course, and by so doing cast a shadow on many a happy heart.

Always cultivate a pleasant expression. Speak kindly, a censorious tongue is a perpetual scourge, but kind words heal wounds. Goodness is greater than smartness.

In your work for God you will often blunder. Don't worry too much over your blunders, but learn from them. Be cheerful. Solemnity is no sign of Godliness. The owl is no better than the robin.

Don't try to please everyone. It is hard for sixty to sympathize with sixteen, and you will have some critics. Be yourself—natural, modest, kind, earnest, Godly. Some will dub you slow, some declare you fast; but you have only one Master, please Him. Try to forget yourself and remember others. Be not anxious to know many people, but to help those you do know. Try not so much to extend your influence as to strengthen it.

Shun questionable company. Remember, wealth is no surety for character. Gilded sin is not holiness, and the world knows it. Keep good company or none. Be sincere. Do not say all you mean, but mean all you say. Perfection may be impossible to humanity, but we can at least be true. Let dress and speech song and prayer, clasp of hand and glance of eye, be all expressions of your sincere desire to please your God and serve your brother.

Best wishes to all, CLARA BAKER.

Clara Baker. The following poem, which was sent in by a sister, brings out a point you mentioned—that of forgetting our blunders, remembering them only long enough to prevent a repetition of the same mistake. It has cheered and encouraged me and I am glad to pass it along for the benefit of others.

Today

"With every rising of the sun
Think of your life as just begun.
The past has canceled and buried deep
All yesterdays. There let them sleep.

"Concern yourself with but today,
Grasp it, and teach it to obey
Your will and plan. Since time began
Today has been the friend of man.

"You and today! A soul sublime
And the great heritage of time.
With God Himself to bind the twain,
Go forth, brave heart! Attain! Attain!"

Sir Thomas Lipton Assists American Red Cross Work

His Steam Yacht to Take American Doctors, Nurses and Hospital Supplies to Serbia

Copyright, 1915, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher, Inc.

SIR THOMAS LIPTON, known the world over as the proprietor of Lipton's teas and popular in the United States as the genial contestant for the America's cup, has placed himself and his elegant, great steam yacht, the Erin, at the service of the American and British Red Cross Societies for their relief work in stricken Serbia.

He has recently fitted out the Erin for this purpose and at the present writing she is about to sail on her mission of mercy. Sir Thomas will accompany the expedition to see that nothing is lacking so far as lies in his power to contribute to its success.

Our readers remember that the present European conflict started with Austria's declaration of war against Serbia and immediate attack on that unfortunate little country whose present plight through the devastation of war and the attendant ravages of famine and disease resulting from invasion by the Austrian armies is as bad if not worse than that of Belgium.

In a recent interview Sir Thomas Lipton said: "One can scarcely imagine the terrible ravages of typhus in Serbia. It is far worse than typhoid fever and even worse than the black plague.

"There I am sailing shortly on the Erin, taking with me 20 doctors and 60 tons of medicines and hospital comforts. I have already placed my yacht at the disposition of the American Red Cross and British Red Cross societies and am under their orders.

"It is my earnest desire that I may have the pleasure and honor of taking American doctors and nurses to Serbia. There is a crying need for hospital work to be done."

Wonderful Career of a Self-Made Man

Sir Thomas Lipton is an interesting character and has had a remarkable career. Though a British subject by birth and loyal to his country he seems very American in the democratic simplicity and delightful cordiality of his manners and to a degree also in his habit of thought and his business methods. This may be due in part to the influence of his early experiences and associations in our country.

He was born poor but with an ambition and will to be somebody, which impelled him as a boy to seek his fortune in the great Western land of opportunity.

He is a native of Glasgow, Scotland, his parents having come there from the north of Ireland. His schooling was curtailed by the necessity to work, as may be judged from the fact that at the age of fifteen he had saved from his own earnings enough to pay his passage to New York where he landed fifty years ago, just after the close of our Civil War. For years he worked hard, first in the rice fields of South Carolina and later in New York and other Northern cities until from his small wages he had saved five hundred dollars besides sending home money each month to help his parents in Scotland.

From boyhood it had been his fixed determination to acquire wealth and great wealth, not as an end nor for the miserly satisfaction of being rich but as a means of accomplishing great things and doing good in the world.

Brains, hard work and capital faithfully employed are the three essentials requisite to the honest acquisition of riches.

He had labored hard and faithfully for others until he had saved five hundred dollars with which to start in business for himself. With this small nest egg, which was destined to grow into one of the greatest fortunes in England, he returned to Glasgow and opened a small retail provision store, paying cash for his stock and at first doing all the work himself without assistance of clerk or bookkeeper. Brains, industry and honesty constituted the big end of his business equipment and told heavily in his favor. His business grew rapidly until he had one of the largest stores in Glasgow; then he began establishing stores in other places and in a short time had them in the principal cities of the British Isles.

He had become rich, at the same time earning a reputation for honesty and square dealing with the public that was his best asset.

The Lipton Idea

Thus far he had been only a dealer retailing the goods that others produced. But realizing how much the middlemen's expenses and profits added to the price the consumer had to pay, he decided to become a producer of some of the goods that he was selling and to share with his customers the benefit of the saving made by thus cutting out the middlemen.

Jams and canned fruits, because of the way they were put up and handled in England, were luxuries for the rich. So he went into the canning business and by doing it on a large scale and by more economical methods of handling he brought down the prices of his products to where they were within the means of ordinary people. He even raised a considerable portion of the fruits and berries, that he put up, on large farms which were purchased and operated for that purpose.

The British are great tea drinkers and the consumption of tea in Britain and her colonies is enormous. The tea business offered an immense field for the application of the Lipton principle of direct dealing between producer and consumer and Sir Thomas was not slow to recognize and seize the opportunity.

Begins Raising Tea

He visited all the tea-producing countries, and after careful study of the best methods of cultivation, harvesting and preparation of the different varieties of tea he bought extensive tracts of land in India and Ceylon and went into tea raising on a scale never before attempted by any single concern. When he had this established he was offered ten million dollars for his tea plantations. But he refused to sell, saying that his tea business was still in its infancy. And so it was, for it soon outgrew the requirements of the four hundred and twenty Lipton stores in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales, and he put his product on the general market with the result that Lipton tea is known the world over.

He has become a large producer of other food products which he retails in the Lipton stores. He has coffee and cocoa plantations in Ceylon, and he bought out a Chicago meat packing establishment that handled three thousand hogs a day.

Sir Thomas Lipton is now one of the richest men in England, and in marked contrast with some of our multi-millionaires, he has made his money honestly, for he has neither robbed the rich nor squeezed it out of the poor. He has no monopoly in any line of business but sells in fair and free competition with thousands of other dealers. Instead of forming a trust or cornering the markets to raise prices, his aim has been, by doing business on an enormous scale, by producing many of the products which he retails, by economical management, better business methods and the cutting out of middlemen's profits and expenses, to reduce food prices to the millions of customers who consume his goods. And thus the people, and especially the poor, have benefited by the business methods which have enriched him.

What He Does with His Money

How does he use his wealth? Just as you would expect such a broad-minded man to do,—a man who knows what it is to be poor. He gives liberally to every worthy charity, and he has given as high as half a million dollars in a single donation.

He is also a patron of clean sport. His special delight is yachting and three times he has crossed the Atlantic with a new yacht to race for the famous America's cup. In each race luck was against him, but he accepted defeat so gracefully that he won something better than the prize cup—the respect, admiration and good will of the American people.

Last summer he built a fourth yacht and was about to come over and race our yachtsmen again for the great international trophy when the war broke out and the race was called off.

The "Sir" before his name means that the King has made him a baronet in recognition of the good he has done, and it is believed that he is in a fair way to be promoted to the peerage.

England is proud of him, and America may justly share in that pride, for it was in the United States that he got his business training and accumulated the little capital on which he began business at home.

He says "My experience in America sharpened me and I always felt that I got a good commercial training there."

His advice is "Work hard, deal honestly, use careful judgment, do unto others as you would be done by, advertise freely and judiciously, and success is bound to follow."

That he is just to his help may be inferred from the fact that although he employs thousands of laborers in many parts of the world he has never had a strike and believes he never will have one. "I make it my business," he says, "to look after the interests of my men and we live in peace and harmony."

584 49th St., MILWAUKEE, WIS.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND COMFORT SISTERS:

Ever since I have taken COMFORT, about three years, I had planned writing and answering some of the interesting letters which are published in the sisters' column. I don't know whether I can give any help in general in this open letter, but should any of the sisters care for any information will be glad to answer all letters.

First, will tell you about myself and surroundings. I am twenty-six years old and have lived in Milwaukee all my life, with the exception of the summers, which we spend at our summer home on Okanchee Lake, thirty-five miles from Milwaukee, a most beautiful place. Many of you may not know that Wisconsin is the state of lakes. Millionaries from all over the United States come to these lakes. It is lovely to spend the hot days where there is always a cool breeze, and I often wish the poor people could enjoy it with me. I am never really happy, for I always think of the poor, the old, and needy.

To those mothers who have boys and girls and have a chance to go to some summer resort, please don't let them go unless properly chaperoned, I see, yes, hundreds of girls being misled during one summer. I wish I could have a heart-to-heart talk with every girl, and boy, too, for the boys are not always to blame.

Milwaukee is the "Beer City." We have over ten large breweries; the Schlitz Brewery being second largest of the world. You all know that "Schlitz" made Milwaukee famous. Milwaukee is not so bad after all, not any worse than any other city. Drink is a bad habit and I advise every girl to keep away from a man that drinks. It will lead to unhappiness if she ever marries a man of that kind, although a woman sometimes can do wonders.

Milwaukee is a nice place to live, it has the finest and cleanest parks and schools. I don't say this because it is my home town, but because I have traveled South and all through the East and have seen for myself. I like the city, but if I tell you that we have a fine garden at our summer home, raising over fifty bushels of potatoes and one hundred and fifty bushels of corn and every vegetable of its kind that grows in Wisconsin for our own use, you will come to the conclusion that we come pretty near being called farmers, although we have every convenience that summer resorters have; a large, beautiful home, two launches, eight row boats and an automobile and a few swimming suits. So if any of you ever chance to come this way, you can spend a fine day with us.

I am a lover of flowers and I plant everything in the flower line, from the daintiest blossom to the sunflower. I will give any information that any lady wants to know, as nothing has ever failed me, whatever it was that I put into the ground.

I have a sweet baby girl, Doris, one year old. She has never been sick, and weighs over twenty pounds. She never cries, and talks quite a lot. I think it is because I talk to her all I can, but not the "baby language." I try to rear her just right and teach her now what is right and wrong in the things she does. I love babies and I always look forward to a sister's letter stating interesting things of help about children. I do not believe in a lot of scolding, but gentle words bring obedience quicker than all else.

Now a word in regard to the "old folks." Always be gentle and kind to them, remember you will some day attain that state. Even if they are fretty try and do your best and do something to please them. I had a dear good grandma who died just a year ago. She was ninety-four years old and blind, but she was always happy. We made her so. We always sang and played for her and talked to her of things she liked.

I am afraid this letter is almost too long and some of you will say there are "no helps."

I have never seen a letter in this column from Milwaukee, although I know there are a lot of people here who take COMFORT.

We live in a pretty bungalow only two short blocks from Washington Park and Zoo. I take baby out in the park every day when the weather permits.

Will be glad to answer all letters sent to me.

My best wishes to Mrs. Wilkinson and all COMFORT readers. MRS. M. C. BALDWIN.

BEULAH, WYO.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS AND EDITOR:

I have thought of writing to you so many times, but always found a letter that handled the subject I had in mind so much better than I could that I gave it up, but there is so much in common among us country mothers that I feel someone might like to hear from one away out in Wyoming.

We are living near the Black Hills and the climate is very mild; the hardier fruits do well, and although the winters are quite severe at times, most years we have very little snow and the chenook wind blows often enough to remind us of summer. The altitude is about four thousand feet here but it ranges from three thousand feet in the southeastern part to very high in the western part of the state. We are thirty-five miles from Deadwood and from the Homestead mine, the biggest gold mine, you know.

The scenery is very fine, and although we came from the mountains of Colorado we think these hills are more beautiful, they are so rugged. The tops of most of those near us are low and flat and are farmed, while the valleys are very narrow and seem to have been formed by the earth cracking, leaving a little flat surrounded by sheer walls of rock which are called rim-rocks.

We have a three hundred and twenty acre homestead and are very proud of it; we live in the valley where we have about twenty acres. The rim-rock is out in front, but at the back is a gradual slope and the timber runs down to the house. We have named our ranch "Robin's Nest." Do you think it pretty?

Mrs. McRee, please shake hands. I can imagine you among your roses, working and loving them. I, too, am getting a few started and, like you, always love to give them to others. I also have large quantities of annuals. Asters are my favorites as are sweet peas and four o'clocks. Several years ago I bought a package of Japanese morning glories as the blossoms looked so pretty in the catalogue, never dreaming that they were perennial, but although they have never bloomed since the first years they are large vines now and everyone who sees them thinks they are grapes. Chinese pinks gave me much satisfaction last summer, continuing to bloom after the ground was slightly frozen, and such a variety! Zinnias and poppies are easy to grow and are not to be slighted. I like the Shirley poppies best and had lovely ones last year, but of course there is no odor. But one should get a few perennials started as soon as possible. I have, besides what has been already mentioned, iris, forgetmenots, columbines, peonies and lilacs, although these last haven't bloomed yet; but of course I am not satisfied yet and am counting on beds of pansies and lilies next.

Now before I leave the subject of flowers, will someone please tell me why my rose buds mildewed? The earlier ones were fine but the last ones seemed to rot. There was a heavy rainstorm then, would that cause it?

I hope you all agree with Mrs. McRee and me that we are nearer the Creator in our flower gardens than anywhere else.

I would like to help some of the young mothers if I could, in the care of the babies, for I remember how hard it was for me to know what to do; so I tried everything anyone told me to do and some others. I was eighteen when my first boy was born and had never had any care of a baby. Some old ladies told me to give him a taste of everything I ate and nothing would hurt him. I did, and nursed him every time he cried; then he would "swallow wind" and I would give him peppermint; that would make him constipated and I would give him Castoria.

Don't you pity that poor infant? He doesn't look like an infant now though, as he is within an inch of six feet at sixteen, but is very dainty about his eating and is the only one of our children who ever has "little spells with his stomach."

We have five others as tough as pine knots and this is the way they were handled:

I got them to nursing regularly at three hour intervals by the time they were two weeks old, with water frequently and they never had any solid food until they were nearly a year old. Colic was very rare with them and a hot cloth over the abdomen is much better than giving medicine.

If you nurse a baby you can regulate its bowels to a certain extent by eating laxative foods but if you must give it something, Castor oil is healing and is the only thing I ever used with success for summer complaint. It gets at the cause of the trouble and heals the membranes.

Remember that a baby's stomach is very small and do not overload it. Food, good food, is more important to a baby than any other thing and if you must economize on something, don't stint his stomach to buy fancy clothing. Give the children three good meals a day and do not allow them to "piece" between meals; the stomach needs to rest.

When they start to school see that their lunch pails are well supplied with nourishing food, put up appetizingly. I believe that if a child's natural craving for substantial food is satisfied, he will not form a taste for liquors or tobacco. Encourage a taste for sweets for the same reason, though of course they can eat enough sweets to hurt them.

I have been much interested in the discussion: To whip or not to whip, and think that we can go to extremes one way as well as the other. Letting a child always have its own way will breed contempt for a mother who is so easy and is not kind to the child because he must learn that others have rights and often

"I know what father likes best"

EVEN the children know that Arbuckles' Coffee gets the biggest welcome at the breakfast table.

It is the popular favorite everywhere. More of it is used than any other packaged coffee.

Think what this means.

In America we drink more coffee than does any other nation. Last year 900,000,000 lbs. of coffee were brought here. Think of all the different kinds of coffee —the different varieties of flavor this represents.

For their favorite coffee, the people of this country have chosen Arbuckles.' For nearly fifty years they have shown their preference for this coffee. In one state last year four times as many pounds of Arbuckles' were used during the year as there were men, women and children in the state. And the demand is continually increasing.

Now packaged ground as well as whole bean

So that every woman can have her favorite coffee in the form she prefers, Arbuckles' is packed already ground (in a triple wrapped moisture-proof package) as well as in the whole bean.

Have you tried it lately?

Before you serve another breakfast, go to your grocer's and get a package of Arbuckles' Coffee. Notice its aroma. Taste its rich, satisfying flavor and know why more of it is used than any other packaged coffee.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING EVENTS.

Alice and May Weston receive an invitation to a farewell reception, given to William Curtis Marchmont, the adopted son of Roland Fletcher, who is engaged to Alice, and is to enter Yale College. Alice is to study law with Judge Ashburton, whose daughter was the wife of Roland Fletcher. Her health failing their daughter Olive is sent, when a baby, to her grandfather, Judge Ashburton, living then in Philadelphia. Imogen Ingraham's mother, Mrs. Farquahar, marries Judge Ashburton. She dies, and Imogene, as the widow of Robert Ingraham and homeless, is invited by Judge Ashburton to accept a home with him and care for Olive. She conceals the birth of her child.

Roland Fletcher, assisted by Olive and Imogen on his left, Judge Ashburton and Will on his right receive their guests. Imogen and Olive, jealous of the attentions given to Alice, ignore her half-extended hand. Mr. Fletcher mortified and displeased receives her most cordially and welcomes her to Castleview. Later he leads her in a quadrille, after which they go into a long corridor. Stopping before a painting Alice learns it is the portrait of Mr. Fletcher's wife. He wishes nothing better for her, than she may be as happy with his boy, as he was with his wife. Will joins them and Olive passes without a word of greeting. Mr. Fletcher follows Olive and requests that she be more courteous to her guests. Will goes to Yale. Judge Ashburton opens his office in town with Alice as his clerk. May is busy. Olive and Imogen out driving, Olive proposes they call for her grandfather. Imogen orders Buxton to drive to the office. Olive takes the lines, Judge Ashburton insists that Alice, who is suffering from a headache, shall ride home. A newspaper caught in the wind, frightens one of the horses and both spring forward. Olive drops the lines and Alice, with rare presence of mind secures them and controls the horses. Judge Ashburton and the driver take Alice home. He reprimands Imogen and Olive for their indifference and failure to thank Alice and realizes a phase in Imogen's character, hitherto concealed.

Will's last vacation comes. Judge Ashburton arranges a little excursion which includes Alice and May Weston. Arriving at their destination, they meet Arthur Stamford, in love with Alice Weston, his father Sir Arthur Stamford, Mr. Tom Radcliffe and his sister, Miss Grace. Tom Radcliffe proposes a visit to the caves. Alice Weston and Grace Radcliffe become separated from the party. Alice stopping to tie her shoe Grace goes on. Alice's candle goes out. She feels a grip on her arm and a gruff voice inquires if she knows a woman by the name of Ingraham who lives at Castleview and requests her to send a letter, which he thrusts into her hands. Arthur Stamford returns to find Alice and asks her to be his wife. She admits her love for and engagement to another. In the meanwhile Sir Arthur evinces unusual interest in Will Marchmont and learns to his astonishment that his middle name is Curtis. His mother, Mabel Randal Curtis, was Sir Arthur's second wife, whose first husband was the second son of Lady Marchmont—the Marquise of Leith. A visit to Lady Marchmont confirms Will's parentage and his right to Marchmont Court. He visits Alice, assuring her that nothing can part them and in one year she will be his wife, the future Marquise of Leith. Lady Marchmont exacts much from the future Marquise of Leith, and at her grandson's suggestion she writes a note to Alice, inviting her to come to Leith for a week preceding a reception she is to give in honor of Will and before his departure for Yale College. In the meanwhile Olive is invited to visit at Marchmont Court. She resolves to win Will at any cost, and to his astonishment and regret admits her love for him. Imogen, receiving the letter, given to Alice, by the mysterious stranger, determines to accomplish the union of Will and Olive, and plots to place Alice in a false position before her hostess. Nellie, Mrs. Marchmont's maid, discovers the loss of sixty pounds. Alice, in packing her trunk notices an unusual disorder. Lifting some clothing she finds the missing money and valuable jewelry. Speaking to May, she requests her to call Lady Marchmont and Will, and admits to them where and how she finds it. Lady Marchmont looks amazed. Her attention is drawn to a piece of braid, convincing her that Alice is innocent. Taking the money and jewels to her chamber she discovers strands of silk caught in her jewel box and picks up a tiny bangle. Left alone with Imogen, Mrs. Marchmont produces evidence of her guilt and her determination to ruin Alice. The guests return home, Alice and May riding in the Marchmont carriage. As it turns toward Beechcote a shabby-looking man recognizes a piece of luggage and believes that one of the two girls is the missing baby. Will returns to Yale and Alice to her work. A prize is offered by a woman of New York, prominent in society who claims that sex makes no difference in mental capacity and solicits applications from both sexes to take part in a law debate. Judge Ashburton, anxious for Alice to compete, invites her and her sister to accompany him to New York. A few days is spent in studying up the questions involved and they sail for New York. Alice is chosen as one of the contestants and wins the thousand dollar prize. Judge Ashburton is called home by a cablegram from Mr. Fletcher, who has important documents stolen from his safe. He reports the loss to the proper officials. Failing to find them Mr. Fletcher is arrested upon the charge of treason. Imogen visits Roland Fletcher in the jail. If she can give him back his freedom, restore his good name and the respect of his followmen will he make her his wife. Declaring it impossible to call another woman wife Imogen realizes she has lost all and refuses to help Mr. Fletcher. The court opens; the third day Judge Ashburton is taken violently ill; he insists that Alice shall continue the case. Thoroughly posted on every point she takes up the argument of her opponent and reduces it to insignificance. Will arrives and conducts Alice to Castleview. The next morning Alice detects a man climbing over the railing of Imogen's window, preparing to let himself to the ground. Meeting the butler, she gets the gardener and they secure the man, binding his arms behind him. Alice searches his pockets and secures the stolen papers unopened. Driving to the courthouse with their prisoner and delivering him to an officer, Alice hurries inside where the judge is addressing the jury. Failing to attract the judge's attention, he proceeds with the case and the jury not finding evidence recommends that Mr. Fletcher be discharged. Alice produces the missing papers. The judge demands an explanation and Mr. Fletcher goes out a free man.

To make the story clear we go back to the night the papers were stolen. Imogen, left alone, wonders if she fastened a window in the library. Returning she recognizes the detective who has hounded her life, crouching before Roland Fletcher's safe. He admits the combination is easy and that he has taken all the money from the safe. He warns her not to make an outcry and reminds her that he knows where the missing child is, also that he can secure the perforated extension top case. He leaves her stricken dumb. The night of Judge Ashburton's sudden illness Imogen, exhausted and nervous lies down. She is awakened by an unusual sound. Going to the window and pushing the drapery aside she sees the face of Reardon, the detective. He demands admittance. If she gives one thousand pounds he will produce the stolen papers and give a statement that he stole them and will never reveal the other affair. Hearing voices and anxious to secrete him Imogen opens a door and he passes into what he supposes to be a closet and she locks the door.

CHAPTER XIX.

FOILED IN HIS ATTEMPTED ESCAPE.

EVEN when he found himself locked into the place where Imogen had pretended to conceal him, Reardon, the detective, did not, at first, feel in the least disturbed, although the click of the key as it turned the lock grated harshly on his nerves.

He reasoned that a sense of guilt on Imogen's part had impelled her to take this precaution which, under the circumstances, appeared but natural.

He stood quietly by the door and listened.

Presently he heard the door of the room he had just left open and close, then the sound as of voices in subdued conversation which lasted only a moment or two, after which the door opened and closed again and all was still once more.

Now, he thought, he should be released, but no, there was not a sound in the room outside his prison.

Possibly, he reasoned, the woman had gone to the judge to try to get the money he had demanded, and deemed it safer to keep him there until her return, but he did not like the situation at all, for the sense of confinement and intense darkness was exceedingly unpleasant.

He put out his hands, but could feel no wall, and thought the closet must be a very large one.

He had matches and, striking one, he found himself in what might be more properly termed a trunkroom, for it was quite a sizable place, there being several trunks in it and garments of various descriptions hanging on the walls; but there was not a window or door in it, save the one by which he had entered.

"Hum!" he grunted, as his match went out and he struck another, "this is a deuce of a fix, and I'm blamed if I know just what to make of it."

He seated himself upon a trunk near the door and waited, with what patience he could command, until he should hear Imogen return.

He sat there in utter silence for at least half an hour, and then, unable to endure the suspense any longer, he tapped upon the door.

"Mrs. Ingraham," he said, with his lips close to the keyhole.

But there was no answer.

He waited another half hour, then he spoke again.

Still there came no reply, although he was sure he caught the sound of someone moving outside.

Imogen really had not left the room, nor had anyone entered.

The moment the trunkroom door was closed and locked upon her enemy, she sped to the one leading into the hall, opened and closed it and pretended to be talking with someone.

Then she made as if she was letting someone out, after which she sat down and tried to decide what move to make next—it had only been a ruse to gain time and keep her prisoner quiet until she could arrive at some decision regarding him.

All the antagonism of her nature was aroused to arms, and she had arrived at a point where she felt that she must break the terrible yoke of bondage which, for so many years, had held her and, by some means, free herself forever from this bad man's power.

But how? This was the perplexing problem, and she could seem to think of no way to solve it.

Each time the detective spoke her lips curled in a cruel smile and her eyes flashed with mingled hatred and triumph. For more than an hour she sat there and never moved, thinking—thinking; but coming to no definite decision.

Then her prisoner, becoming desperate, rattled the knob impatiently and demanded to be released in tones that were dangerously loud.

Imogen arose, resolution and defiance dominant in every look and motion.

"Stop that!" she said, going close to the closet and speaking low, but authoritatively; "the judge is sleeping, and his man says he must not be disturbed tonight, so I can do nothing about the money until tomorrow morning."

Reardon swore roundly at this, for he now felt sure that she had not left the room, but was lying to him.

"Then let me out," he said.

"No," replied Imogen, firmly, "I am going to keep you here tonight, for I shall want those papers the first thing in the morning."

"Well, I can bring them to you then, —— ——— you! unlock this door and let me out," the man commanded, roughly.

"No; something might happen that you would not come—some accident, or you might change your mind; they might be stolen—a hundred things might occur. You'll have to get along in there the best you can——"

"By ——! I'll raise the roof if you don't unlock the door this instant," he interposed, in a towering rage.

"Very well, you can do so if you choose," coolly responded Imogen, whose courage arose as she found herself so thoroughly mistress of the situation, "but just so sure as you do, you will go from here into a cell in the jail; now you can meditate over that, for I mean what I say."

He saw that she was resolute, and he cursed himself for a fool for having fallen so easily into her trap.

"I shall suffocate in here; come, be reasonable and let me out," he said, in a conciliatory tone, after a moment of thought.

"No, you will not suffocate, although I know the air hasn't a very good circulation in there, but there is quite a crack under the door, and so you will easily stand it until morning," Imogen returned. "However," she added, "I will release you on one condition."

"Well?" he questioned, sullenly.

"Give me the papers and swear that you will leave the country at once," the woman continued, "You have been a parasite on me for years—I have been a slave to your demands for money—to the fear that you would ruin me in the estimation of my friends, until I have become desperate. I am going to end it all at once and forever. I may as well, for I have no faith in you," she went on, her face and her voice hardening. "If I should yield to your demand and get the thousand pounds, I could not be sure that you would not return, when it was gone, and hold the same old threats over me. No, sir; I'm going to confess the whole story to Judge Ashburton, the first thing tomorrow; throw myself upon his mercy, save the good man who is suffering for your crime and let you suffer the penalty of your own sins, and for the misery that you have caused me for half a lifetime. There, now," she said, in conclusion, "you can take your choice—give me that package at once and go free—clear the country immediately, or remain where you are and meet the consequences tomorrow morning."

The detective was appalled by this unexpected denouement. He realized that she was desperate and determined—that he had driven her into a corner where she could not turn and, in so doing, had got himself into a bad scrape also.

He knew, but too well, what the consequence would be if he was arrested in that place and those important papers found upon his person, while whatever revenge he might take upon Imogen Ingraham would not change the fact that he would have to suffer to the extent of the law for his crime.

He fumed, and swore, and threatened, but all to no purpose; his captor was firm, and he knew by the relentless tones of her voice—by a certain ring of triumph which he detected in them, that she had turned at last, like the proverbial worm, and would do her worst—that she would not spare him, and, if he did not come to her terms, transportation for a term of years, with a ball and chain for companions, would be the fate to which she would doom him, and glory in it.

"It is useless to parley," she said, when he paused, "I have had my say. You can push that envelope through the crack at the bottom of the door to me—fortunately it is wide enough—and the moment it is in a safe place beyond your reach, I will unlock this door and you may go free."

"How do I know that I may trust you? You may get it in your possession and then play me false," the detective opposed.

Imogen gave vent to a bitter laugh.

"Do not fear—do not be so suspicious," she said, with stinging sarcasm, "such a course would put me in an uncomfortable position; it would not be so easy then to prove you the thief that

Home Dressmaking Hints

Forecasts for Spring Fashions

By Geneva Gladding

YOKE effects are shown on many of the new spring styles, on coats as well as dresses.

One-piece frocks are more popular than ever, and what could be more serviceable especially for the business woman than the new skirts with mannish pockets.

Shirt-waists are made with controvertible collars, so fashioned that one may have the waist buttoned close to the neck in standing collar style, or open and low with the collar in flare or rolled outline.

Corded shirrings and gathers are seen on many of the new full skirt models, which lend themselves so readily to the soft pliant materials.

Guimpe dresses for grown-ups and children are smart, popular, and easily developed.

Wide short skirts in circular, plaited or gathered effects are among the new modes, and with these of course the jackets take the same outline.

As for variety in style, that seems endless—every figure may be suited. There are semi-fitted basque effects, one-piece tunic basque in the popular "chemise" style, waists finished at high or normal waistline, and quaint little bolero waists, for wear over high cut skirts.

Pattern Descriptions

ALL PATTERNS 10c. EACH
Unless Other Price Is Stated

1260-1251—A Smart Spring Suit, comprising Ladies' Coat Pattern 1260, and Ladies' Skirt Pattern 1251. As here shown gabardine in a new sand shade was used, with vest of Oriental embroidery, and velvet for trimming. The skirt pattern is cut in six sizes; 22, 24, 26, 28, 30 and 32 inches waist measure. The coat in six sizes; 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires seven and one half yards of material 44 inches wide for the entire suit for a medium size. This illustration calls for two separate patterns.

1245—A New and Pretty Shirt-waist. This desirable model is lovely for any of the pretty new spring cotton materials, and also lends itself nicely to silk, crepe, crepe de chine, poplin, linen or batise. The fronts show a deep tuck at the armscye and some gathered fullness, below a short shoulder yoke. The back has deep box plaits.

Cut in five sizes; 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust measure. It requires three and three eighths yards of 44-inch material for a 36-inch size.

1254—Ladies' Dressing or House Sack with Bell or Bishop Sleeve. Cotton crepe, dimity, lawn, organdie, batiste, cashmere, crepe de chine, silk or voile are all suitable for this style of garment. The model is pretty and comfortable and very easy to develop.

Cut in six sizes; 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires three and three eighths yards of 36-inch material for a 36-inch size.

1237—Ladies' Shirt-waist with Sleeve in either of two lengths. The model is finished with coat closing and the new high collar. The fronts may be open at the throat, the collar being rolled back with the fronts to form revers. Linen, ratine, madras, crepe, batiste, albatross, satin, taffeta and poplin are all suitable for this style.

Cut in six sizes; 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires two and one half yards of 36-inch material for a 36-inch size.

1253—Girls' Dress in High or Low Neck outline, with sleeve in either of two lengths, and with bloomers. The design is good for linen, drill, linene, gingham, percale, chambrey, cashmere, voile, repp or poplin. The comfortable bloomers, may replace petticoats, and will be found an ideal undergarment.

Cut in four sizes; two, four, six and eight years. It requires three yards of 36-inch material for the dress and one yard for the bloomers, for a four-year size.

1255—Girls' Dress, with sleeve in either of two lengths, and with or without tucker. This model would be nice for albatross or cashmere, for linen, batiste, poplin or lawn. It would make a nice school dress in serge, galatea or gingham, and is fine for percale or chambrey. The dress is a one-piece style, with a wide panel over the front. The belt holds the fullness at low waistline, but may be omitted.

Cut in four sizes; four, six, eight and 10 years. It requires three yards of 36-inch material for a four-year size, for the dress, with one half yard for the tucker of 30-inch material.

1176—Ladies' Apron with or without facing and pocket. This garment could be made of white drill with trimming of striped percale, or of dotted or figured percale, with facings of contrasting materials. The model is cut in kimono style, with the fullness of the back confined by a belt.

Cut in three sizes; small, medium and large. It requires four and three quarters yards of 36-inch material for a medium size.

9731—Ladies' Combination Corset Cover, and Drawers with or without ruffle. The cover and drawers may be finished as separate garments, if so desired.

Cut in three sizes; small, medium and large. It requires one and three quarters yard of 27-inch material for the corset cover, two and one half yards for the drawers, with two and one half yards of embroidery five inches wide for ruffling, for a medium size.

1178—Ladies' One- or Two-piece Circular Skirt in round length and raised waistline. Checked brown and white novelty suiting was used for this design. The model is also good for velvet, corduroy, silk, satin, serge, broadcloth, voile, poplin or taffeta. It may be made with a seamless front and back closing, or with lapped fronts and the closing at this part.

Cut in six sizes; 22, 24, 26, 28, 30 and 32 inches waist measure. It requires two and one half yards of 54-inch material for a 24-inch size.

1243—Girls' Over Blouse Dress, with skirt joined to a separate waist. This model is good for gingham, seersucker, chambrey, ratine percale, taffeta, batiste, crepe or poplin. The underwaist is made with body and sleeves in one.

Cut in four sizes; eight, 10, 12 and 14 years. It requires four and one half yards of 36-inch material for an eight-year size.

1236—Ladies' Yoke Skirt, in raised or normal waistline. In soft crepe in a new shade of green, with braiding in black or self color, this style is lovely. In serge, brown or blue, with yoke of contrasting material, it also is smart.

Cut in five sizes; 22, 24, 26, 28 and 30 inches waist measure. It requires three and three quarters yards of 44-inch material for a 24-inch size.

1027—Girls' Combination Waist and Drawers, in round, square or "V" neck outline, and the drawers in Knickerbocker style or with straight lower edge. The front is cut to combine the waist and body portion. The back is in two pieces.

Cut in five sizes; four, six, eight, 10 and 12 years. It requires two and one half yards of 36-inch material for an eight-year size.

9606—Girls' One-piece Apron. This simple design is easily made, and will look pretty and neat. It may be of lawn, crossbar muslin, cambric, dimity, or batiste, gingham or percale.

Cut in five sizes; four, six, eight, 10 and 12 years. It requires two and three eighths yards of 27-inch material for an eight-year size.

1267—A Dainty Infants' Set, comprising bonnet, coat, dress and wrapper.

Cut in one size only and requires: For the dress two and three quarters yards of 36-inch material. For the coat, four and one quarter yards of 27-inch material. For the wrapper, two and five eighths yards of 27-inch material. For the cap, one half yard of 24-inch material.

1205—Girls' Over Blouse Dress with Guimpe having sleeves in either of two lengths. In plain or striped gingham or galatea, the model would make a serviceable school dress, with a guimpe of contrasting material.

Cut in four sizes; four, six, eight and 10 years. It requires one and one half yards of 27-inch material for the guimpe, and three yards for the dress for a six-year size.

9623—Girls' Dress with Body and Sleeve Combined. This design would look well in tan-colored gingham piped with red, or in red or blue chambrey piped with white.

Cut in four sizes; three, four, five and six years. It requires two and one half yards of 40-inch material for a four-year size.

9909—Child's Rompers with long or shorter sleeve. The model is good for chambrey, denim, linen, cambric, linene or percale. It is made with waist front and body portions in one, while at the back the body of trouser portions joins to the waist.

Cut in four sizes; two, four, six and eight years. It requires two and three eighths yards of 36-inch material for a four-year size.

1257—Ladies' Blouse Waist with added over sections, and with sleeve in either of two lengths. Embroidered voile in a new shade of tan was used for this model. The waist is cut with long drooping shoulders. The neck is cut with a deep front opening and finished with a collar high over the back.

Cut in five sizes; 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust measure. It requires two and one half yards of 42-inch material for a 36-inch size.

9680—Ladies' Kimono. Scotch dimity in a pretty shade of lavender on white with facings of white, was used for this model. It is finished with a new shaped collar, and has sleeves in bell shape.

Cut in three sizes; small, medium and large. It requires five and one half yards of 44-inch material for a medium size.

9993—Ladies' Corset Cover or Body Lining, in round, square or "V" neck edge, and with or without shield or puff sleeve. The model may serve as a waist lining. It is close fitting, with side front, side back, back and shoulder seams.

Cut in six sizes; 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires two and three eighths yards of 27-inch material for a 36-inch size.

9943—Boys' Play Suit with Knickerbockers. The sleeve is cut in one with the yoke portions. The closing is at the center under the tuck. This design is good for linen, linene, chambrey, galatea, percale, crepe or seersucker.

Cut in four sizes; two, three, four, and five years. It requires two and three eighths yards of 44-inch material for a three-year size.

1241-1240—A Charming and Simple Gown, comprising Ladies' Waist Pattern 1241, and Ladies' Skirt Pattern 1240. As here shown figured foulard is combined with grenadine, in harmonizing shades of brown and green. The designs may be used separately.

The waist pattern is cut in six sizes; 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. The skirt is cut in six sizes; 22, 24, 26, 28, 30 and 32 inches waist measure. It requires two yards of 44-inch material for the underwaist, with one yard for the overblouse, and three and five eighths yards of 44-inch material for skirt in a medium size.

1249—A simple, comfortable dress for house or porch wear. The waist is made in blouse style and with coat closing. The skirt has a wide lap tuck and is gathered at the top. The back of the waist is combined with the sleeve, which may be finished in wrist length with a band cuff, or short with a neat turn back cuff.

Cut in six sizes; 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires six and three quarters yards of 36-inch material for a 36-inch size.

1261—A dainty and attractive dress for Mother's Girl. This model is lovely for soft fabrics such as albatross, crepe, crepe de chine, messaline or charmeuse, for lawns, organdies and tissue fabrics. The sleeve may be in wrist or short length, and the neck cut in low outline, or with a yoke and collar.

Cut in five sizes; six, eight, 10, 12 and 14 years. It requires three and three quarters yards of 40-inch material for a 10-year size.

1259—Ladies' House or Home Dress, with chemisette, and with sleeve in either of two lengths. In raised or normal waistline. Brown and white checked gingham was used for this style, with white corduroy for collar and cuffs. The right waist front is shaped over the left, and the low, comfortable neck is finished with a deep collar. The skirt is a four-gored model, cut on new lines and with ample fullness.

Cut in six sizes; 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires six and one half yards of 36-inch material for a 36-inch size.

1238—Ladies' Apron, with sleeve protector and cap. The models are suitable for gingham, chambrey, sateen, percale, lawn or seersucker.

Cut in three sizes; small, medium and large. It embraces all styles illustrated, and requires five and one eighth yards of 36-inch material for the apron, three quarters yard for the cape and seven eighths yard for one pair of sleeve protectors.

Pigeons for Profit

PROBABLY pigeons are the most neglected—or rather the most mismanaged—of all poultry on the general farm, yet they are most profitable if well cared for, and especially appropriate for the man who has to be away at work most of the day, or the woman with heavy household duties to occupy most of her time, because they won't overeat; food can be left before them all the time, and the parent birds take all the care of the young ones, so that an hour in the morning is about all that anyone need devote to pigeons every day in the week, with a few extra hours on Saturday to clean up.

There is really money in the business, if you are prepared to earn it. The people must understand that raising pigeons is a business requiring industry and management to make it a success. Unfortunately, a lot of nonsense has been written about pigeons and squab-raising. Lots of people have run away with the idea that all they have to do is to buy a few birds, throw in a little corn night and morning, and make a fortune. True, there is no heavy work to be done, and a good income can be made on a fair-sized flock of homers which are given intelligent care. A comfortable house is essential, and the best plan for a small flock is to build a regular chicken house and cover it all over with tar paper or anyone of the good roofing papers. The yard must be enclosed, of course, and should extend over the roof, and five or six feet above it, so the birds can alight on it when flying from end to end, and sun themselves (which they love to do) on a high, dry place. Put up two or three long perches at the end of the yard; a stand about three feet high in the center for a bath-tub. Let the stand be a foot larger all round than the bath, so that the birds can light on it. The size of the house must depend, of course, on the quantity of birds you intend to keep. Just remember that each pair of old pigeons must have two nest boxes eleven inches square, with an earthenware pan in each. Nest boxes can cover the wall from floor to ceiling, so after it is fitted, it is easy to tell just how many birds a house can accommodate. The earthenware pans are called nappies, and are manufactured on purpose for pigeons. They can be bought at any supply store for five or ten cents each. There is a brown crockery dish about seven inches across and two deep, which is to be found in most five and ten cent stores, that answers very well if you can't get the real things in your immediate vicinity.

Now about feeding. Just throwing down cracked corn won't do. Variety in diet is necessary for birds' health as well as for man and beasts. It is wise to give the food question a little thought. Kafir corn, red wheat, cracked corn, Canadian field peas, German millet, and hemp are all staple grains. Use whichever can be had cheapest in your vicinity, and alternate them whenever you can. We follow the rule recommended by W. E. Rice, a very successful pigeon-raiser:

Morning: Equal parts of cracked corn and wheat. Afternoon feed: cracked corn and Kafir corn. During the winter the proportions: Two parts cracked corn to one of wheat or Kafir corn. Regular feeds are always placed in a self-feeder, so that the birds can help themselves. Peas, millet, hemp and rice are good only as treats once or twice a week. They are fed in small quantities, and alone, because we found out that if mixed with other grains, the birds would pick out the dainties and throw out the grain or wheat.

Unless starved to it, pigeons will not eat grain that has been defiled by lying on the floor, so to prevent waste it is best to have a self-feeder, or at least some contrivance which prevents birds getting their head or feet into the supply and scattering it. The treats we feed by hand, and scatter on the floor, but if the birds are naturally eager for a novelty, it is picked up at once. Remember that white wheat is very likely to produce diarrhea, so always order red, and don't be tempted to use new grain of any sort, or corn exclusively, for if you do, your birds will surely be troubled with canker. During the year, and especially in the early winter, I always receive letters asking why pigeons are afflicted with a strange disease in the throat and mouth, which looks like a cheesy growth; and it is for that reason that I caution you against the exclusive corn diet, for that is what caused the trouble, and often spoils the whole breeding season.

Early Chickens

Several readers wish to know how to care for incubator chicks in brooders, and how to fatten for market, so I will tell you our method of preparing broilers. Up to the tenth day they are fed like all other baby chicks, then as follows:

Steam some chopped clover hay—about a quart—and add one pint of coarse corn-meal, one pint of ground oats, and half a small cupful of chopped liver which has been boiled for five minutes (raw liver is too strong for such young birds), but it should not be boiled more than the five minutes. Feed once a day at noon. Put the mash into two or three dishes, so they can all get a chance to eat at once. Remove any that is left at the end of ten minutes. If it is not possible to get fresh liver, use one teaspoonful of beef meal, or any of the commercial meat preparations which are ground fine. Continue to scatter the dry grains three or four times a day. When they are four weeks old, give mash twice a day about 9 A. M. and 2 P. M., increasing the allowance of milk slightly; and if you have plenty of skim-milk, make cottage cheese and give it them as an extra once or twice a week.

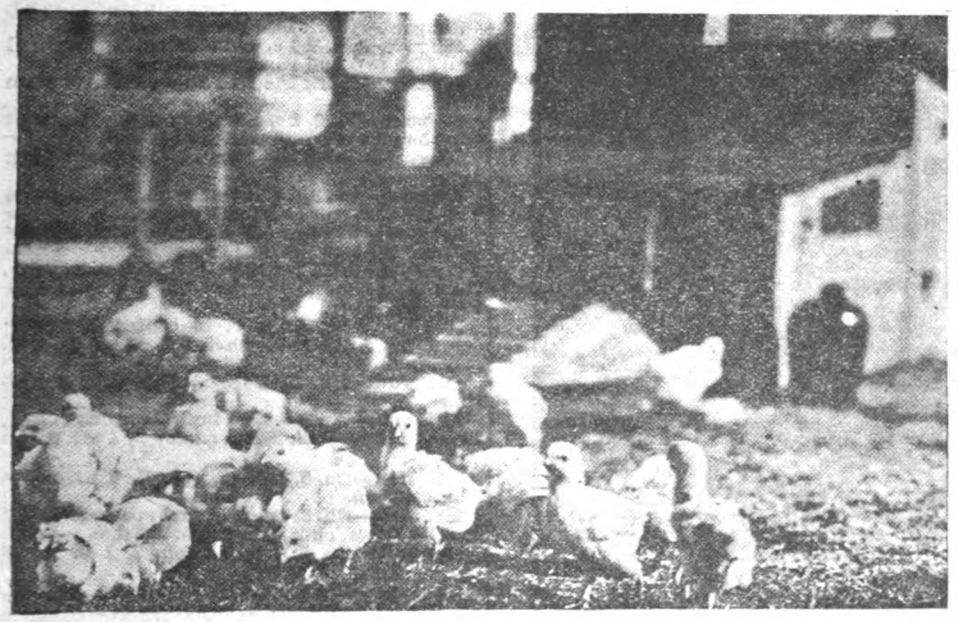
From the fourth week, keep a pan containing grit and charcoal always before them. After they are six weeks old, increase the quantity of corn-meal in the mash, and correspondingly decrease the ground oats, until all corn-meal and no oats are being used. Also, stop steaming the clover, and mix it dry with the other ingredients; then moisten the mash with scalded milk in which suet has been boiled (one pound of chopped suet to four quarts of meal. Boil for fifteen minutes). Feed it three times a day—9 A. M., 12 M., and 3 P. M. The last two weeks before killing, omit all the dry grain; feed nothing but mash, made as before, only as soft as possible without being sloppy. Feed four times a day all they will eat up in ten minutes, but on no account leave food before them longer than that, or they will become satiated, and your object not be gained. Birds so pushed along should be plump and in really fine condition for market when from ten to twelve weeks old.

Should it be necessary to hold any of the birds over for a week or two, continue the rations given for the period between the fourth and sixth weeks, as it would not be safe to feed such heavy rations as are given for the last two weeks of the fattening process, for an indefinite period. As you will notice, our broilers are never given water to drink, but always scalded milk. It is done for a double reason; scalded milk checks any tendency to bowel trouble, the great scourge of chickenhood and is also a strong factor in making the flesh tender and juicy; but of course if you don't have milk you must substitute water.

Correspondence

C. H.—In your Nov. number, 1914, you give a subscriber advice for limberneck in fowls. The treatment you advise is a dose of one teaspoonful turpentine, two tablespoonfuls of sweet oil, and three of Castor oil. Did you mean to adminster this dose to one fowl as one dose? As you say limberneck is caused by ptomaine poisoning, I suppose mine got the trouble by eating some bottled peas that had gone bad. I threw them out, never thinking that they would hurt the fowls. The very next morning nearly one dozen had the limberneck, and I lost nearly two dozen (all hens and pullets) within a few days.

A.—I think there must have been some mistake. The proper dose for limberneck is one teaspoonful of oil of turpentine and one tablespoonful of sweet oil or Castor oil.



A. K.—You say that you only gave thirty birds one quart of scratch feed night and morning, but that they are very fat and don't lay. This is because they are not getting a well-balanced ration. Scatter half a pint of scratch feed in deep litter in the early morning, and about ten or eleven o'clock give a quart of mash composed of wheat bran, ground oats, ground corn and wheat middlings; equal parts of each. Add one tablespoonful of any of the commercial animal meals beef or bone. Mix thoroughly, and moisten just enough to make a crumbly mash. After a week, gradually increase the amount of animal food, until they are getting four tablespoonfuls to each quart of mash. At noon, give them green stuff and another half pint of scratch feed. At night, whole corn; as much as they will eat up clean in fifteen minutes. There is no necessity to use permanganate of potassium in the drinking water, except when you have an infectious disease to fight. Torn paper would not be at all practical as scratching material. Use dry leaves if you think that straw or hay is too expensive. It would not do to bury grain in dirt or sand, because it would be apt to get damp and sour.

P. E. R.—As I want to start raising chickens, and try and make a success, I shall ask you about my chicken coop. Size, seven by fourteen by seven feet high, gable ends, and I want to know what ventilation I should have in it. I shall have the chicken roosts two feet from floor, and on a level. How many hens will this coop hold?

A.—You could keep from twenty to twenty-five hens in the house, because you never have to keep poultry in during long periods of snow being on the ground, as we do in the East. I advise you to cover the window and door with muslin or wire netting, and provide muslin curtains to cover the netting in wet weather. This will provide plenty of fresh air without any ventilating system.

L. I.—I have been taking COMFORT for about a year and think it a grand paper, I have looked through its columns for a remedy for my chickens, but failed to find any, so am coming to you for advice. I have about fifty head of chickens, and mostly all Plymouth Rocks. They have something the matter with their necks and feet. Their knees and feet swell and crack open, and they can scarcely get about. We feed on cold scraps from the table and chopped corn. They also have a rattling noise in their throats. Their droppings are whitish-colored. They will stand and sleep, but eat heartily. Have lost three head lately.

A.—The whole flock must be in a very bad condition, and one which, I fear, you will have great difficulty in curing. Don't use any of their eggs for hatching this season. The birds must have hereditary rheumatism and roupy tendencies, which have developed in a malignant form. I fear that doctoring will be of little benefit. Personally, I should kill them all, thoroughly disinfect the house, plow up the yard, and start with a fresh lot of birds. But if you want to try what can be done, spray their throats with permanganate of potassium, made by diluting half a teaspoonful of the crystals in a pint of water. For use, dilute one tablespoonful of the lotion with three of water. Or you can use one teaspoonful of peroxide of dydrogen in half a tumbler of water. For the shanks and feet, bathe them in warm, soapy water; dry on a soft, clean rag, and while moist, rub with carbolic ointment or lard and sulphur in equal parts.

OUTDOOR BROODER HEATED BY A LAMP. SUCH BROODERS ARE STORM PROOF AND WILL HOUSE FROM 75 TO 100 CHICKS.

L. W. M.—Will you please tell me what is the matter with my turkeys? They have about three black sores on their heads and one yellow spot just inside the mouth. I have lost one turkey from this disease and have two others with it. The one I lost was in bad shape before I knew there was anything the matter with them. Since last issue of COMFORT I have been using permanganate of potassium for affected birds. The turkeys are healthy and active. They have a free range and plenty of green food, sand, gravel and fresh water. The two birds that are affected now are no better and no worse. I have been using the above remedy about twelve days. What must I do to prevent the spread of this disease? Have used sheep dip and copperas in their drinking water.

A.—Quarantine the sick birds or kill them, and take every means to keep the disease from spreading. Give each bird in the flock a spoonful of Castor oil. Read the poultry department in the March issue of COMFORT. It will give much of the information you want.

C. D.—Will you please let me know how long after being separated from the male bird eggs are fertilized or good for hatching? If it is the same period for ducks, geese or hens? A goose was given me on Dec. 24; now she is laying. Would like to know if her eggs are good to be hatched.

A.—I should not care to risk using eggs for hatching from hens which have been separated from the rooster for more than two weeks—or ducks' either, and most certainly goose eggs could not be fertile.

M. B.—I would like to know what was the matter with my little ducks. They got so they could not stand on their feet; just sat around all the time, and ate all the time, but could not walk. I feed wheat and ground corn. They have all the water and grit they want.

A.—Young ducks can't stand heavy ground feed. They should have mash made of equal parts of wheat bran, cut clover and ground oats, and all the green vegetables or grass they will eat. When overfed, and especially on corn, they invariably get leg weakness.

G. A. A.—Can you tell me what to do for my roosters' feet? They get so sore. Sometimes they can hardly walk. I think it is caused by jumping from their roost, and they are so heavy, too. (2) What kind of food is best to feed poultry to produce eggs? (3) What ought poultry to have to make their shells? Please describe plainly. (4) What part of grit is best for poultry, to digest their food? Is beat-up china good for poultry, if so, what, etc.? (5) Can you tell me what to feed little chicks on, and how to manage them? (6) What is best to feed little ducks on and how to manage them? (7) And what is best to feed little guineas on and how to manage them? (8) Is charcoal good for poultry, if so, for what, and how ought it to be fixed and fed? Please describe plainly. What ought setting hens to have to eat? How often to feed? (10) Can you tell me how to get rid of chicken lice?

A.—Keep plenty of clean, soft hay on the floor of the chicken-house to prevent the roosters striking the hard floor when they jump off the perches. (2) Read answer to A. K. (3) Hens need lime both to make egg shells and to create bone in the chicks when the eggs are used for hatching. Wheat bran, clover and oats all contain lime, which goes to make bone and muscle in the embryo chick. But, for the shell, they should have a supply of land plaster or oyster shell always before them. (4) China or crockery that has been broken fine, or hard, sharp gravel of any sort. (5) Little chicks must have nothing to eat for thirty-six hours, and then hard-boiled egg chopped fine, shell and all, mixed with an equal quantity of stale bread-crumbs. Feed five times a day, but give very little each time. After the fourth day, give chick food three times a day. (This is a mixture of finely cracked grains and small seeds, specially prepared and sold under the name of chickfeed), and two feeds of egg and bread-crumbs. Keep that up for three or four days, then give chopped egg, dry cottage cheese, crumbled, or liver slightly boiled and chopped fine, once a day, and chickfeed three times a day. Read about fattening young chickens in the first part of the department. (6) Read answer to M. B. (7) Feed the young guinea fowl just the same as young chickens. (8) Charcoal is very good for all poultry, and should be kept before them all the time. For young chickens, it must be broken almost to a powder. For older birds it must be like cracked corn. It aids digestion, and keeps the crop and intestines sweet. (9) Setting hens should have whole corn, grit and water, left where they can get it whenever they get off of the nest. (10) All poultry should be dusted with a good insect powder every other night for a week in the early spring; again in the fall; and all hens should be thoroughly dusted when they are given eggs to hatch, and again about three days before the chickens are expected. Clean out the henhouse, brood coops, etc., and give everything a coat of good fresh limewash. Add one ounce of crude carbolic acid to every pail of whitewash while it is still boiling. Paint the roosts and nest boxes, especially up in the cracks and joints, with sheep dip or any strong solution, every week all through the year; being careful, of course, that the hens don't get on to the perches whilst they are wet, as they might blister their feet.

A. U. E.—I have been reading your paper for three years, and have been watching for a remedy for my White Plymouth Rock chickens. They have free range, living on a farm with about ten acres of timber and grass; plenty of grit and oyster shell and pure water. They take sick about the first of May or June. They stretch their heads out on the ground and won't move unless you make them, and then they flap their wings and crawl. Their feathers are loose, and in two or three days they take white and green diarrhea, and then don't live more than two or three days after that. We try and burn all of them that die and kill some of them as soon as taken sick. I gave them copperas in their drinking water. That don't seem to help, so I don't know what to do. Some say it is limberneck. Mostly hens and pullets—not many roosters—take it. I have about thirty hens left, so would like to know a cure. Am afraid they will die this spring. They have a good clean henhouse, and I feed little corn and give them all the milk they will drink.

A.—Would say this was a case of poison of some sort. Do you use strong fertilizer on the land where the hens are liable to find it, or is there any foul water in the woods and pastures that they are likely to drink? Or it may be that you or your neighbors poison rats in the spring of the year, and the birds find dead carcases. In any such cases as these, the safest plan is to administer a tablespoonful of Castor oil as soon as you notice any symptoms of illness. I should advise you to keep the fowls shut up during May and the early part of June.

J. L.—I have been taking COMFORT for a number of years, and have been reading your poultry talks. My sister and I have been trying the poultry business on a small scale. We have one half dozen Black Minorca hens and a rooster. These are pure stock. Also three dozen Buff Orpingtons with two cockerels. These are almost pure. We had thought of selling the baby chicks of the Buff and raising the Minorcas until grown, then sell them as pure stock. How old is the best age to sell the baby chicks, and what is the price usually paid? How could one find customers for them? I know lots of people would rather buy them at that age, and then raise them to maturity. Which way do you think is the most profitable? To sell them when baby chicks or raise them until they weigh a couple of pounds? Also how would one find customers for the Black Minorcas? Would like to sell them for fancy prices, you know. They are extremely nice. Are such a showy, pretty chicken. Am sending you a stamped envelope for answer. Or do you never answer letters personally? I did not know.

A.—Baby chicks should be shipped as soon as hatched, because they need no food for thirty-six or forty-eight hours, and close confinement does not injure them during that period. The usual price for ordinary stock is from eight to ten cents each, and from fifteen to twenty cents for high bred stock. An advertisement in your local paper will be the best means for getting customers, and it should be inserted at least a month before you expect a hatch. It is usually difficult to get fancy prices for mature birds, unless the stock has gained a reputation at shows. Whether it is better to sell baby chicks or two-pound birds depends so entirely upon local conditions that I can't say which you will find the most profitable. It is against our rules to answer letters personally, though we do so occasionally when the case is urgent.

M. E.—Please read answer to G. A. A.

J. J.—I have two canaries, one male and one female. The male is five years old and the female is one year old. Please tell me if they will breed, as I heard that the male will not breed after he is three years old. Also please tell me what to feed young birds.

7th row.—Ch. 7, 1 sl. st. in first p. Ch. 8, 1 sl. st., in third p., ch. 7, 1 sl. st., in corner of square. Repeat around the three other corners.

8th row.—Under ch. 7, work 3 s. c., ch. 4 for p., 3 s. c., 1 p., 3 s. c. Under ch. 8 make an extra p. Under ch. 7, same as first ch. 7. Repeat around the three corners.

For the small square motif, of which only two are required, ch. 15, and proceed as for the large square, but making only 3 rows of 3 spaces each. Finished with 3 s. c. in each sp., and 1 p., on each side and 1 p. in each corner.

For the round motif, 2 of which will be seen on each side of the collar, begin in the center, make a loop around your finger with end of thread toward you, and on this loop work 7 s. c., joining last to 1st with a sl. st. Draw up the end of thread very firmly so there is no hole left in the center.

2nd row.—Ch. 1, 2 s. c., in each s. c., of last row, closing with a sl. st. The work should be done snugly, taking into both loops of stitch to avoid a rib.

3rd row.—Ch. 1, * a s. c. in 1st stitch, 2 in next and repeat around, joining to 1st stitch.

4th row.—Ch. 6, sk. 2 s. c., fasten with a sl. st., in next; repeat around the circle, making 8 loops.

5th row.—In each loop work 3 s. c., 1 picot, 3 s. c., and fasten off.

The grapes, of which there are 7 clusters or bunches of 8 grapes each, are made like center of wheel until you have completed the 3rd row. Proceed as follows:

4th row of grapes.—Ch. 1, 1 s. c. in each s. c.

5th row.—1 s. c. in every other s. c. of previous row.

6th row.—Same as 5th row.

Cut thread 2 inches long and pull through last stitch; now draw up both threads very firmly and tie securely, stuffing ends into grape. To form the bunches sew 6 grapes around a center grape, and the 8th between any 2 of the circles.

For the leaves, proceed as follows:

Ch. 16, sk. 1 st., 14 s. c. in 14 sts., 3 in last st., 14 s. c. on other side. * ch. 2, turn 15, taking up the back loop only to form ridge, 3 s. c. in 2nd of 3 widening sts., 14 s. c., down other side. This leaves a little point for center of leaf. Repeat until you have 4 points or ribs on each side of the center, and end the leaflet at the bottom. Make 2 leaves more in the same way, crocheting the others to this one to within 5 stitches from the last point. For the stem fasten your thread into the end of one of the side petals, chain 32, and fasten in the same place. On this double chain make 30 s. c., pushing your stitches very close together, and having the last one in the loop of the chain to hold them on; ch. 1, turn, and work with singles back to the beginning, fastening into the ends of the other 2 leaflets or petals. By pushing the fullness to end of stem it will curve nicely; sew to curve in stem to keep in position.

The piece at the neck is 18 inches long, and is made as follows:

1st row.—Ch. 172 stitches, make a picot of last 4 stitches, and on the remaining 168 make 6 s. c., picot of ch. 4, repeat all along the line, ending with a picot, which will be the 29th of the row, turn

2nd row.—Ch 2, a single on other side of ch. 4, a treble in same place, ch. 6, sk. 2, * 2 tr. c. in next 2 stitches, ch. 6, sk. 4, repeat from * all along, making 2 trebles at end. The trebles will come exactly between the picots on opposite side; turn.

3rd row.—Ch. 1,* a s. c. on each treble, 3 s. c., picot, 3 s. c. under ch. 6, 2 d. c. in 2 trebles, 3 s. c. under next ch., then a triple picot (consisting of 3 picots of ch. 4, fastened in same place, one after the other), 3 s. c. under same ch. 6, and repeat from *, alternating the single with triple picots, and ending with a single picot. This gives 15 single and 14 triple picots.

Baste this neckpiece and motifs on your pattern, placing them face down, and fasten neatly with thread and needle. They may be joined as the work proceeds, but if one is a beginner it will be found much easier to get the collar to lie smoothly and fit perfectly if put together as suggested The spaces between the center bunch of grapes and the wheel motifs each side, also between these and the wheels toward points of collar, are filled in by small sections of picoted chains similar to those described in 3rd row of neckpiece.

Fasten in top of center bunch of grapes ch. 1, 2 tr. c. in single 1 of neckpiece ch. 6, 1 s. c. in stem of leaf, ch. 6, 1 s. c. in point of leaf, ch. 3, 1 sl. st., 1 p. of round motif, ch. 3, 1 sl. st. in 3rd single p. of neckpiece, turn, work singles under ch. to center ch. 6, make 1 triple p., joining center p. to center p. of triple p. of neckpiece, singles, 1 triple p. joined to neck triple p. under neck ch. 6, fasten. Fill other spaces in like manner The stems of the grapes may be either a chain of requisite length, or put in with needle and thread, carrying the thread across and back to make 3 strands, then twist or wind these closely and evenly, and fasten off.

The Cuffs

The cuffs are composed of one leaf, 1 bunch of grapes and 2 large square motifs. Join the squares as in the collar, by the 6 picots, and sew the grapes between the 2 petals of the leaf. Fill in between the upper picots of the square and the top of the leaf with a "spider-web" arrangement of chains: Fasten in at the upper picot of square, ch. 32, fasten to 1st point of upper petal of leaf, turn, (ch. 8, sk. 7, fasten in next stitch) 4 times, forming 4 loops, each of which is filled with (4 s. c., picot) repeat twice, 4 s. c. for the finish at the top of cuff. From the picot where the ch. 32 started ch. 10, thread over 5 times, catch in next picot below and work off the stitches 2 at a time as in making a treble; repeat this long stitch (quintuple treble) in each of next 2 picots below, over 3 times and work in corner of leaflet, over twice, and work in side of stem, where it curves, over 5 times and catch in 24th of ch. 32, where 3rd loop is fastened; catch all these together, forming a close center, then ch. 8, fasten in 16th stitch of ch. 32, make a double treble in top of leafstem, ch. 10, catch in side of other leaf-petal, and fasten off. The number of times the thread is put over should be graduated according to the space, to make the bars of the spiderweb of proper length. Make the other cuff in same way, but for the opposite side.

This is a very rich-looking and handsome set, elaborate in appearance but not at all difficult to make. The motifs may be used in making handbags, pillow-covers, and many other articles.

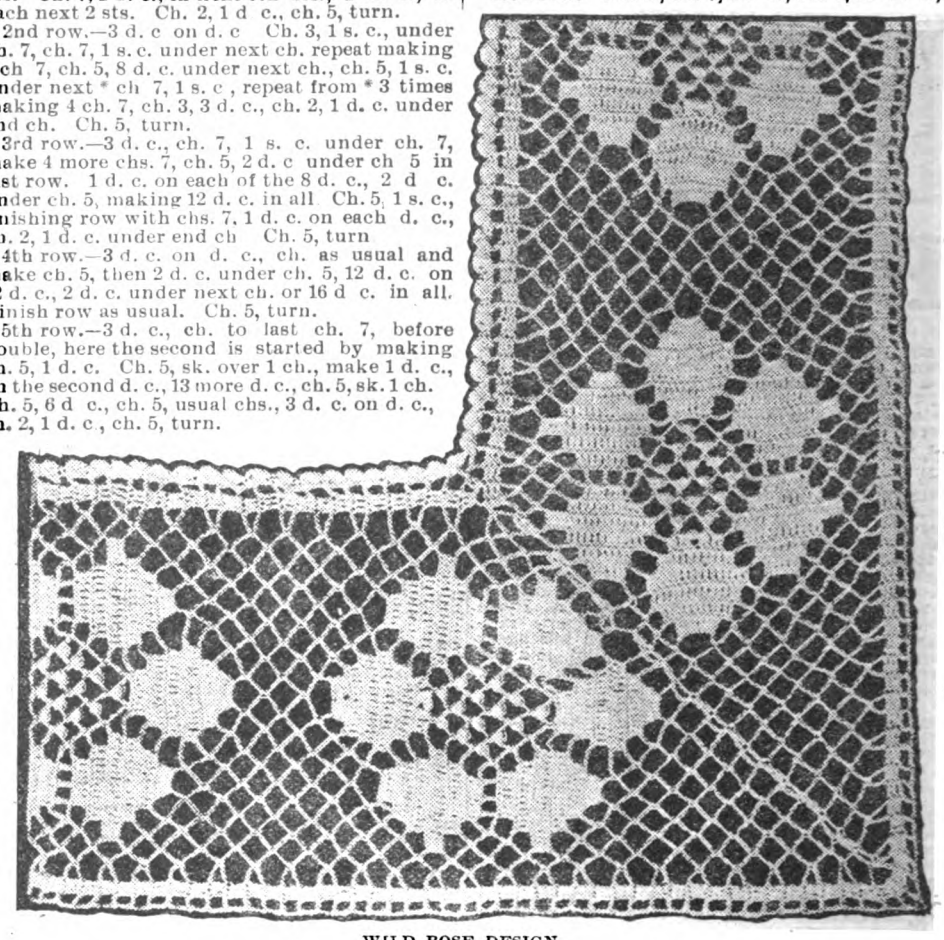
Wild Rose Yoke

By Mrs Wertman

The directions as given are for the yoke of a corset cover, for a woman of 48 inches bust measure, or even larger. But the same design can easily be made in any size yoke, for either woman or child by turning a corner in the insertion sooner, according to the directions and as illustrated.

This yoke was crocheted of medium coarse mercerized cotton, but if a rather fine crochet cotton is used the directions as given will result in a yoke of about 40 inches.

Begin at opening in front of yoke, by making a chain of 80 stitches.



1st row.—1 d. c. in 8th st. from needle, 1 d. c., in each next 2 sts. * Ch. 7, 1 s. c., in next 6th st., repeat from * 9 times making 10 chains of 7 sts. Ch. 7, 1 d. c., in next 6th sts., 1 d. c., in each next 2 sts. Ch. 2, 1 d c., ch. 5, turn.

2nd row.—3 d. c on d. c Ch. 3, 1 s. c., under ch. 7, ch. 7, 1 s. c. under next ch. repeat making 4 ch 7, ch. 5, 8 d. c. under next ch., ch. 5, 1 s. c. under next * ch 7, 1 s. c , repeat from * 3 times making 4 ch. 7, ch. 3, 3 d. c., ch. 2, 1 d. c. under end ch. Ch. 5, turn.

3rd row.—3 d. c., ch. 7, 1 s. c. under ch. 7, make 4 more chs. 7, ch. 5, 2 d. c under ch 5 in last row. 1 d. c. on each of the 8 d. c., 2 d c. under ch. 5, making 12 d. c. in all Ch. 5, 1 s. c., finishing row with chs. 7, 1 d. c. on each d. c., ch. 2, 1 d. c. under end ch Ch. 5, turn

4th row.—3 d. c. on d. c., ch. as usual and make ch. 5, then 2 d. c. under ch. 5, 12 d. c. on 12 d. c., 2 d. c. under next ch. or 16 d c. in all. Finish row as usual. Ch. 5, turn.

5th row.—3 d. c., ch. to last ch. 7, before double, here the second is started by making ch. 5, 1 d. c. Ch. 5, sk. over 1 ch., make 1 d. c., on the second d. c., 13 more d. c., ch. 5, sk. 1 ch. Ch. 5, 6 d c., ch. 5, usual chs., 3 d. c. on d. c., ch. 2, 1 d. c , ch. 5, turn.

WILD ROSE DESIGN.

6th row.—3 d. c., chs. 10 d. c. over 6 d. c., making 2 extra on either side. Ch. 5, 12 d. c., over 14 d. c. Ch. 5, 10 d. c. over 6 d. c Finish row as usual.

7th row.—3 d. c., chs. 14 d. c., over 10 d. c., ch. 5, 8 d. c., over 12 d. c., ch. 5, 14 d. c., over 10 d. c., ch. 5, 1 s. c. Ch. 7, 3 d. c., ch. 2, 1 d. c. Ch. 5, turn.

8th row.—3 d. c., ch. 3, 1 s. c., ch. 5, 4 d. c., before the doubles. 1 d. c., on each d. c., ch 5, skip 1 ch. and make 1 s. c. on second d. c., now a clones knot made as follows: Ch. 3 (thread over the needle, bring up a loop around the chain close to the needle), repeat four times, thread over needle and draw through all the loops on the needle. This makes a knot, now. Ch. 2, 1 s. c., on second last d. c. of petal. This detail of Clones Knot will not be given again. Ch. 5, 1 d. c., on each d. c., of petal, and 4 under next ch. Ch. 5, 1 s. c. Ch. 3, 3 d. c., ch. 2, 1 d. c., on end. Ch. 5, turn.

9th row.—3 d. c., ch. 7, 1 s. c., under ch. before petal. Ch. 5, sk. 4 d. c., 12 d. c., ch. 5, 1 s. c. A Clones knot made with ch. 3, the knot then ch. 2, 1 sl. st., under knot in previous row., (make it in the thread that holds the knot together.) A Clones knot, fastens on next ch. 5, ch. 5, from the 3rd d. c., make 12 d. c., on the petal; ch. 5, 1 s. c., ch. 7, 3 d. c., ch. 2, 1 d c.. ch. 5, turn.

10th row.—3 d. c., 1 s. c., ch. 7, 1 s. c., ch. 5, 8 d. c., over 12 d. c., ch. 5, 1 s. c., 3 clones knots, ch. 5, 1 s. c., ch. 7, 1 s. c., ch. 3, 3 d. c., ch. 2, 1 d. c., ch. 5, turn.

11th row.—Ch. 5, 3 d. c., (ch. 7, 1 s. c.,) twice Ch. 5, 1 d. c., on second d. c. of petal, ch. 2, 1 d. c. on next 3rd d. c; ch. 2, 1 d. c., on last d. c., ch. 5, 1 s. c; 4 clones knots, ch. 5, 1 d. c. in first d. c., of petal, ch. 2, d. c. in third d. c., ch. 2, 1 d. c. in next third d. c., ch. 5, 1 s. c., ch. 7, 1 s. c., ch. 7, 3 d. c., ch. 2, 1 d. c. on end. Ch. 5, turn.

12th row.—3 d. c., ch. 3, 1 s. c., ch. 7, 1 s. c., ch. 5, sk. 1 ch., 8 d. c., beginning on first double. Ch. 5, 1 s. c. under first clones knot; 3 clones knots. Ch. 5, 8 d. c., beginning 1 in front of doubles; ch. 5, 1 s. c., ch. 7, 1 s. c., ch. 3, 3 d. c., ch. 2, 1 d. c , ch. 5, turn.

13th row.—3 d. c., ch. 7, 1 s c., ch. 5, 12 d. c., over 8 d. c., ch. 5, 1 s. c. under knot, 2 clones knots. Ch. 5, 12 d. c. over 8 d. c., ch. 5, 1 s. c., ch. 7, 3 d. c., * ch. 2, 1 d. c., ch. 5, turn.

14th row.—3 d. c., ch. 3, 1 s. c. * Ch. 5, 4 d. c. before the petal, 12 d. c. and 2 d. c. on the other side, ch. 5, 1 s. c. under knot, 1 knot, ch. 5, 2 d. c. before petal, 12 d. c., 4 d. c. on other side, ch. 5, 1 s. c., ch. 3, 3 d. c., ch. 2, 1 d. c., ch. 5, turn.

15th row.—3 d. c., ch. 7, 1 s. c., ch. 5, sk. 4 doubles, 12 d. c., ch. 5, start last petal by making 8 d. c. in a row. Thus 2 under ch. 5, 2 before knot, 2 after knot, under ch. 5., ch. 5. Begin on third double next petal and make 12 d c in a row. ch. 5, 1 s. c., * ch. 7, 3 d. c., ch. 2, 1 d. c., ch. 5, turn.

16th row.—3 d. c., ch. 3, 1 s. c., ch. 7, 1 s. c., * ch. 5, 8 d. c. over 12 d. c., ch. 5, 12 d. c. over 8 d. c., ch. 5, 8 d. c., over 12 d.c. Finish row as usual.

17th row.—3 d. c., 2 chs. 7, ch. 5, 6 d. c. over 8 d. c., ch 5, 14 over 12 d. c., ch. 5, 6 d. c. over 8 d. c., ch. 5, 1 s. c. * Finish row as usual.

18th row.—3 d. c., made chs. Sk. over petal with last * ch. 7, 1 s. c. in next space, ch. 5, 16 d. c., over 14 d. c., ch. 5, 1 s. c., ch. 7, sk. over petal. Finish as usual.

19th row.—3 d. c., chs. 7, then ch. 5, 12 d. c. over 16 d. c., ch. 5. * Finish with chs. 7 as usual

20th row.—3 d. c., chs. as usual, * ch. 5, then 8 d. c., over 12. Finish as usual.

21st row.—3 d. c., 11 chs. 7, 3 d. c. ch. 2, 1 d. c., ch. 5, turn.

22nd row.—3 d. c., ch. 3, 1 s. c , 10 chs. 7, 3 d. c. ch. 2, 1 d. c., ch. 5, turn. Repeat 21 and 22 rows twice for network between the roses. Begin next rose at second or even row.

Detail of miter corner on the decrease.

1st row.—Work the 13th row to the * and then turn.

2nd row.—Three s. c. on 3 doubles; ch. 3 and 1 s. c. Begin at * on 14th row and work to end.

3rd row.—Work 15th row to * then turn.

4th row.—Ch. 3, 1 s. c. under ch. 5. Begin at * on 16th row and work to end.

5th row.—Work the 17th row to the * then turn.

6th row.—Ch. 3, 1 s. c. under ch. 5. Begin at * in the 18th row and work to the end.

7th row.—Work the 19th row to the * then turn.

8th row.—Ch. 3, 1 s. c. under ch. 5. Begin at * on the 20th row and work to end.

9th row.—The rose is finished now, so the pattern will be worked to a point with a network of chs. of 7. Begin with ch. 5, 3 d. cs., (ch. 7, 1 s. c.) 6 times. The last ch. 7 passes over the petal. Turn 10th row.—Ch. 3, 1 s. c. in center of space; (ch. 7, 1 s. c.,) 5 times; ch. 3, 3 d. c., ch. 2, 1 d. c. on end.

11th row.—Ch. 5, 3 d. c., (ch. 7, 1 s c.) 5 times. Turn.

12th row.—Ch. 3, 1 s. c., in first space., (ch. 7, 1 s. c.) 4 times; ch. 3, 3 d. c., ch. 2, 1 d. c. on end.

13th row.—Ch. 5, 3 d. c., (ch. 7, 1 s. c.,) 4 times. Turn.

14th row.—Ch. 3, 1 s. c. in first space, (ch. 7, 1 s. c.,) 3 times, ch. 3, 3 d. c., ch. 2, 1 d. c. on end.

15th row.—Ch. 5, 3 d. c., (ch. 7, 1 s. c.) 3 times. Turn.

16th row.—Ch. 3, 1 s. c. in first space, (ch. 7, 1 s. c.,) twice, ch. 3, 3 d. c., ch. 2, 1 d. c. on end.

17th row.—Ch. 5, 3 d. c., (ch. 7, 1 s. c.) twice. Turn.

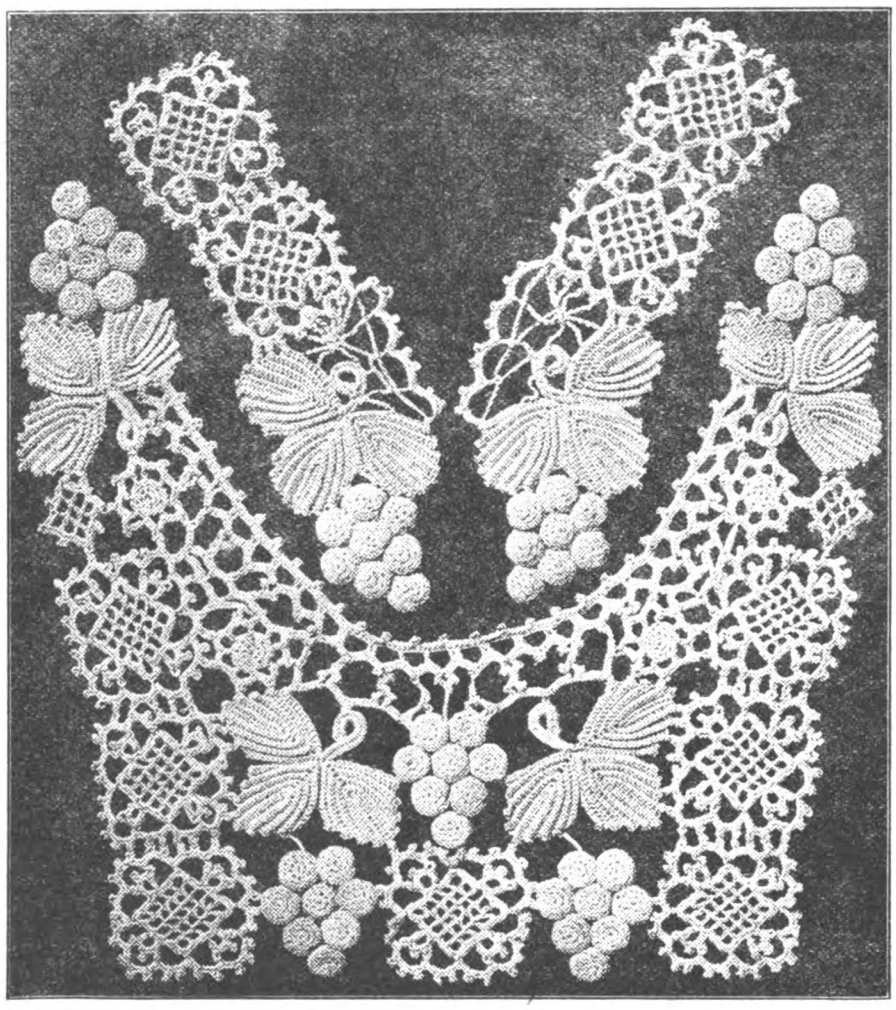
18th row.—Ch. 3, 1 s. c., in first space, ch. 7, 1 s. c., ch 3, 3 d. c., ch. 2, 1 d. c. on end.

19th row.—Ch. 5, 3 d. c., ch. 7, 1 s. c. Turn.

20th row.—Ch. 3, 1 s. c., under ch. 7, ch. 3, 3 d. c., ch. 2, d. c. on end.

21st row.—Ch. 5, 3 d. c. Turn.

22nd row.—3 s. c. on 3 d. c., ch. 2, and in place of a double make a treble on the end.



This is the corner and wants to be a trifle larger. As this was worked on the decrease it must now be worked to increase, until the work is even again.

1st row.—On the increase of miter: Ch. 5, 3 d. c. on 3 s. c., ch. 3, fasten on the bias edge on the first s. c. you come to. Ch. 3, fasten on next sp e on bias edge.

2nd row.—Ch. 7, 3 d. c. on 3 d. c., ch. 2, d. c. on end.

3rd row.—Ch. 5, 3 d. c., ch. 3, 1 s. c., ch. 7,

A New Memorial Day

Dedication of Confederate Monument in National Cemetery

By Edna Mary Colman

The impressive ceremonies which attended the dedication of the monument erected to the memory of the Confederate dead in the National Soldiers' Cemetery at Arlington, near Washington, typify the new national spirit that animates our people throughout the land. The event is of mighty significance and marks an epoch in the history of our country.

That the South has wished, and Congress willingly granted permission, to place this monument where it stands shows that the sectional misunderstanding, distrust and animosity which caused the war are buried by both sides forever in the graves that hallow this consecrated ground.

Among the orators was General Gardner, Commander-in-Chief of the G. A. R., delegated to assist in these memorial exercises, which were made national in character by President Wilson's participation. The former foes in war vied here in eloquent expressions of mutual respect, friendship and esteem.

Impartially the nation mourns the dead heroes of the Civil War and accords their memory the honors due to brave men regardless of the cause for which they sacrificed their lives.

THE thirtieth day of May, this year, will witness a scene unparalleled in the history of any nation, for in the great National Soldiers' Cemetery at Arlington, bordering the Potomac opposite Washington, there will be a united decoration of all graves and impartial honor paid to the memory of all soldiers buried there without discrimination as to whether it was the stars and stripes or the stars and bars that they fought under.

The massive monument to the memory of the twenty-one hundred and eleven unknown Union soldiers whose bodies gleaned from the field of battle rest in nameless, but not forgotten graves, will share its measure of loving attention with the new Confederate monument dedicated on the fourth day of last June. Laurel wreaths and flags will be placed alike on both, and all services conducted in honor of the dead of the great silent city will include impartially all who have found a last resting place under the majestic trees on the green slopes of Arlington, once the historic estate of the famous Custis and Lee families.

With the unveiling of this superb bronze monument in honor of the Confederate dead in the hallowed precincts of the National Cemetery, the last link was forged in the chain of fraternity that binds together the North and the South. And the participation in the ceremonies of the veterans of both the Blue and the Gray but add to the strength of the tie. This monument is the most unique in the world's history, erected in a government cemetery to the memory of the Southern soldiers who fought the government in the war between the states.

Not only is this a monument to the gray-clad followers of the lost cause, but it is the visualized expression of the grandeur of American character, for nowhere else on the face of the earth lives there a nation with so wonderful a conception of magnanimity nor so true a sense of honor and justice. That within the space of the passing of a generation, the enemies in the gigantic conflict, that laid a million of its choice manhood in untimely graves, should meet in unity and harmony, and clasp hands in friendship over the graves of their fallen comrades, is only possible because both sides were Americans.

On that memorable day of last June which none who were privileged to be present will ever forget, in the warm sunlight of the glorious summer afternoon, the expectant crowds gathered in the big city of the dead, and stepped lightly and reverently between the little stones that mark the twenty thousand graves.

In the section where the confederate soldiers are buried, rows upon rows of chairs were placed, many of them resting against the time-stained stones that, in few brief words, told of the soldier's answer to the last roll call. Not a desecration but a benediction was this, for the feet that thus trod over the green turf above the sacred dust, came in honor such as no flags nor flowers had ever brought in their wake.

"Johnny Reb," in faded gray sat side by side with the white-haired, stoop-shouldered "Yanks," and each held the starry banner of the other side. Once, midst a lull in the musical selections of the band, a thin, tired old voice sang out with eager spirit, "Hi there, Johnny Reb, you are taking mighty good care of that old flag today." The grizzled veteran in blue had spied a gray-clad soldier supporting the Union flag so carefully that despite its size and the best efforts of the willful afternoon breeze, not a fold touched the ground. Quick as a flash came his answer with equal spirit, "You bet I am, Yank, she's my flag now, though I've seen the day I'd have dragged her in the dirt." Such was the spirit that hovered over the people and the place, as a most propitious prelude to the exercises that were soon to follow.

"Johnny Rebs" and "Yanks" took delight in calling over the intervening rows of spectators to greet each other in fun, and many a battle was fought over and many a camp-fire story told, but with a sort of detachment as though the narrators had not been participants but only onlookers. A few rows back, two old men were in earnest conversation and a sentence that was wafted over the confusion of the moment gave the solution to the whole occasion to any who may still have been in doubt:

"Yes, I'm here. My boy lies over there, killed in the Phillipines and I buried my bitterness in his grave."

One vigorous gray veteran leaped up when General Bennett Young, of Louisville, Kentucky, came upon the platform, and gave the famous rebel yell once, then he looked around with scorn upon his nearby comrades and said: "Get up there, you fellows, salute your old commander!" When the "yell" had been given with a will and the last echo died away in the muttering thunder of the approaching storm, a deliberate voice called out: "Say, Johnny, there was plenty times you all were too busy running to do much yelling." Once more the Grays rose to the occasion with a lightning retort, "Yep, and there was plenty times when you all did the tallest running of your lives when you heard that yell, and that's why you happen to be here now." Like boys, in their delight in chafing and joking these battle-scarred heroes, many of them tense with the emotion of the inspiring scene, seemed imbued with the desire to let the whole throng share the joy of their reunion. Reminiscences of hardships, hair-raising experiences, and tales of great exploits were exchanged in a serio-comic fashion for the benefit of surrounding listeners.

Here were assembled, the highest officials in the land, the President, Cabinet Officers, Senators, Supreme Court Justices, foreign diplomats wide-eyed with astonishment over the sentiment of such a ceremonial and distinguished personages from all over the United States. Fluttering in the breezes, their folds entwining were the flags of the states, the flag of the confederacy and the Stars and Stripes. Dixie and Yankee Doodle broke forth on the summer air and saluted each other and then gave place to the Star Spangled banner while khaki clad soldiers, of a younger generation, sons of both sections ushered the wearers of the Blue and the Gray to advantageous seats.

Above the tramp of many feet and the confusion of the great throng the old melodies of the Southland and the Northland, from the Fort Myer band, stirred old memories and brought the flush of pride and the straightening up shoulders bent with the weight of the years that have passed, while unconsciously canes and crutches beat a subdued accompaniment.

A scene without parallel and set apart in the life history not only of a nation but of the world.

No poet ever had sublimer theme for song or story, no artist greater inspiration for his brush, and posterity can have no grander example of Christian ideals, than unfolded in the incidents of that eventful afternoon. Pathos heavy with tragedies and sorrows brought fresh to mind, human interest running the whole gamut of the emotions, honor and devotion burying forever the stings of the past, wove together the last broken strands of sectional differences into a superb mantle of fraternal unity, consecrated by sacrifice, made invulnerable to the world by its baptism of mingled tears, to stand forever a star jewelled armor and shield behind which forty-eight states stand as one.

While the 5th Cavalry Band played its beautiful and appropriate selections, thousands of people, men and women who lived through the anguish of that war, their children and grandchildren, with scores of veterans and their friends, gathered around the white swathed statue contributed by the women of the South, the United Daughters of the Confederacy. Most fitting, it was, that this gift, consecrated to the devotion and sacrifice of the Southern women who sent their loved ones into battle for what they believed was right, that the President General of the Daughters of the Confederacy, Mrs. Daisy McLaurin Stevens, should have the honor of presenting it to the Nation. Also a happy coincidence that the President of the United States who accepted it in the name of a reunited nation as a pledge both of civil peace and a guarantee of inseparable union, should claim the South as his birthplace and the North as his residence and place of education.

Every step in the impressive program emphasized the spirit of the occasion, the union of the North and the South in honoring together the soldiers of both Federal and Confederate armies, who, even while fighting, shared their food and drink and in death sleep side by side in the nation's cemetery. Hence, both General Washington Gardner of Albion, Michigan, Commander in Chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, and General Bennett Young of Louisville, Kentucky, Commander of the United Confederate Veterans, sat side by side on the platform, and they in turn, as spokesmen for the great armies participants in the most desperate and tragic war the world has ever seen, told of the depth of reunion that has bound them together to stand shoulder to shoulder against all the world for country's sake.

While these, the leaders of the Blue and the Gray, gave voice to their pæans of peace from the same platform, the veterans of both armies mingled together and gave the stamp of truth to the words of their commanders.

The splendid orations are too long to be printed here in full and the brief extracts which follow convey but a slight idea of the thrilling eloquence of the speakers.

After the exercises were opened by prayer by the Reverend Randolph McKim, pastor of Epiphany church, General Young, the first speaker, gave a beautiful expression of the real meaning of the ceremony. He said: "This monument is a history, a pledge and a prophecy. As a history it memorializes the devotion of a people to a cause that was lost; as a pledge it gives assurance that North and South have clasped across a fratricidal grave; as a prophecy it promises a blessed future in which sectional hate shall be fully transmuted into fraternity and good will."

General Gardner left nothing to be desired in the manner in which he grasped the hand of fellowship extended across the battle-fields of the war and responded to the sentiments expressed. He emphasized the idea of the memorial thus: "There is room in the hearts of the people of all of the land for cherished recollections of the valorous dead, and, at the same time, for the most unfaltering love and loyalty and devotion to the Union of all of the states. Without the existence of the former we should be disposed to doubt the sincerity or steadfastness of the latter.

"The Holy City" was then rendered as a cornet solo.

Colonel Robert E. Lee, Jr., son of the Confederate General, followed in a masterly oration, which delivered in splendid vibrating tones, reached and enthralled every eager listener. Colonel Lee's personality would keep any audience in rapt attention, but upon this occasion, his very presence upon this spot, adding his plea for devotion to the one flag and his eulogies to the dead of both sides, within sight of his ancestral home, made an appeal to the sensibilities of his hearers, such as few orators are ever able to accomplish and, from the first word he uttered to his inspiring rendition of the flag poem, he had the closest attention and the most rousing applause. Colonel Lee's whole address seemed inspired and the message that he gave must surely go down in history in company with other deathless oratorical appeals for the inspiration of posterity.

Colonel Lee termed the Civil War, "the Great American Paradox, a quarrel in which both sides were right. The North had no doubt about her position and the South knew she was right. Strange spectacle this, that even the sledge hammer of time could have welded such diametrically opposed positions and yet not strange when we consider the justice, patriotism and greatness of the whole American people."

Colonel Hilary A. Herbert, president of the Arlington Confederate Memorial Association, who was Secretary of the Navy in Cleveland's administration, summed up the history of the Monument in his speech. It is to Colonel Herbert's energy and unfailing persistence, that this project was carried through to such a magnificent consummation. But it is to the soldier president, William McKinley, that honor should primarily be given, since he gave expression to the following sentiments at Atlanta, in 1898, just after the Spanish War, in which the South had shouldered her full share of fighting.

President McKinley then said: "And the time has now come, in the evolution of public sentiment, under the providence of God, when in the spirit of fraternity, we should share with you in the care of the graves of the Confederate soldiers."

Two years later, on motion of Senator Hawley of Connecticut, an act was passed to gather into one section of the National Cemetery, the bodies of all Confederate soldiers then scattered around through this district. So the Confederate soldier found a place in Arlington, and in 1906 Secretary of War Taft gave permission for the erection of the monument and an organization for that purpose was effected among Southerners in the District of Columbia. After a year's work the Daughters of the Confederacy took up the task and for years the joint committees labored untiringly to accumulate the funds necessary. In 1913 the corner stone was laid, President Taft participating, and then the question of a sculptor had to be settled. Among the world famous artists there happened to be one, a Virginian and a Confederate soldier, who in 1864 was a cadet at the Virginia Military Institute and rendered distinguished service at the battle of New Market. This was Sir Moses Ezekiel, who in the years following the close of the Civil War had found fame, fortune, and even title, abroad, through his art, as Queen Margherita of Italy knighted him. To him the committee turned with the hope that the traditions of the land of his birth would draw from his art that which they desired the statue to express, and he succeeded far beyond their hopes for his statue is superb in conception and inspiring in effect.

"There it stands," Colonel Herbert exclaimed, "Pedestal and all in bronze. Its leading idea is honor to the dead, and peace everlasting, among the living. The heroic-sized figure with her right hand holding a laurel wreath to crown the dead, her left resting on a plowshare, on which is a sickle, is the South. In the figures around the pedestal, every phase of life in the Confederacy is typified. The young wife buckling on her husband's sword, the blacksmith forging his own weapon, the father parting from his child in the arms of its old mammy—and prominently may be noted a stricken figure leaning on the Constitution for support."

Colonel Herbert paid a glowing tribute to the old Federal Constitution and instructed Mrs. Daisy McLaurin Stevens to hand the monument over to the head of the government to be cared for by it forever.

Then came the dramatic moment of the day, when at a word from Colonel Herbert, his eleven-year-old grandson, Paul Herbert Micou, who had been selected for the unveiling ceremony, twitched a cord that opened the white draperies around the peerless statue. As they fell away, to the notes of the bugle call, and the magnificent work of bronze stood revealed in all of the warm rich beauty that brilliant sunlight can bring forth from gleaming metal, the assemblage for an instant held its breath in sheer rapture of appreciation of the artist's skill and then came the applause which nearly deadened the salute of twenty-one guns. What a memory for Sir Moses Ezekiel, the sculptor to carry away with him.

Mrs. Daisy McLaurin Stevens, President General of the United Daughters of the Confederacy then made a most graceful speech of presentation at the conclusion of which, Col. Herbert presented her with a great bunch of roses, which she in turn presented to President Wilson.

Despite the rumbling thunder and the vivid flashes of lightning that by this time had grown so threatening, President Wilson made a most fitting speech of acceptance of the statue on the behalf of the government and summed up the reunion of the two sections. Although his talk was originally intended to be brief, he was obliged to cut it shorter still as the storm suddenly broke over the unprotected heads of the gathering with the wild fury of a small cyclone. There was no time to conclude the program which included the placing of magnificent floral tributes upon both the new memorial and the Monument to the unknown Federal dead and the benediction.

Sir Moses Ezekiel, who was present at the unveiling exercises told the meaning of the statue very briefly:

"The intention is that it is a peace monument. Without forgetting the sacrifices and the heroism of the South and emphasizing the fact that we were fighting for a constitutional right and not to uphold slavery, I have attempted to have the dominant idea, the future and not the past, that the intention of the South is to rest the future on her industry and her agriculture and let the past go, but not be forgotten.

"With this idea, the large figure at the top represents the South, one hand, holding a wreath for the past, but with the right hand resting on the handles of a plow. The smaller figures below represent the sacrifices, the devotion, the heroism of all classes of the South in upholding and fighting for what they passionately believed to be the right. On the base of the monument are the words:

"'They shall turn their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks!'"

The completed monument including the base or plinth and the thirty-two life-size figures, all in full relief, surrounding it, are all of bronze. It stands upon a foundation of beautiful dark gray, highly polished, Woodstock granite. The figures illustrate in striking manner the enthusiasm that animated the South when the tocsin of war was sounded, and in detail these illustrate every phase of the heroism and sacrifices of the period.

The inscriptions are:

"To Our Dead Heroes
By
The United Daughters of the Confederacy
"They have beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks."
Victrix causa Diis placuit, sed victra Catoni.
"Not for fame; not for place, or for rank; not lured by ambition or goaded by necessity; but in simple obedience to duty as they understood it, these men suffered, sacrificed all, dared all—and died."

The Pretty Girls' Club

Conducted by Katherine Booth

How About Your Waist?

I HAVE discovered a secret, members of the Pretty Girls' Club!—that most of us would put up with pudgy ankles, and corns, and chilblains, and even hair that was not all we desired to have it, and perhaps a freckle or two on the bridge of our noses, if we could only have a pretty and supple waist, and shoulders and bust that complied with all the laws of beauty.

Tell the truth, now!—is there one of you who doesn't long for a pretty waist and graceful shoulders? Of course not! So what we are going to do, this month, is to get to work and make our waists and shoulders over a little nearer to our heart's desire.

A pretty waist is one which is neither shaped like an hour-glass nor overlaid with fat. It should be supple, so that the body bends gracefully, and gives the suggestion and buoyancy of lightness with every movement.

DEVELOPING A PRETTY WAIST. FIG. 1.

If this effect is to be achieved, the waist must be given daily and systematic exercise, so the muscles may lose all stiffness, and any surplus fat be disposed of. Strange as it may seem, the same waist exercise will reduce a fat waist and build up a too thin one. This is because exercise sets the blood circulating healthfully, and healthy circulation means normal conditions.

Therefore, whether you be thick-waisted or as thin as thin can be, practise the following exercise conscientiously for five minutes, night and morning:

To Reduce or Build up Waist

Take a deep breath, then, standing with heels together, chin up, shoulders slightly back, place hands on hips, thumbs toward the back, fingers forward. Now, without bending the knees, bend forward from the waist as far as you can without undue strain, expelling the breath slowly as you do so. Return to upright position, rest a moment, then bend backward at the waist (Fig. 1), inhaling as you do so. The knees will have to bend for this movement. Bend as far as possible; then return to position, exhaling.

With each day's practise of this exercise, you will find the waist grow in suppleness and will be able to bend farther and farther in either direction. The carriage of the body will be immensely improved in a short time as well as the symmetry and suppleness of the waist.

Another excellent exercise which will not only help you to acquire a pretty waist, but beautifully molded hips, should be included in your morning and evening practise hour; but allow a few minutes' rest between the different exercises:

For Graceful Hips and Waist

Standing as before, advance the right foot twice its length, or a little more. It should be a good long step in front of the other foot. Now, lift the arms above the head, palms out, the sides of thumbs touching, and with a quick movement throw the arms out and down to touch the floor at the side of the left foot. Do not bend the left knee, although the right may be slightly bent. Now, resume the upright position, breathing in as you do so. Repeat, expelling the breath as you throw the arms out and down, drawing it in as you rise. After a couple of minutes, change the position of the feet, putting the left foot forward, and throwing the arms to the side of the right foot.

I can confidently assure my girls that if they will give this stingy little ten minutes night and morning to the work of remodeling the waist which isn't just as they would like, that they will both look and feel like new persons inside of a month.

Let me whisper a secret!—this will work almost as much of a miracle in your complexion as your figure, as it will set the eliminative and assimilative organs working away like good industrious servants.

Of course, we won't be satisfied to just stop at waists and hips, will we, girls? We have those shoulders to think of, for I am quite sure we are of one mind on this subject, and that everyone of us would like gracefully rounded shoulders, with no hollows and no thick little cushions of fat. Very well, then, we must get to work and add another five minutes to our morning boudoir exercises!

For Symmetry of Shoulders

Standing as before, stretch the arms out in front on a line with the shoulders and parallel to each other. Now, close the fingers in a half fist, bend the elbows quickly, and jerk the shoulders back (Fig. 2.), being careful not to let the elbows drop below the level of the shoulders. As you bring the arms out in front of you again, draw in a deep breath, and expel this gradually as you jerk back the shoulders.

This exercise is excellent for the girl who is flat-chested or has weak lungs—and she will be delighted to know, that in building up her lungs she will be enlarging her chest walls and this in time will add an inch or two to her bust measurement.

After a week of this exercise, substitute another one whose object is to teach the shoulders to carry the head lightly and gracefully, and to strengthen the muscles of neck and shoulders which have this work to do. This might be called a lazy girl's exercise, since it can be taken lying on the floor.

Exercise for Graceful Carriage of Head

Lie flat on the stomach, with elbows bent and at right angles to the shoulders, arms folded under the chest. Now, press hard against the floor with the folded arms, and lift head and neck. Do not throw head back, but keep chin drawn down toward the neck and merely lift neck, head and all without tilting head at all. Do not lift the body from the floor—only the neck and head. Now, relax all muscles and rest, then repeat; relax, repeat, from eight to ten times.

Does fifteen minutes, night and morning, girls, seem like an awful lot of time to spend? Well, let me tell you something! When you get to be thirty, those fifteen minutes will have kept you young and fresh; if you have not had them, you will begin to wish woefully that you had been wise enough to take Time by the forelock and make him behave himself while it was still possible.

Isn't it possible at thirty? Well, yes—it is! And at forty and at fifty, even! For we can do lots of remodeling at any age. But if we are wise enough to begin it at eighteen, we need never have creaky joints, or ungainly shoulders, or pudgy waists, or fat double chins. "A stitch in time saves nine"—and a few minutes' daily exercise keeps away many bugaboos of beauty, while lending grace and suppleness to every movement of the body and building up the figure into one attractive whole.

Just let that thought sink into your minds, won't you, little maids of mine? And let's be as pretty as we can, as long as we can—and that's almost to the very end of all the years which make up a happy life.

I'm counting on you to practise every exercise faithfully and joyously every day of the coming month—and the months that are to follow.

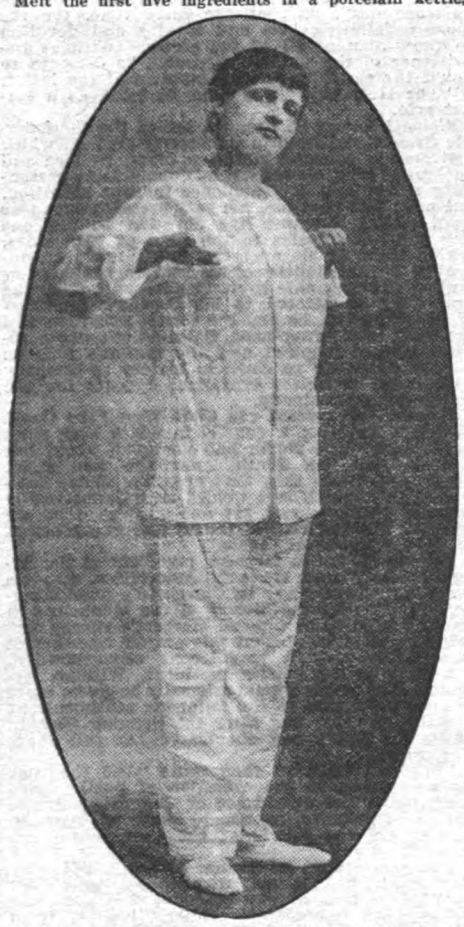
And I'm not going to be disappointed, am I?

Answers to Questions

Country Lassie.—Do you brush your hair sufficiently? If it is oily near the scalp but brittle elsewhere, probably you do not brush it enough to get the oil distributed. Give the hair one hundred strokes every night, the way our grandmothers used to do. The soap jelly shampoo is the best for you, but be very careful about rinsing. If you leave any soap in the hair, it causes dandruff and makes the hair harsh and dry. The best thing for your scalp is massage. Every night, before going to bed, let down the hair, then, slipping the fingers in next to the scalp, press them firmly and move the skin back and forth on the skull. Do not move the fingers back and forth on the skin, but instead let them move the skin. Do this all over the head, every night. It makes the scalp healthy. Then follow by brushing the hair. Are you using curling irons? Stop it at once, if you are, as they dry up the hair. And how is your general health? Your hair cannot be healthy if your body is underweight or if you are at all rundown. Feed and care for the body well, and be sure the eliminative functions are working properly, if you want healthy hair.

Brown Eyes.—Yes, the soap you mention will be all right for the Epsom Salts paste; and you should take a morning bath as usual, after having used the paste the night before.

E. M. B., Lonesome Girl, Walla Walla, F. B.—The Portugal Bust tonic is made by boiling two oranges for four hours in ten ounces of olive oil in a double boiler. Thereafter a piece of orange should be rubbed lightly over the breast at night, using a circular motion, and continuing for several minutes.



Inez.—Yes, peroxide and ammonia will remove superfluous hair. If the skin feels a little irritated from it at any time, rub in some cold cream, and stop the treatment for a couple of days, resuming again. If the skin is very sensitive you can dilute the ammonia. If your mole is flat you may try salicylic acid and moisten with alcohol or glycerine and apply to the mole for half an hour. These applications, with some days between, sometimes removes a small flat mole. For a fleshy protuberant mole, tie a thread tight around the base. It will blacken and finally, after some days, fall off.

N. W.—I am sorry I cannot answer your letter by mail. Scrub the face with hot soapy water and a camel's-hair complexion brush every night before retiring, using Castile or any other pure toilet soap. Be careful to rinse the face thoroughly, as soap left on injures the skin. Any good cold cream is satisfactory for massage. Here is a formula for the Orange-flower Skin Food:

Orange-Flower Skin Food

Spermaceti, one half ounce; white wax, one half ounce; sweet almond oil, two ounces; lanoline, one ounce; cocoanut oil, one ounce; tincture of benzoin, three drops; orange-flower water, one ounce.

Melt the first five ingredients in a porcelain kettle, take from fire, add the benzoin and the orange-flower water, fluffing it with an egg beater until cold. Probably you have been using too strong soap and not rinsing the face thoroughly. Rub cold cream in every night before retiring. You do not need any very complicated movements. If you will remember to rub the cheeks up, never down, and to go round and round the eye with the tips of the fingers, and to massage the flesh under the chin back from the point of the chin, and to make little circular movements, with the fingers pressed together, over the temples and forehead and cheeks, you will get on all right. The main thing is to get the circulation started up. When you are through, wipe off any surplus cream with a wad of absorbent cotton. It will be a good plan for you to rub in cold cream in the daytime before applying powder, but be sure to rub it in thoroughly and to wipe the face with a towel before adding the powder. Be careful to avoid sweets, do not eat between meals, drink eight to ten glasses of water a day, and get some outdoor exercise every day.

Black Eyes—If your skin is too oily, your eliminative functions are probably out of order. Take a good dose of Castor oil, then be careful about food, and drink plenty of water daily. See directions to "N. W." about caring for the face at night. You need more exercise. Follow those you will find in these columns from month to month, and get as much of outdoor sports as you can. Walk a great deal—real brisk, healthy walking, not a polite little stroll down Main Street. You know what I mean, don't you, dear? Stop the vinegar and saltpeter and, instead, take the Castor oil and exercise. Good luck.

Eva.—There is no speedy road to development of the bust. It takes many patient weeks as a rule. See my answer to "C. J. D." for an excellent bust tonic. Is the rest of your body well developed? If not, why not put yourself on the Milk Diet for a couple of months? The bust would enlarge under the treatment and the whole body would be benefited. I have given directions for it many times, so I presume you know just how to take it.

D. L. R.—I do not think the treatment you suggest would develop the bust, but see my answer to "E. M. B." for a suggestion.

C. J. D.—Galega is another name for Goat's Rue used in the Vaucaire Bust tonic. Ask your druggist for it by that name. Here is the formula:

Vaucaire Bust Tonic

Liquid extract of galega (goat's rue), ten grams; lacto-phosphate of lime, ten grams; tincture of fennel, ten grams; simple syrup, four grams. The dose is two soupspoonfuls in water before every meal.

I. L. C.—Yes, I think the pulley exercise would be excellent to reduce the bust. Here are the directions:

Pulley Exercise to Reduce Bust

Fasten a fully equipped pulley exerciser to the side of the wall at the height of about seven or eight feet from the floor. Then standing with your back to the wall and about four or five feet away from the wall, grasp the rope ends and allow the pulley weights to pull your hands up and back as far as possible. Now strike out and down with considerable force, as if you were going to hit someone. Repeat. Practise from five to ten minutes a day. Another excellent aid to reduction is to wrap the bust in rubber sheeting. You can buy this by the yard, and cut a strip wide enough to extend above and below the bust and long enough to go around the body. Draw it over the bust and fasten with strips of adhesive plaster which you can buy in small rolls for five or ten cents, at the drug-store. This makes you perspire and so reduces the flesh.

E. C. B.—If you are only nineteen, do not worry about your undeveloped bust. It will round out beautifully later. In the meantime, take all the vigorous exercise you can. If you are near water, learn to swim and row; if not, play tennis or just ordinary ball, or anything which exercises your arms. See my answer to "I. L. C." for an exercise you should practise. Do not wear tight clothes, use your arms vigorously in every way possible, practise standing straight and breathing deeply, and in a few months you will probably write me that your figure is just as it should be.

G. McP.—See answer to "I. L. C." Yes, splashing the bust with cold water is good for it, as it tones up the flesh and makes it firm.

Althea.—Scalp massage is the best possible means to induce your hair to grow. See answer to "Country Lassie."

Slender Blue Eyes.—Try using bone hairpins if the wire ones are breaking the hair. Let your locks down at night, and brush and braid it before retiring. If it is uneven, clip the ends half an inch or an inch. Probably you mean it is so broken that it roughens up with short ends. There is nothing you can do about this except to take good care of it now and the short ends in time will grow long. You need to gain about twelve or fifteen pounds, if you only weigh one hundred and twelve pounds, and are five feet five inches tall. Drink lots of water, eight to ten glasses a day, and see that the eliminative functions act freely and fully daily. Eat plenty of potatoes, good rich milk, cream, butter and lots of green vegetables and fresh fruits. How old are you? If you are under twenty, your weight will no doubt increase naturally; if you are over twenty, I suggest the Milk Diet for you.

Box 326.—Even the busiest of us have time for a few minutes' exercise, night and morning, and I cannot hold forth much hope of your increasing your bust satisfactorily unless you are willing to give a little time to it. There are, alas! no short cuts to beauty of figure. You say you could not go on with the Milk Diet on account of interfering with your work. Can't you manage it in this way: two glasses of hot water on rising (6.30). Fifteen minutes later, two glasses of milk, every mouthful "chewed;" half an hour later, two glasses more; half an hour later two glasses more. This would be 8.15. At twelve take two glasses more, at twelve-thirty two glasses more; at one o'clock two glasses, at five-thirty two glasses, two glasses at six o'clock, two glasses at six-thirty. Then if you could get one "dose" of two glasses in the middle of the morning, and one or two glasses in the middle of the afternoon, you could do without any solid food, and would gain quite rapidly.

Edna, Sheridan.—You need to build up in weight—should weigh one hundred and fifty pounds. This will help your bust. Can't you put yourself on the milk diet for two months—it would be the best thing in the world for you. Gentle massage of the bust nightly, using a circular motion, and anointing the hands with cold cream, or using cocoa-butter, will help the contour of the bust, and if you will practise dashing cold water on the breasts, it will help to firm them.

Helen.—A good way to plumpen the cheeks is to open the mouth to its widest extent stiffen cheek muscles, then slowly close the mouth to the count of eighteen. Practise this exercise for ten minutes every day and I think you will soon have plump cheeks.

Bashful.—Perhaps you are self conscious. This frequently causes flushing of the face. Tight lacing, snug belts, shoes, collars and cuffs are also responsible for a red face. If you are careful not to eat rich food, such as cake, pie, pudding, preserves and gravies and will drink freely of cool water during the day, you will not be near so apt to redden on each and every occasion.

Poultry Farming for Women

Should they be together when the female is setting? I have read COMFORT for ten years.

A.—I have used a male canary for breeding when seven years old. The birds should be kept together, because the male bird assists in caring for the young ones. From the time your old birds pair, feed a little mash every day, made of hard-boiled egg, chopped fine, stale bread-crumbs, and hulled oats ground fine. Just moisten this with milk which has been scalded, or with beaten egg. After the little ones are hatched, give mash twice a day, and add a little rape seed to it. Boil the rape for a few minutes, then rinse through cold water and allow to dry. The corner of the cage where the nest is situated should be partly covered with a piece of baize or cloth, as a setting bird dislikes the full light. If you are using a large breeding cage, it is well to have two nest boxes, as the hen often starts to build a second nest when the first batch is about fifteen days old. Canary eggs take fourteen days to incubate. The youngsters can be removed to a separate cage when four weeks old.

H. M. B.—At what temperature will a fowl's comb and wattles freeze, and what causes the fluff to disappear and leave that part of the pullet bare? Mine are the American Dominique, and I have several of them that are that way, but all appear healthy and are first-class.

A.—Fowls' combs and wattles may freeze at any temperature below the freezing point. Large comb fowls which are shut up in close houses at night are especially susceptible to frosty winds in the early morning. If you notice a bird with a frozen comb, put it in a room which will warm up slowly, and where the direct rays of the sun cannot strike it, and if there is snow on the ground, hold a little of it on the comb and wattles, so that renewal of circulation is very slow. If you don't happen to notice the birds until the swelling has set in, confine it in a coop or room, and then rub with the following ointment: Three tablespoonfuls of vaseline, one tablespoonful of glycerine, and half a teaspoonful of turpentine. If used at once and persistently, it will usually prevent the birds losing the frozen parts.

THE low neck waists now being worn so extensively by women of fashion demand an ornament for the neck. Beads, lavallieres and neck chains are all stylish but the newest thing out are these handsome black velvet neck bands. They come in several different widths and the narrow width is the most popular, the one shown herewith being a quarter of an inch wide and hung with a dainty gold-filled sliding pendant set with four small pearls, an imt. Amethyst and one large imt. Baroque pearl. The band fastens together with a new gold-filled catch that is very easy to clasp and unclasp, although it is impossible for it to unclasp accidentally. These neck bands are very becoming on any girl or woman regardless of her complexion or the color of her hair and eyes and this is the reason why more of them are now being worn than any other kind of neck ornaments, also they are more attractive when worn with the fashionable roll collars. We will make any woman or girl a present of this handsome and stylish velvet neck band upon the terms of the following special the lesson is not learned until he gets out in the world and harsher hands than mother's are the teachers. But oppression breeds anarchy just as truly in the home as in the government. You cannot let a child run his own course for the first few years and then "whip it out of him," no matter how much you set your jaw. When the baby cries for something not advisable for him to have then is the time to teach him that crying does no good and if he lies on the floor and screams, a spanking then will save him of hard knocks from the world, later.

Club Offer. For a club of two 15-month subscriptions at 25 cents each, or one three-year subscription (not your own) at 50 cents, we will send you this latest style velvet neck band free by Parcel Post prepaid. Premium 7292.

Do to others as you would have them do to you, with your children and remember when you are trying to break their strong wills by whipping, that quite frequently a child has more real sense than his mother and no amount of beating will make him respect a red-faced woman who screams at him, mother or no mother.

Sisters, this is not a sermonette it is a real full-blown sermon, but I promise not to do it again.

I enjoy your descriptions so will tell you how I look and then move over. Am five feet two inches tall, weigh one hundred and twenty-three pounds, black hair and blue eyes.

I enjoy every bit of COMFORT, and there is nothing in it that makes us blush for our children to read which is more than can be said about some of the higher-priced magazines.

We all have our troubles, great or small and ours is that our oldest daughter, fourteen, is deaf. Not entirely, but so as to be unable to attend school with good results, as she doesn't speak plainly. Can you tell me of something to help her?

MRS. FLORA HINDMAN.

RITTA, FLORIDA.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

I have been reading the many interesting letters in COMFORT and enjoy them so much, that I thought perhaps others would be interested in a description of my home and surroundings.

I live on the south shore of Lake Okeechobee, in the Everglades of Florida. This lake is forty miles wide and sixty miles long, abounding in fish and wild ducks. The Everglades of Florida are a vast prairie extending from the south shore of Lake Okeechobee to Biscayne Bay; this prairie is covered with a clean growth of saw grass reaching a height of six feet. Before the canals were opened, during the rainy season it was overflowed about three months each year from the water of Lake Okeechobee, as this large lake had no outlet.

Since the state has undertaken the draining of the Glades they have cut four canals, The Ft. Lauderdale Canal, on the east, is sixty-four miles long, fifty feet wide, and ten feet deep. The Miamia Canal, on the south is ninety miles long, fifty feet wide, and ten feet deep. There are also the Hillsbourgh and The Three Miles Canal, so now they have the waters of the lake under control.

The soil of the Everglades is a rich muck; according to the government report the richest in the world. This soil varies from two to fourteen feet deep.

We are in the winter garden district, below frost line. In midwinter we grow all kinds of vegetables. We are growing now, Feb. 2nd, on our place potatoes, beans, cabbage, corn, peppers, lettuce, radishs, peas, onions, etc. Of course this time of year we can get the highest prices for them. For fruits we have ripe strawberries, bananas, oranges and grapefruit. In this climate we plant and grow vegetables every month in the year. The average temperature is 86. The sea breezes from the Atlantic on the East and Gulf on the West keep it about the same all of the time. I have lived in five different states and I think Florida is almost perfect, what I would call a paradise on earth, as nearly as one can make it.

This country is full of birds that winter here from the North; each morning they awake me with their songs. With this beautiful lake of sixty miles of water spread out in front of you, you can imagine what it is to get a glimpse of the sea of glass which is before the throne in the midst of the paradise of God.

South of the house is a thick growth of custard apple-trees, covered with moon vines and air plants; underneath these trees are a natural fernery. The ostrich fern grows six feet tall, besides other beautiful ferns; as for flowers, Florida you know is noted for her sunshine and flowers. We have the daily rose which is a continual bloomer and others too numerous to mention.

This part of Florida is a new country just opened to settlers. Three years ago this was under water. A year ago we had only about twenty people in the Everglades; now we have about five hundred settlers and more coming all of the time.

Wishing all the sisters success and happiness, I remain a COMFORT sister. MRS. W. S. DOWELL.

MUNCIE, IND.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND COMFORT SISTERS:

May I return again after many years' absence? I'm glad to get COMFORT again and hear from old friends.

I am married now, but am not going to tell my maiden name as I want to make friends again under my new name.

I have been traveling around for nearly three years, all over the United States and Canada, and I have seen many beautiful places, and I wish some of the lonely shut-ins could have accompanied me. I am glad to have been able to travel but I'm happier now at home with COMFORT to cheer me.

For constipation try eating one or two figs mornings before breakfast, or a few more figs if chronic, this is good for children, as all love figs; also a spoonful wheaten bran, beaten well in glass of water is a simple and quite effective remedy.

For caked breasts try baking two or more large potatoes, put in a woolen stocking or cloth, crush soft, and apply to breast hot as can be borne; change frequently until relieved.

As spring and house-cleaning nears, try making your own furniture polish of equal parts of linseed oil, turpentine, spirits of wine, and cider or any good vinegar. Apply with soft cloth and dust with dry duster.

To make plain white calcimine use one pound white glue, twenty pounds English whiting; dissolve glue by boiling in three pints of water; dissolve whiting in water to make a thick batter; add glue and one cup soft soap, or bar laundry soap melted in as little water as possible; dissolve alum, size of hen's egg, mix all thoroughly, let cool before using. If too thick to spread nicely, add more water. For blue tints, add five cents' worth Prussian blue, and a little Venetian red for lavender color and same amount of blue with the red. For a peach bloom color, add the red without the blue. This makes enough to give four ceilings, sixteen feet square, two coats. This will not rub off like whitewash made of lime.

Hoping I'm forgiven for a long letter, I am, Sincerely yours for COMFORT, MRS. K. TAKAYAMA.

SHELBY, MISS.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

If you dear sisters will please move over just a bit and make room for an old, but silent reader of our paper I will try to tell you a few things about this part of the Delta.

We raise almost anything in the vegetable line for our own use; cotton and corn are the main field crops. The soil is very black and heavy with but very little sand. It has been raining almost all the time for the past two weeks and if any of the sisters live in the Delta you know what kind of a time I am having with mud.

This is our third year here, but we haven't learned to love the place yet. My husband is manager of a plantation and his work keeps him away from the house a great deal of the time and I spend a number of lonesome hours.

As so many are writing on the subject of stepmothers I will say a few words. There has been a stepmother in my father's home for five years. Of course no one can ever fill our dear mother's place, but is it not much better to meet our stepmother with a smile and words of encouragement than so often to remind her that she is unwelcome? I know there are some stepmothers who are very harsh and exacting, who never give the children a kind word and expect them to act like grown ups in every respect, while there are other stepmothers who consider the happiness of their stepchildren as they do their own and I am sure they never fail to be appreciated. In many cases the children are often to blame for their bad treatment by not showing due respect to their stepparents. Stepmothers, let me beg you to be as kind to the motherless child who is in your care as you would have some other stepmother be to your child.

How many of the sisters like to crochet? I am only a beginner but spend a number of spare moments thus employed.

I also am a great lover of flowers and am planning to have a pretty garden soon.

I can surely sympathize with the sisters who do not live near enough their parents to visit often. We live two hundred and fourteen miles from my husband's people and about two hundred and fifty miles from my people. We have very few neighbors and I know some of you city sisters are going to open your eyes with wonder when I say that in the past two years only four different women have been to see me.

Mrs. J. H. Anders of Centerville, Miss., I feel almost as if I were acquainted with you as my childhood home was near that place.

Miss Marie P. Kearney, I agree with you that a man or boy who drinks should not be scorned and hated, but talked to and tried to be made to see the error of his way, but it does make me tired to hear a person say, "I have tried but just can't quit drinking or smoking." Don't you believe that where there is enough will power any bad habit can be overcome?

I, too, am interested in the training of children as we have one little boy, nearly three years old. I have begun to teach him his letters and to spell short words and do you think we can begin to teach our little ones good manners too soon? It sounds so sweet to hear my boy say, "No thank you," and "If you please," while at the table and "Excuse me," when he is through.

I am twenty-four years old; five feet six inches tall; have brown hair and eyes; dark complexion and weigh one hundred and sixty pounds. Have been married eight years.

A happy and successful year to all.

MRS. Z. C. WILKINSON.

TOMPKINSVILLE, KY.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

Here I come again and for the third time. This dear old paper is home to me. "Home is where the heart is," for my heart has been wrapped up in the interests of COMFORT since October, 1907, when I first subscribed for it and joined the League; since that time I have never missed reading a single number through and through. I read all and everything, I never miss Crumbs of Comfort for there I gather many golden grains of thought such as "God may delay, but He never forgets." At times we think our prayers are not answered, as soon as we'd like, but they are, in His own good time, if we can say with a spirit and understanding,

"Father, I know that all of my life
Is portioned out for me,
And the changes that are sure to come
I do not fear to see;
But I ask thee for a present mind
Intent on pleasing thee."

I cannot tell which department I like best, the Sisters' Corner or Uncle Charlie's, they are both indispensable; there is so much good being done in the world as a result of both departments. Time and eternity will tell. Poor Uncle Charlie in his afflictions laughs and makes the world laugh with him. A monument of prayers has been erected unto the throne of Heaven in his behalf. If I had the expression of Webster, the oratory of Calhoun and the patience of Job perhaps I could tell the good COMFORT has done me. There are some thoughts and raptures of the human heart, that can never be expressed. God alone understands. I dare say I am trying to say what thousands of COMFORT'S shut-ins would say if they could express themselves.

The sisters' letters are like an encyclopedia almost for helps and useful knowledge. I often think I am just an usurper as I get all of the good things and I give nothing in return.

Since my last letter to COMFORT, about four years ago, this town has suffered from a great fire, that destroyed the whole business block, excepting two brick buildings; the oldest hotel was also destroyed. The business outlook was very gloomy for a while; but modern, sanitary structures have risen from the ashes of the old houses. A three-story brick hotel, furnished with water works and all conveniences, vies with those of larger cities; water works are installed in many places of business over the town. We also have an electric light and ice plant which are of inestimable benefit.

This county, Monroe, has taken advantage of the "State Aid" plan for building roads, for the county to issue road bonds, seems the quickest way to build roads; every dollar the county subscribes the state doubles it; our people have paid a big mud tax in the last century.

A short time ago Mrs. Cora Wilson Steward, Superintendent of Rowan county, originated and put into practise the system of "Moonlight Schools." She made such rapid progress in that mountainous school that it has gained state-wide recognition. As a result, "Moonlight Schools" were taught all over the state. The Governor of Kentucky appointed an "Illiteracy Commission" and "Educational Whirlwind Campaign," to wipe illiteracy out of the state by 1920; he asks everyone who can read and write to teach someone who can't. The average attendance of all schools of the state was only 48.32, so, you see there is room for great work to be done. The oldest pupil in the "Moonlight Schools" was eighty-five years old, learning to read so she could read her Bible.

When Kentucky reaches the point sought and women get the vote and vote whisky out of the state, it will have attained a very high state of civilization. "Boot leggers" with "Moonshine" are a great source of trouble here; it certainly will take strenuous efforts to correct the evil.

Can any of the sisters give me any information on Belgian hares and where to get them? Also, what is a tried remedy for roaring in head, caused by indigestion?

May God's richest blessings rest on all, and an extension of life to all the noble workers, angels of mercy to every shut-in. MRS. L. HOPE.

NEW BLOOMFIELD, MO.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

"Oh, what has become of the old-fashioned boy
Who didn't talk back to his pa?
And what has become of the girl—such a joy—
Who didn't know more than her ma?
They have wandered away; they have gone hand in hand,
With the parents who mounted the skids,
Those old-fashioned parents who used to demand
A little respect from their kids."

Mrs. Della Chapman, I quite agree with you, a good spanking does work wonders. If parents required obedience and punished the disobedient we would have less need for reformatories and penitentiaries.

Some children need less discipline than others and while a spanking is the very thing for one child, the next one would be more easily conquered by being made to sit on a chair or stand in the corner.

Someone says, "I'd never do that, I can't punish the little dears." Well, your children show it. A child with an ugly, selfish disposition is dreaded by even those who love the parents. And don't lie to the children. If you promise to "whip Johnnie if he does that again," do it, for he may say, as I heard a boy say, "You won't neither; you always say that, and you don't do it." They know you lie to them. If you promise to give them a piano or pony if they are good, then do it, but never promise or threaten the impossible.

With all good wishes to the sisters and all departments of COMFORT, especially Uncle Charlie,

I am, yours very truly. MRS. O. L. ELLIOTT.

P. S. Please do not write to me, expecting answers.

SENTINEL, OKLA.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

I read the sisters' letters with interest and find so many helpful hints that I want to write and tell them how much I appreciate their help even if I can't send any.

It seems that nearly every family in this part of the country takes COMFORT and everyone speaks of it in the highest terms.

My sympathy goes out to the dear shut-ins and I try to send my "little mite" to help and cheer them.

We live nine miles from Sentinel, our post-office, near a village called Retrop and have one of the best consolidated schools in the state. The building contains seven rooms and an auditorium. We employ six teachers, also a music teacher. In the music room we have a piano where a large class of pupils practise music and learn songs for the benefit of the music loving patrons. In the auditorium we have three hundred and sixty opera chairs; in fact, the entire building is equipped in the most up-to-date manner. Six "High School" wagons convey the pupils to and from school. Everyone seems deeply interested in education.

Of course the boys and girls have their popular games such as baseball, basket ball, etc.

I have four boys—the oldest married and living in Hobart, the others going to school. I read everything regarding boys but I think every mother a law unto herself for, like medicine, what is good for some is poison to others, and we must "doctor" them according to their dispositions. Now for a few hints:

If you have a cold or sore throat and will bathe the face and throat in cold water just as quickly as you can after getting out of bed you will find the treatment will benefit you.

For mothers, if you will make your boys Balkan blouses, buy a pair of suspenders to hold up pants under the blouse and over his union suit and you will save time and trouble to say nothing of the wear and tear of button and buttonholes.

I wish more sisters would write from Oklahoma, as we think this a grand state. MRS. EMMA FLIPPIN.

Best Ways of Doing Things Around the Home

To clean silk, woolen or cotton goods. To clean and revive soiled and faded garments wash them in the following mixture: Grate two good-sized potatoes in a pint of soft water and strain through a coarse cloth. Add about a gallon of water and allow to settle. Pour off the starchy fluid from the sediment and wash the goods well in it; rinse thoroughly, dry and press. Goods cleaned in this way will look like new.

Homemade Cuff Buttons. If you have two pretty buttons exactly alike and don't know just how to use them, sew small pearl buttons fast to the eye and use them for cuff buttons.

To Dye Lace or Thin Silk. Get enough gasoline to cover the goods; in this dissolve enough tube paint to make it the desired shade. Dip and wet the goods thoroughly in this, hang to drip. Press while damp and they will look like new.

Use of soap in embroidery work. The use of white soap in embroidery work is a great help as well as a time-saver. Soap rubbed across the threads which are to be pulled for drawnwork will make them pull more easily. When piercing the material for eyelet work, place the soap under the material, pressing the stiletto through the cloth into the soap; this prevents tearing and stiffens the edge, making it easier for working.

Use alcohol for cleaning piano keys. It will remove every spot on the ivory.

When beating the whites of eggs, add a little salt. This causes them to whip lightly.

Save your peach stones, you will find the kernels excellent for flavoring salads and ices.

ETHEL H. LATOURETTE, White House Sta., N. J.

The tender leaves and small ends of celery should never be thrown away. If dried they are found excellent for flavoring soups.

Copper utensils or brass articles may be thoroughly cleaned to look bright if washed with a solution of salt and vinegar.

Pour boiling water over potatoes and leave fifteen minutes and about half the usual time will be required to bake them.

Remedies

ASTHMA.—Chronic cases have been cured by the following: Sulphur, one half ounce; bruised anise seed, two and one half drams; confection of senna, six drams; syrup of tolu, six drams; mix and take freely every day; or, one or two teaspoons three times a day, or sufficient to keep bowels moving easily.

ASTHMA.—Sulphur, one half ounce; anise seed, one half ounce; senna, one ounce; cream of tartar, one ounce. Mix and give a teaspoon every night, or more often if required. Bathing and hygiene should be carefully attended to.

ECZEMA.—If the secretion is profuse, apply powdered cinchona bark; also a mixture of glycerine, two parts to one of borax. A cold potato poultice, with a small quantity of camphor, has proven most helpful.

CROUP.—Fat bacon applied to the throat, as in sore throat, is recommended as a remedy for croup. Its action can be helped by taking internally a few drops of kerosene oil on sugar.

MRS. BULAH E. ZEIGLER, Arnold, Kans.

SPRAINS.—Apply equal parts of coal oil and camphor, warmed. MRS. W. ROUX, Cloverdale, Cal.

BRIGHT'S DISEASE.—In the spring gather spruce twigs and steep till all the strength is extracted. Drink a small amount once a day.

MRS. L. POOL, Yicka, Cal.

BRIGHT'S DISEASE.—Make pills of pine pitch; take one or two a day. This has been tried and found good. FANNIE HESELTINE, Whitesville, N. Y.

I WANT 200 SALES AGENTS
AT $1,200 TO $3,600 A YEAR

To introduce my new Vacuum and Compress Washing Machine to every home in the country I want 200 additional representatives to begin work at once in their home counties. No experience is required—you can start right now. A labor saver—a time saver—a money saver—a constant helper to every housewife, this wonderful machine practically sells itself at every home without talking or argument being necessary. You risk nothing—everything to gain. This opportunity is placed free in your hands today. You can now secure free territory—drop everything else—take this marvelous little machine as our special representative and MR. L. M. PALMER, Glen Allen, Ala.

Mr. Palmer is one of my agents who started this work without having had any experience at all in selling anything. He thought he would take me at my word and see if this machine would sell itself. He put out 108 on trial—from house to house. Going back to collect, he received one machine and the cash for 107 machines—107 out of 108 sold themselves—his profit $107.00. This same position is now offered to you—you can make this money yourself. Could you ask greater proof than Palmer's record? Then write today and start for yourself.

Make $21 Next Saturday

That's what Ralph Cappa, of Florida, did the first Saturday he worked. Another one of my money making men, T. L. Speakman, of Gainesville, Ala., put out 36 on trial one day and sold every one of them—they sold themselves. Profit $36.00. Can you beat that kind of a seller? Do you want this money for yourself? Do you want to make $3600.00 this year? Then here's your chance—if you act now. Here's your chance to be independent—to be in business for yourself—to make and keep the money you make.

Profits Start First Day.

Business supplies the capital. Nothing to stand in your way. You can do what others are now doing every day—you can make this money. I will help you as I helped G. W. Hickman, of Ga., to make $10.00 the first afternoon. Frank Green made $45.00 first three days. Mrs. L. C. Merrick made $90.00 first three weeks in spare time only. J. H. Goddard made $13 first three hours.

Only $1.50 Selling Price.

And every machine sold on money-back guarantee. A child can use it. Abolishes labor of wash day. Frees women from worry and fatigue. Housewives discard $15 and $20 power machines for it. No competition. Patented. Infringers will be prosecuted. Avoid imitations. Get the WENDELL VACUUM AND COMPRESS WASHER ONLY. Works like magic. Abolishes drudgery. Always ready. The work of this invention is almost unbelieveable—yet true. Listen to the words of Mrs. Thomas Jenkins: "I have been washing clothes for twenty-five years. I have owned all sorts of washers. I now have in my house a costly washer which I have put aside and never use since buying the Wendell Washer. The first day I used the Wendell I washed six tubs of clothes in just thirty-three minutes. One tub consisted of greasy aprons, and other colored clothes, among which was a wool dress skirt. These I examined at the end of five minutes, and to my surprise found them to be perfectly clean. Two tubs were of blankets, and I worked on each tub only three minutes."

Investigate.

Send for complete information today. Learn all about this remarkable new invention and this free new opportunity to make money. No waiting or guessing. The price of only $1.50 makes a sale at every house—cash business at 200 per cent. profit to you.

NO CHARGE FOR TERRITORY—EVERY HOME A CUSTOMER

Send no money—just your name and address, and give the name of your county. Don't delay. Attend to this at once. Do not let someone else get in ahead of you. Territory is going fast. Do your part. Write a letter or postal card today—do it right now.

Sore Mouth in Pigs

LITTLE pigs often suffer from canker sore mouth and die of that disease, when it takes a severe form as it does when the sores become infected. An erroneous bit of advice has been spread throughout the country by some stock and farm papers to the effect that the little sharp teeth found in the mouths of some pigs at birth cause these sores and therefore should be snipped off. The teeth do not cause the sores, but of course they may cause lacerations of the snouts of pigs when fighting, or may lacerate the teats of the sow. They do less harm in that way, however, than may result from their removal by cutting. During the operation the gums become bruised or lacerated and then are readily infected and serious canker sores result. The infective germ is known as the bacillus necrophorus and it is normally present in the manure of hogs and therefore found in all yards and uncleaned pens used by hogs. To prevent canker sores souse the heads of the pigs in warm water containing an ounce of permanganate of potash to the gallon. Do this instantly at birth and repeat daily, if there has been trouble from sores. If a sore starts scrape it clean, rub lightly with lunar caustic pencil or swab it with tincture of iodine once and then with a two per cent solution of permanganate of potash applied once daily with cotton tied on a stick. If a lump or boil starts on the snout swab daily with tincture of iodine, split open when soft, then go on using the iodine tincture. Clean up, disinfect and whitewash the pens before the pigs are born. Black teeth in pigs' mouths do no harm and need not be cut off. If pigs die and black teeth are found present they should not be blamed for the deaths. Some disease is present. Small sharp teeth are most likely to be found in the mouths of pigs from sows that have been fed a rich protein ration during pregnancy. The sow should have light laxative rations, without much corn and with only a moderate amount of protein. Let her have plenty of exercise every day and keep her bowels active.

Wheat with Oats

We find that in some districts farmers are sowing some wheat with their oat seed in spring. They find that the combination tends to stand up better than where oats alone are seeded. The wheat straw is stronger and helps to support the weaker oat straw. Besides this the farmers consider a little wheat a valuable and beneficial addition to the oats for feeding purposes. Two pecks of wheat is the average amount sown with oats and will suffice for the purpose. In so seeding wheat it should be understood that the resultant crop is to be fed at home. It cannot well be sold when wheat is present, nor is it feasible to clean out the wheat. Modern farmers prefer to feed all the grain they raise, if they are farming a comparatively small area of land, and it is such farmers that can afford to mix wheat with oats for feeding purposes. The combination is fine for pigs and poultry and a little wheat will not injure the horses and indeed is beneficial; but wheat cannot safely be fed to horses in any considerable amount. It causes indigestion and has been known to cause fatal colic or severe founder when the horse has broken loose and gorged himself with this grain. Rye is about as bad for the latter troubles and if fed liberally causes indigestion, while barley irritates the skin. These grains therefore should be carefully fed and form by a small part of the ration with oats and wheat bran. Peas and oats sown together will be found to make an admirable green forage crop for dairy cows and the mixture comes in handy when the grass becomes brown and dry in July and August.

When the Foal Comes

Remember to provide an absolutely clean, disinfected, whitewashed and freshly bedded box stall for the reception of the new born foal and when it comes saturate the stump of its navel with tincture of iodine and then dust with slaked lime twice a day until perfectly healed and dried. If this is not done the foal may die of navel and joint disease, or grow up unsound on that account. The mare should have light, laxative rations as foaling time approaches. Let her have plenty of wheat bran and less corn than she has been getting, while oats of course make the best feed for her at this time if she is working, and she should be worked or abundantly exercised right up to the week of foaling. If she runs on grass she will not need bran, but may well have a little oats daily to keep her in good condition. Lush green grass is loosening and not too fattening for the early foaling mare and should be augmented by oats and dry hay to prevent scouring. See that the foal's bowels move promptly at birth and if they do not do so give rectal injections of warm water with the addition of two teaspoonfuls of glycerine per pint. A dose of Castor oil may be given in milk if found necessary. Just as soon as the foal cares to lick it supply oatmeal in a box where the mare cannot feed, and after a time gradually add wheat bran to the oatmeal and when the foal can chew it give a mixture of equal parts of whole oats and wheat bran. If so fed the foal will practically wean himself at five to six months of age and then go on growing profitably if the generous feeding is continued. The most profitable growth is made during the first year of a foal's life and if he is stunted then he never will mature into a full grown horse. Work the mare lightly two weeks after the foal is born and be careful to let the foal suck frequently. Do not let the foal suck when the mare is hot and sweating. Feed her some hay when she comes in and milk away most of the milk until she cools off; then the foal may suck. On general principles it is poor policy to let the foal run to town with the dam, or to accompany her to the field when she is cultivating corn. The foal may run with the mare, however, if she is doing light work, not in a corn field.

Some Short Needful Reminders

Just as soon as time and money allow put in some cement sidewalks about the house yard. It is a shame to let the womenfolk wade in mud and a nuisance to have the men track mud into the kitchen and house. If cement walks cannot well be made, then it is certain that some of lumber should be constructed. They do not need to be expensive, but they will pay in comfort and cleanliness and make home better and happier for all concerned.

For any sake swat those flies! They are an abomination and a danger. Watch where they come from onto your pie at dinner time. Note how they wipe their feet on your food, or face or bald pate. Remember that those feet swarm with germs of all sorts and that some of them may be the germs of typhoid fever, or some other serious contagion. Do away with their breeding places in manure piles and muck spots. Screen against them wherever possible, and so far as that can be done do away with the places where those pesky mosquitoes breed and multiply. That means every single receptacle for stagnant water, and it pays to pour some crude oil on the ponds and sloughs, where draining cannot well be done.

For the table's sake and the stomach's sake please understand that the garden patch really is the most important bit of land on the farm and therefore the farmer and his hands should be ashamed to see the womenfolk doing the gardening with hand implements. That patch, properly tended, will pay a bigger profit than any similar area on the farm and think what those fresh vegetables mean during hot weather and how anxious the men would be to "make garden" if the women "struck" and attended to their household duties which are more than enough to try and exhaust their strength. Put the garden crops in in long straight rows and cultivate with a horse, or at least supply and use the wheel hose and such like implements which so greatly reduce hand labor in the garden. If the garden is appreciated as it deserves its care will be taken into consideration and be provided for just as well as that of any field on the farm and when that is so the wife and daughters will have no complaint to make.

Spring Planting

May is the month in which the greater share of spring seeding and planting is done in the Northern States.

In the April number of COMFORT'S Modern Farmer we published a table showing temperatures at which seeds germinate and make most rapid growth under favorable conditions. By referring to that table you will note that with many plants it does not pay to put the seed in the ground until it has reached a temperature of 70 degrees. The general rule to follow is:

Don't be in a hurry to plant unless the weather is favorable. Many farmers make the mistake of seeding too early. The seed is put into the ground just after it has reached the point where it will grow but not yet warm enough to grow with vigor. This results in weak, sickly plants without vigor and sufficient vitality to make a good crop. Farmers often notice that crops put in the ground a week or two later produce better yields than those sown early.

Will early sowing injure the seed? Yes. Early sowing will injure the seed in two ways. In the first place it may be just warm enough to start sprouting and then a few days of colder weather come on which will reduce the temperature so much that sprouts cannot grow more. Decay sets in and the seed is spoiled. In the next place the backward weather may keep the young plants growing so slowly that they become weak, sickly and yellow. In the first place the seed is lost, in the second the crop is reduced through slow growth. In either case early sowing won't pay.

Does it ever pay to sow early? In the case of seeds that must lie in the ground some time before germinating it often pays to sow early. In this way the seeding of these crops is out of the way by the time that those crops that had best be planted when the weather is right, need attention. But the farmer should clearly understand the difference between those plants which will be uninjured by early planting and those which will not. For his convenience lists have been prepared as follows:

Seeds that are seldom injured by early planting. Wheat, rye, timothy, red top, bluegrass, and most of the other pasture and meadow grasses.

Seeds that will be uninjured by early sowing provided that no severely cold weather follows. Oats, barley, peas, hemp, flax and most of the early vegetables.

Seeds that should not be planted until both air and ground are warm. Corn, beans, clover, cucumber, melon, pumpkin and all other plants easily damaged by slight frosts.

It must be remembered in every case, however, that it is a safer plan to plant a little late than it is to put seed into a cold soil.

How to Start Early Vegetables

Such plants as cannot be safely planted in the open ground until late in the season may be started in the hot bed, cold frame or in boxes and transplanted then to the open ground as soon as it is in proper condition. This is done on practically every farm in the Northern states with cabbage, celery, tomatoes and like plants. But with another group of plants like cucumber and melons it is seldom practised. Now why is this? Simply because such plants do not transplant easily. Those plants having a large fibrous root system transplant with great ease, but plants like cucumbers and melons, possessing but a single tap root with little branching are very difficult to make grow after transplanting.

How to transplant melons and cucumbers. However, melons and cucumbers and all like plants may be easily handled in the following manner: Plant in small pots and when ready to transplant soak the soil thoroughly with water so that it will not fall apart, slip plant, dirt and all out of the pot by inverting it and giving it a sharp rap and set the whole thing out without in the least disturbing the roots. This is the general method. Now how can it best be practised? Pots are expensive and the method somewhat slow.

Get from the druggist the ordinary paper drinking cup, punch a hole in the bottom and plant seed in it. When ready to transplant, wet and transplant pot and all. Slit the pot down the side in two or three places and spread open so that the roots may escape. Or make pots of old envelopes, soak thoroughly and set out in the same way. The heavy soaking and later rains will destroy the paper or it may be easily torn off. Or use the little paper side dishes for nuts that are sold for table use, for pots in the same way.

The best method of all, however, is the sod method. In the summer previous to the year in which it is to be used cut squares of sod about three inches thick and pile it up in a compact heap to decay. The next spring plant seeds in little three-inch squares of this sod and when ready transplant plants, sod and all, to the open ground. By using proper care with any of the above methods, plants that are usually very difficult to transplant may be grown early and placed in the field as soon as outside conditions are fit.

Notes on Summer Work

If it has not been done the wire fences on the farm should be safely "grounded" before thunder storms take their annual grist to the sorrow of the improvident farmer. Hundreds of farm animals are each year killed by lightning conducted to them by wire fences. We have seen pictures of as many as twenty fine cattle lying dead beside a wire fence after a big thunder storm. The grounding is not difficult to do. Attach a copper wire to each wire of the fence by stapling and after attaching the free end of the wire to a zinc plate bury it in ground that will remain damp. Go deep enough to make dampness a certainty. Do the grounding of the wires at intervals of not over twenty rods and ten rods would be better, although some farmers think such short intervals unnecessary. The way we look at it is that it is better to err on the side of safety, placing the grounding wires close together as the expense is comparatively small and protection of the highest importance. At the same time it is well to remind our readers that lightning rods should be placed upon the house and barns by an expert who is known as educated and honest in the business. Make sure, too, that the fire and tornado policies are in good standing; or insure the buildings against fire and tornadoes, if that has not been done. It is a bad business to find the tornado policy lapsed when the big barn has blown to smithers.

While fences should be put in good repair in early spring, before plowing becomes possible, or in fall when other works has been finished, the experienced farmer carries an emergency kit with him when he walks over his broad acres and does many a little repair stunt that counts mightily in preventing accidents and wasteful pillaging of animals. It is a good plan to "walk the fences" at least once a week. A staple in time saves a good horse from getting a loose wire wrapped around his ankle to saw and wound. It also is necessary work as the neighbor's bull may break through and the "breechy" bull commonly is a scrub and his visits liable to do dire damage in the herd. Mending fences is a necessary part of the farmer's work; but continual patching and piecing is poor policy. Often the best policy is to put in a new fence and be done with it and always it is best to build a fence that will last. It is a pity to see a man putting in posts of scrub oak or black oak, or poplar or some other wood that will only last a few years. If one cannot use white oak or cedar posts the very best thing to do is to make some cement post molds, or "forms" and fill them just as often as rush of other work will allow. This proves most profitable where sand and fine gravel can be found right on the farm; but in many districts materials for post making are not so far away as to make hauling too expensive and the cement posts will last a lifetime if properly constructed.

Watch where the water stands in spring and remember in dry weather in summer and fall to do the ditching. There comes a time after haying and harvesting and before silo filling when tiling can be done to advantage and the needed tiles should be hauled some day on a return trip from town. Much land that is not wet needs draining to get the water into it so that air may follow and do away with sourness and set free plant foods, but in most districts the chief aim is to get the water off low spots and that certainly is necessary and important work. See that there is a sufficient outlet for a main drain before starting to dig ditches and that the fall will be sufficient for the lateral rains; then run all the drains with as few curves as possible and get them deep enough to escape frost. Such drains will soon pay for the expense of their digging and placing and farm land is getting so scarce and high in many localities that every reclaimed acre means much to the farmer and his family. There is no profit in letting so many acres merely furnish coolness and comfort for the frog family and crowfish. Get them to producing crops.

Another most necessary but somewhat vexatious "chore" in summer-time is the mowing of the roadsides and the cleaning out of weeds along the fences, along the sides of the growing grain and corn and cotton crops and in the corners of the fences. We know of few jobs that the "boys" hate worse, but it has to be done and done on time, else weeds will go to seed and "smut" the farm and some of the neighbor's land. The orchard is perhaps a worse proposition to tackle when it grows up to rag weed and wild hemp, and Spanish needle and a host of other tall and tough cumberers of the ground. Weeds are a good protection to the soil, no doubt but they will do better when cut and left lying as a mulch than standing and ripening seed. Cut them down. The clean farm is a rarity and a joy forever. The foul farm is a common and annoying terror.

The noon "siesta" of the farm folk of Mexico and of some other hot countries is not a mere sign of laziness, but is a necessity born of experience. We sometimes think that it would be much better on our own farms to rest longer at noon, in haying and harvest and during the entire period of summer heat, than to "lay off" for only an hour at noon. The horses cannot properly cool off and masticate their feed in that time, to say nothing of obtaining sufficient rest after the hard forenoon's work. They should have two hours rest at noon and work an extra hour in the evening and in extra hot weather advantage should be taken of the cool evening hours to get in some of the crop. In the beating heat of the day oats often are too dry to bind by hand and when that is so it is too hot for people and horses to work in safety and to the best advantage. At such times some sensible farmers now do the cutting and binding (by machine) at night, when the light will allow, and we suppose the day will come when electric light will turn night into day as desired, on the farm as well as in the country. The pioneer days when men worked eighteen out of the twenty-four hours in summer surely are gone and ought to be, and with grain and other farm products now selling for twice the price they did in the early days one should be able to use modern machinery and make the work hours shorter and more effective for the men in the field and the womenfolk in the house.

Succulence for Dry Weather

It is no trick at all to get a fine flow of rich milk from a fresh cow on lush pastures in May and June. Nature does the work. The feed available at that time not only is well balanced in food nutrients, but also is succulent and laxative. Such feed cleans up the system of the cow, so to speak, after she has been on winter rations and she does her very best in milk production. Just as soon as the hot weather comes on and the grass starts to ripen or fade or grow slowly the milk diminishes in flow and unless great care is taken, by additional feeding and proper management the flow may fall off fully two thirds from the May amount. Change from succulent, laxative green grass to dry grass is the principal cause, but contributing causes are flies, lack of shade, excess of heat and stagnanted pond or river water often used by pasturing cows. To take the place of the green grass, or for use as an adjunct to what grass there is, many men are providing summer silage, in a small silo filled at the same time as the large silo and kept closely shut until needed in July and August. This silo should be narrow so that the surface silage may be fed off quickly each day to prevent much moulding and spoiling. Some dairymen have the first ten feet or so of the silo under ground and make the silo very tall, 36 feet and over with the object of having the bottom ten feet left for summer use. If silage has not been provided remember to sow corn broadcast or in drills for cutting green when needed in the dry, hot spell of weather sure to come before autumn rains; or sow peas and oats, Hungarian or millet, cow peas or some form of vetch, according to the possibilities of the district in which the cows are to be fed. Roots also are useful if available early and certainly are a fine feed for use after grass and before the silo is opened in November. The entire profit from the spring calving cows may be dependent upon the provision of such succulent feed as we have suggested. There is no profit in a feast and then a famine of feed. The cow must be kept fully fed and with bowels regular throughout the entire milking season and must also be protected from flies, have adequate shade and pure, cool water.

The Questions and Answers constitute one of the most valuable features of this department and we urge our farmer subscribers to read all of them carefully each month, as you will find that they contain much useful information and advice on practical problems that are troubling you as well as those who have asked the questions. Cut them out and paste them into a scrapbook for future reference. This will save you the trouble of writing us and will avoid delay in getting your answer when you need advice on these same matters. We are glad to receive inquiries from our subscribers and to advise them on all matters pertaining to farming, but it is hardly reasonable to expect us to waste valuable space in answering the same questions month after month for the benefit of those who need not have asked the questions if they had read and remembered the answers which we had previously printed.

Questions and Answers

GRAFTING PEAR TREES.—I have been a subscriber to COMFORT for a number of years and always well pleased with it. I have a pear tree about eight years old that always bears well but the fruit is of a hard, gritty variety. Could I have the tree grafted, or could I do it myself? When should I get the cuttings, and how long before it will bear fruit after grafting?

MRS. T. J. S., Evergreen, N. Y.

A.—Yes, pear trees can be top grafted successfully. You will have to wait until next fall to get the cuttings. It should be top grafted in the early spring before the sap starts. If you are not familiar with top working trees you had better get someone who is to get the cuttings for you do the grafting. It will take three or four years before the tree will bear well after topgrafting.

WHEN TO PLANT WHITE BURBANK POTATO.—Please tell me what time of year to plant the White Burbank potato. I planted some in May and they all made vines and no potatoes. On what kind of soil should they be planted and how cultivated?

S. T. C., Vanndale, Ark.

A.—Potatoes grow best on a fertile, sandy loam. Too rich soil produces a heavy growth of vines. May planted potatoes should do well in your state though Burbanks should ripen if planted in June. They should be cultivated frequently until the vines are too big for easy cultivation. From your description it would seem that your soil was too rich or that you used too much stable manure, though of course it is impossible to tell without further information. Potato phosphate is a better fertilizer than manure for potatoes.

SEEDING TO ALFALFA.—I have a piece of cultivated ground that I would like to seed into Alfalfa. Now I would like to know if it would be all right to seed it into clover this year when I want it for Alfalfa next year? And if so what kind of clover is it best to seed, or does the clover have to be more than one year old before plowing up and seeding for Alfalfa? (2) I have another piece that had alsike clover and a little red clover mixed that was two years old, and I plant that down last fall. I would like to know if it would be all right to seed that into Alfalfa this spring or would it be better to raise a crop of potatoes from it first before seeding into Alfalfa? R. E. S., Tekoa, Wash.

A.—Yes. Sow clover this year. Mix with clover seed one or two pounds of Alfalfa seed per acre. These Alfalfa plants will inoculate the soil. Mammoth or medium red clover is good. Better not plow under clover until second year since the land will be left in better shape and the Alfalfa will have a longer time to inoculate the soil. Whether to seed your alsike clover field to Alfalfa now or plant potatoes first depends upon the amount of weeds in the field. Never sow Alfalfa on weedy land. All weeds should be killed by thorough cultivation before Alfalfa is sown. You will have better success with Alfalfa if you will always inoculate the soil.

Gleason's Horse Book

520 Pages
Fully Illustrated

All That is Worth Knowing About Training and Treating Horses

Two volumes in one

EVERY person who owns, handles or manages horses and all livestock keepers and breeders should have a copy of this great book because it tells about all the known methods of treating diseases of horses and other domestic animals—methods that are based upon the results of actual practice and not mere theory. It also contains Prof. Gleason's famous system of horse breaking, taming and training therefore, it is in reality two books in one and positively the most authoritative work of the kind ever published. There are in all 520 pages, many of them illustrated and dealing with the cause and cure of practically every disease known to horses, cattle, sheep, poultry, swine and dogs with the right remedies for each disease. Among the many subjects covered in Part 1 of this book are causes of diseases, how to observe diseases, treatment of diseases, Cerebro, Spinal Meningitis, distemper, dysentery, eye diseases, fistula, glands, internal diseases, kidney diseases, poisons, stomach and bowel diseases, worms and literally hundreds of other horse and live-stock ailments, which for lack of space we cannot enumerate here. In Part 2 of this book Prof. Gleason gives to the world for the first time his method of breaking and training horses and there are also special chapters on how to buy, how to detect unsoundness, feeding, breeding, horse-shoeing, general care of horses, etc. Gleason's Horse Book is actually worth its weight in gold to every horse owner or breeder in the land, yet by special arrangement with the publishers we are enabled to give it away without cost to all who will accept the following

SALIVARY FISTULA.—I have two cows that have a small lump that came on the left jaw. It appears to be under the skin and when it discharges it is like clear water. I cannot cure it. MRS. M. K.

A.—An opening or fistula forms in the salivary duct (Steno's) in such cases and home treatment will do no good. In a horse the veterinarian may be able to operate successfully, but with a cow that scarcely would prove profitable. Swab with tincture of iodine every other day.

SELF-SUCKING COW.—Can you give me a remedy for a cow that sucks herself? Can anything be put on the teats? MISS D. C.

A.—Fit the cow with a spiked halter or make her a "necklace" of sharpened pickets or laths woven with smooth wire and to run lengthwise of the neck. Aloes and oil smeared on the teats possibly may help.

COUGH.—I have a mare three years old. She had distemper this last winter, leaving her with a cough. Please tell me how to stop it. C. B. C.

A.—Wet all feed and give half an ounce of Fowler's solution of arsenic night and morning until the cough abates; then gradually discontinue the medicine, taking at least a week to the work. Heaves possibly is present.

NAVEL INFECTION.—I had a young mule colt die last spring. He appeared healthy. When eight days old, one ankle was enlarged and then all the joints were affected. It died in three days. H. J. R.

A.—This was a case of navel infection and consequent joint disease (pyemia). The trouble may be prevented by allowing the mare a perfectly cleansed and freshly bedded box stall at foaling time, saturating the stump of the navel with tincture of iodine at birth and then dusting it often with slacked lime. Affected colts usually die.

LUMP.—About a year ago a small lump appeared in the left side of the udder of one of my cows. It is on the inside of the teat and the size of a hickory nut. It is hard, but does not appear to be sore. She is thin in flesh but eats heartily and gives a good flow of milk. M. A.

A.—As the lump apparently is doing no harm it probably would be best to leave it alone. If you prefer to give treatment you may paint it with tincture of iodine two or three times a week. When a well-fed cow remains thin and thriftless it is wise to have her tested with turberculin, as tuberculosis may be present.

NERVOUS COW.—I have a young cow that urinates every time I milk her. She eats well, but appears to lose flesh. E. M.

A.—Give her some relished feed at milking time and massage the udder gently for a few minutes before starting to milk. She may gradually get over the nervousness. Add oilmeal to the ration.

QUITTOR.—I have a horse that had a runround on its hoof, about four months ago. A new hoof has grown out about two inches, but it is still sore at back of hoof and pus forms in the parts affected, and sometimes the leg swells. MRS. M. W.

A.—Soak the hoof twice daily for fifteen or twenty minutes in a tub containing a warm one per cent solution of coal tar disinfectant and if that does not suffice use a weak solution of concentrated lye, half a teaspoonful to the quart at first, and gradually strengthen the solution. On taking the foot from the tub cover the wound with boric acid, absorbent cotton and bandages.

WARTS.—Please print a remedy for warts on a heifer. They are next to the eye. M. H.

A.—Rub the parts once or twice daily with best Castor oil and the warts soon will disappear.

LAMENESS.—I have a mule which limps painfully when pulling a load up an incline. The leg affected is the right hind leg. She walks smoothly on level ground. She also persists in standing on her toes on that foot. Am almost positive that it is not a stifle. The leg is not swollen anywhere and not deformed in anyway. MRS. J. W. G.

A.—The lameness probably is located in the hock joint and a spavin may be present and would require firing, blistering and a prolonged rest. We are unable to diagnose mysterious lameness without making a personal examination and merely make the above as a suggestion. You will have to employ the local graduate veterinarian.

BONE TUMOR.—I have a mare three years old. About two months ago I noticed a lump the size of a hen's egg on the lower side of the jaw bone. Now there is another one—not so large. They appear to be very sore and when I touch them she flinches. They are calloused on the bone. L. F.

A.—It would of course be best to have the tumors operated upon by an educated veterinarian, but some owners treat such growths successfully by applying a mixture of powdered corrosive sublimate and a little lard to cause sloughing. This does best when the bone is not involved.

CHOKING.—I have an eight-year-old gelding. In eating oats they seem to clog in his throat. He was all right until I fed him from a nose bag. MRS. J. W. S.

A.—Mix one ninth part of wheat bran with the whole oats, dampen this mixture at feeding time and feed it from a large box on the bottom of which it will spread out thin. He learns to bolt feed from the nose-bag.

GARGET.—What is the matter with my cow? Her udder becomes lumpy, and the milk appears chabbered. The teats are sore when you milk her. MRS. B. G.

A.—Foment the udder with hot water three times a day and milk and massage the udder at these times. At night rub the udder with a mixture of one part of mercurial ointment and two parts of lanoline, lard, or soft soap. At times of attack give a tablespoonful of powdered poke root twice daily in water or feed for two or three successive days.

WIRE CUT.—Can you tell me what will make the hair grow back on my horse's leg where he was cut when a little colt? The cut healed but no hair grew back on it. J. S.

A.—The hair roots have been destroyed and hair cannot therefore be made to grow upon the scar; but a skilled surgeon could cut out the scar, bring the edges of the new wound together by sutures and probably obtain immediate union (healing by first intention) between the lips of the wound so that no unsightly blemish would remain.

Lice.—Can you give a simple and effective remedy for lice on horses and directions for treatment and also for worms in horses and pigs? MRS. M. N.

A.—For lice use a 1-30 solution of coal tar dip and repeat as often as found necessary. For worms mix in the feed night and morning for a week a tablespoonful of a mixture of equal parts of salt, sulphur and dried sulphate of iron; then skip ten days and repeat. Omit iron for a pregnant mare and increase salt and sulphur. For worms of hogs mix sulphate of iron in the slop for five consecutive mornings, allowing one dram for each hundred pounds of body weight of pigs. Repeat in ten days if thought necessary.

PARALYSIS.—I have a sow that brought twelve pigs January 9th. One was dead, and two have died since. Early in February she appeared stiff in hind parts and two days later she got down and could not get up. She gets up on front feet, to help her up on hind feet seems to hurt her. MRS. I. F. H.

A.—Lack of exercise and stuffing on corn brought on this weakness and it will be likely to prove incurable. The drain and strain of nursing brings out the trouble in a pampered sow. Wean the pigs at once and feed the sow on milk, middlings, flaxseed meal and limewater. Roots and Alfalfa hay may be added. Rub loins twice daily with druggist's soap liniment.

SWELLING.—I have a horse three years old that has a swelling, or enlarged glands, just back of jaw bone. He seems to be sound in every other way, eating and drinking heartily. E. U.

A.—The parotid gland is enlarged and this may result from strangles (distemper) or influenza, or be associated with an attack. So long as it causes no inconvenience leave it alone, but if thought necessary rub in iodine ointment every other day.

WARTS.—I have a mare that has warts on the inside of both hind legs at the stifle joint. What is the best and safest way to get rid of them? R. S.

A.—Tie a fine cord around each wart that has a narrow neck. Rub Castor oil once or twice daily upon masses of small warts. They will then drop off or disappear after a time.

ABNORMAL MILK SECRETION.—I have a mule ten years old. She is fat and works all the time. She has milk secretion in her udder. What is the cause and what can I do to dry it up?

A.—Heavy feeding and good condition induce the secretion. Rub in camphorated oil or strong vinegar twice daily. Reduce feed and increase exercise.

GREASE.—I have a five-year-old horse, Percheron stock, weighing 1480 pounds. A year ago this spring his left hind leg swelled just above the fetlock joint. The leg has cracked from the fetlock joint up about eight inches. They are about one inch apart. It seems sore when I rub it, but does not make the horse lame. The cracks are on the hind part of the leg.

A.—Farcy is the skin form of glanders and were that disease present the horse would have to be destroyed according to state law. The symptoms indicate grease or aggravated scratches. Poultice with hot flaxseed meal for three days and then apply oxide of zinc ointment twice daily. Increase exercise and reduce rich feed.

CHOLERA.—I have a number of hogs. First they appear stupid and won't come out of bed, then they get so they won't eat, or drink swill. They have chills and shake all over. They turn purple around the snout. They look sick out of eyes. Three have died and they suffer when dying. MRS. J. F. E.

A.—Hog cholera no doubt is present and there is no remedy. After cleansing, disinfecting and whitewashing the pens and houses vaccinated hogs will have to be put in and vaccination will have to be done as often as necessary, by a graduate veterinarian, to prevent similar losses in future.

DISTEMPER.—I would like to know what to do for my horse. He has had distemper for two or three weeks. It does not appear to bother him much. There is inflammation and a discharge from his nose. I used sweet spirits niter and tartaric emetic. D. H. H.

A.—We cannot prescribe in such a case as the symptoms merely show a discharge from the nose which might be due to anyone of several different diseases. As one of the possibilities is glanders and that is incurable and also communicable and fatal to man you should at once have an examination made by an educated veterinarian. The remedies mentioned should not be used unless chosen and prescribed by an expert.

CATARRH.—I have a horse nine years old that has catarrh. When working hard enough to sweat he catches cold easily and when he lowers his head to drink a disagreeable discharge comes from his nose. He has been this way a year or more and is hearty and in good order and has never missed a meal. At times he apears drowsy. A. C. M.

A.—As glanders may be present we should not feel justified in prescribing treatment in this case and a qualified veterinarian should therefore be employed to make an examination. Where glanders is present the affected horse has to be destroyed according to state law. The disease is communicable and fatal to man as well as horses, so one has to be extremely careful.

INDIGESTION.—I have two horses; one nine years old, and one four. They gnaw and eat wood all the time. R. J. M.

A.—Horses afflicted with indigestion from improper feed or methods of feeding, or from intestinal worms, often gnaw wood or bark and may also eat earth, bedding or manure. Have their teeth put in order by a veterinarian and then feed whole oats, wheat bran and hay. Allow free access to rock salt. If the trouble persists mix a tablespoonful of a mixture of equal parts of powdered wood charcoal, sulphur and bicarbonate of soda in the feed twice daily for a week, then skip ten days and repeat if thought necessary.

This High Grade Bicycle Tire $2.48 Smooth Tread
$2.75 for Non-Skid

$2.75 Each for Non-Skid

Such a tire has been costing you an average of $4.25. But now comes this Goodyear-Akron, single tube, guaranteed bicycle tire at about one-half the price.

This is a Goodyear tire, made in the world's largest tire factory, where up to 10,000 pneumatic tires are produced daily. Enormous output, modern equipment and methods have established this new low price for quality tires. Why pay more? No man can build a better tire than Goodyear.

Goodyear Automobile Tires hold top place. So do Goodyear Motorcycle Tires.

And the same experts and standards are employed in the making of these Goodyear-Akron Bicycle Tires. You can pay more for a tire. But, can you get more? You can pay less, but consider the risks. Here $2.48 brings you the best that money can make.

How To Get Them

The Smooth Tread, size 28 by 1½, costs you $2.48 per tire. The Non-Skid, sizes 28 by 1⅜, 1½ or 1⅝, $2.75. Ask your dealer for them. If he hasn't them and you insist, he will get them from our nearest branch.

had been around at the time, he'd have got imprisonment. Now I'll bet a gallon of Mexican currency to a three cent dime that this guy had been staying around the home until his mother got tired of him, then she threw him out and told him to beat it and get a job. I'll bet this letter about mother dying he faked up himself and when he landed home, I'll bet he managed to hit the house just as dinner was being landed on the table, and I'll also bet that his good old mother when she heard they had to take up a colesion for him on the cars and pass round the hat to pay his fare, handed him a ten dollar bill and made him chase down the track, overhaul the train and give the conductor the money to hand back to the people who had been buncoed, which of course the conductor forgot to do, putting nine dollars and ninety-five cents into his own pocket and in a fit of generosity handing the nickel over to the company. According to the last accounts the young man's mother was still looking for a doctor Care. It is to be hoped she won't find him, as most people have all the care they want without paying a doctor to hand it to them. When you boys and girls send in copies of old songs that you have memorized from hearing them constantly sung, be sure and write the words down correctly and don't claim the authorship of things which other people have written.

BELLEFOUNTAINE, OHIO.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:

I have been a subscriber to COMFORT for sometime, and I suppose you are a very busy man, but if you can spare the time from your other work, I would like to have your opinion on what is the importance on the production and price of grain of the manufacture of alcoholic liquors. Also what in your opinion would prevent strikes among railroad employees. I am sending a self-addressed and stamped envelope for reply. I thank you in advance.

Your nephew, J. R. ROSE.

You have given me two very hard questions to answer. If there is any man in the world who could understand your first question, I will contribute my share to having an oil painting of him placed in the Hall of Fame. If I were in a nutty house and the gentleman ran up to me with extended hands and asked me not to shake them as both of them were glass, and then fired at me a question such as the one you have put to me, I should just give my head two gentle taps and say: "Nobody home!" For your personal edification let me repeat the question as you have put it. "What is the importance on the production and price of grain of the manufacture of alcoholic liquors?" That is almost equivalent to asking me, what is the importance of red canton flannel night shirts on the protuberances of the isothermal dithyrambics of the zodiacal calculus as applied to the dynamometrical tintinnabulations of green-eyed fleas on a dog's tail? Now my question is just as involved and difficult to answer as yours. What I imagine you really want to ask is: "What influence has the manufacture of alcoholic liquors on the production and price of grain?" If you get the Anti-Saloon League Manual for 1914, I think you will find the information you seek. It is not a matter on which you or anybody else need bother their brains very much, as it is only a side issue. The one important truth to bear in mind is this: A lot of good productive land and a vast amount of useful labor are being devoted to the production of wholesome grain, which is later on converted into a murderous liquid which poisons hundreds of thousands, nay millions of human beings. I contend that all this land and the product of the land could be used for an infinitely better purpose—the raising of crops that will sustain life, instead of destroying it. If I had a farm and knew my grain was going to be used to poison people I'd rather blow my brains out than devote my time and energy to such base ends. The farmers of China can no longer raise poppies for opium. Land is too valuable in China to be diverted to any other purpose than that of sustaining life. It is the same here. No work should be done unless some good comes of it. If we closed up distilleries and breweries it doubtless would cause a considerable loss to many thousands of people, but not one fiftieth part of the loss that these people are causing other people. Brewers, distillers, saloon keepers and other trades dependent on the sale of poison for their living know, or if they don't know, must be taught to know, that they are engaged in a business that undermines the health, morals and efficiency of the American people, and no consideration should be shown to people who murder as surely, thoroughly, and completely as the gun man who puts a bullet through his victim's brain. You ask me what would prevent strikes among railroad employes? The best way would be to put the railroad on a silver platter and hand it to the employes. That's the best way from the striker's point of view. The other way would be to invent some machine that would operate railroads mechanically without employing labor at all. As probably no one will adopt these measures, I would suggest that both parties rub along the best way they can for a generation or so until a more thoughtful and intelligent class of people come into existence, and these people I know will insist on the government ownership of all public utilities, and railroads are the greatest public utility we have. The working men on the whole are ready to trust Uncle Sam, for in the last analysis, Uncle Sam is the people, while a few Wall Street gentlemen who practically control nearly all the railroads in the United States, have shown themselves time and again, not only to be indifferent but inimical to the public interests. The government won't have to take the railroads. The railroads will simply fall into the government's hands just as an overripe apple falls into the lap of mother earth. Then it is to be hoped everyone will get a square deal, and the rights of labor, the government and the people be respected. It was kind of you Brother Rose to send me a stamped addressed envelope for a reply. It is extraordinary how generous some people can be. If you haven't any higher appreciation of the value of my advice than you have of my time, I'm afraid this letter won't do you very much good.

IRMIN, R. R. 1, MO.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:

I have been a member of the C. L. O. C. for several years.

Uncle, I have derived a great deal of good from your monthly talks and answers to the cousins' letters. I like your fearless attack on all existing evils and your unselfish life. I hope that you may have the health and strength to continue as our leader for many more years. I enjoy helping the shut-ins and have received as a reward for what I have done, a great many lovely letters of thanks. I wish more of the members would help with the sunshine work, for some of the shut-ins are hardly remembered in their appeal for aid. I have letters from several who were scarcely remembered, so cousins let's try and help the poor souls all we can. Uncle Charlie, I have all three of your wonderful books. They are just simply grand. I thought I would explode when I was reading about "Lily, or Help Wanted" in the Story book. The book of poems is also a great book. Cousins, get a copy of each book, I am sure it will be the best investment you ever made.

I am twenty-three years old. I live on a farm with my parents and brother. Our principal crop is corn. We also raise wheat, oats, cane, cowpeas and millet. Fruit does fairly well here, but farming and stock raising are the chief industries.

Our crops have been poor the past few years on account of the severe droughts. But we are hopeful for a better crop this season.

I would like to receive post-cards from the cousins, views preferred. I will answer all I receive.

With love and best wishes to Uncle Charlie, Marie and Billy the Goat, I am your nephew,

FRANK J. VACCA. (League No. 37,474.)

Thank you for your bouquets, Frank, I only wish I deserved them. I also want to thank you with all my heart for your kindness to our shut-ins. Boys as a rule are not much interested in the sick and seldom interested enough to give up their whiskey and cigarette money for charitable purposes. If I could only take some of you fellows, especially some of you booze fighters, to the besdsides of those who are perishing from consumption, or consuming with raging fevers, and get you to put your whiskey money into a few oranges to soothe their parched and burning tongues, I could make you see the folly and the wickedness of wasting your hard-earned money on kerosene and prune juice, otherwise known as whiskey. Very little is done for our shut-ins nowadays. Once we raised hundreds of dollars monthly for this beautiful work, but many of you have lost interest, and the interest of many of you it is impossible to arouse, so if those on our list get a few dimes, they are lucky indeed. We are very proud of our country, because we haven't any real idea of what a country ought to be, but I want to tell you right now that the people of a hundred years hence won't be able to speak of us without the blush of shame coming to their cheeks. They will refer to us as barbarians, and barbarians we are all right. Now let me tell you a little story that ought to drive home with titanic force the need of some real civilization and some real christianity. Some months ago a poor old lady of seventy-eight, a life-long resident of a well-known and flournishing town in one of the most prosperous of our middle west states, left her home for the first time in twenty-six years. You see the poor old soul needed a wheel chair, but the relatives were so poor they couldn't

A Corner for Boys

By Uncle John

THE month of May calls us outdoors with a compelling voice. Happy is the boy who has enough work to do, to make his leisure hours sweeter. "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," but all play makes Jack worse than a dull boy. Did you ever stop to think that when you play a game of ball, you really work harder than when you are doing chores, and yet you go at one with zest and at the other with dragging feet. You take an interest in the game and so it does not seem like work. If you take an interest in your work instead of hating and slighting it, it will soon become interesting instead of irksome. It is only those that try to do their work as well as they can that ever rise in the world.

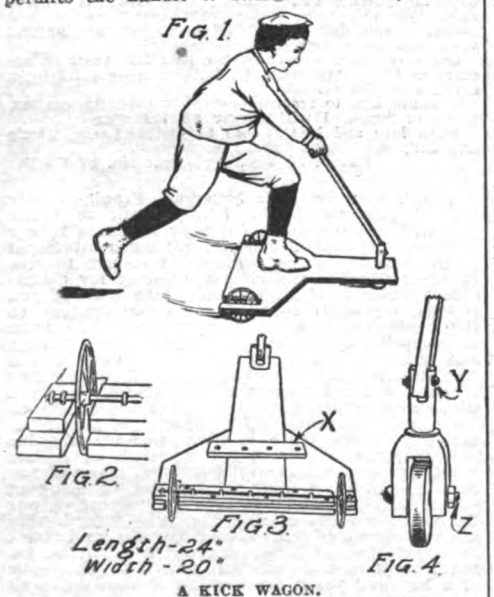
At the Swimming Hole

The accompanying sketch suggests the good old summer-time very strongly. It is a diving board that somewhat resembles an ancient catapult. In fact we have drawn on the ancients for our idea. A world of keen enjoyment awaits you if you make this device, and it should not take a "gang" of six or seven lads more than a couple of hours to do so. Erect the truss out of heavy plank near the bank of a stream and fit a strong bolt through the center as shown in Fig. 2. A piece of sound scantling will do for the swinging-board. Bore a hole in the center for the bolt to pass through, and on one end place a standing board made of cross cleats. A heavy weight made of bags of stone or sand is tied to the other end. The picture shows the diving catapult upsidedown after it has swung round and thrown the boy towards the water. When ready for use the weight is at the front end. The rope passes down through the pulley shown in the rear and is held by several boys. The diver poises, ready for a spring, on the standing board, and when he yells, "all right," the rope is let go and the weighted end falls throwing the diver in a half circle through the air. At the right instant he leaves the board and makes a beautiful dive.

DIVING CATAPULT.

Queen of Hearts Puzzle

The queen of hearts, she made some tarts. There are nine of them on the dish and she wants her wise men to arrange them in eight rows of three each. They finally discovered how to do it as shown in the small diagram at the side.



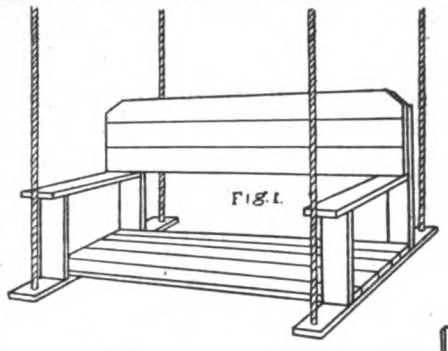
THE NINE TARTS.

Glass

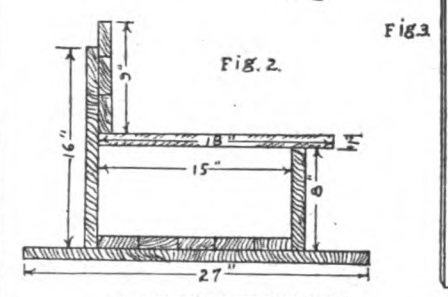
Glass is one of the commonest everyday articles we know about and yet there are many kinds of glass which are positively mysterious. Perhaps you will think it strange to have a window through which you could see clearly looking out from within the house, but which defied observation of you from the outside. In other words, you can see through it only from one side. This glass is not more wonderful than court glass which is as hard to break as steel. Imagine a thin crystal tumbler which might be thrown around like a tin cup, or plunged first in the fire and then in ice cold water without danger of breaking. As you might imagine, this glass is very expensive.

A Kick Wagon

Did you ever ride on a kick-back cart? If not get busy with hammer and saw and make one according to the directions given herewith. In some corner around the farm you can find three small metal wheels, that will do nicely. Use two-inch plank for the body of the cart and make it exactly as shown in Fig. 3. The simplest way to attach the axle is to drive staples around it as shown in Fig. 2. The small fore wheel by means of which you steer the vehicle is pictured in Fig. 4. It resembles a large caster. It is probable you can find such a wheel in the scrap as many farm implements have them. It is not hard to make one out of wood. A piece of scantling will do for the forked post, the bolt "Z" serves as an axle for the wheel, and "Y" as a pivot that permits the handle to swing. Use every means you know of to make the wagon strong and it will yield you many an hour of fun. It is a good exerciser as well as a joy producer.



A KICK WAGON.



Rescue at Sea

If you were to fall into the sea, your one desire would be to grasp a proffered life line and be hauled to safety. An American seaman who was thrown overboard by rough weather did not do so. When the line was thrown to him, he continued to bob around as calmly as if he were in no danger. Finally he did reach for the line, and untied a crude knot which had been made by a well-meaning landlubber. When the seaman was pulled aboard, he voiced his disgust in no uncertain terms. It is said that a poorly tied knot is abhorred by a real sailor as much as discord is by a professor of music.

A Swinging Porch Seat

The porch seat pictured here is an article of beauty, comfort and utility. I have planned it in such a simple way that any of my boy readers over twelve years can make it without other assistance than the pictures and instructions given here. All the pieces that go to form it are exactly alike, save for a difference of length. Fig. 3 is a picture of the board with the dimensions marked on it. Fourteen boards just like it are what you need to make the seat. Fig. 2 is a side view of the swing, and as it shows all the measurements you must study it carefully as you proceed with the work of construction.

A SWINGING PORCH SEAT.

The first thing to do is to place the two bottom cleats down on the floor and nail the five 48-inch seat boards to them. Next nail on the four legs, then the arm rest, and last the back boards. Bore one inch holes in the corner to thread the rope through. The upper ends of the ropes fasten to hooks in the porch ceiling. The most beautiful way to finish this seat is to give it two coats of forest green paint and two coats of varnish. It will then be a fitting piece of furniture for the finest porch in the land.

Chicken Fountain

A simple feeding device for little chicks may be made from a tin can. All that needs to be done is to cut a three-cornered hole in the can as shown in Fig. 2. The cutting is done in such a way that the jagged edges of the tin may be bent back a quarter of an inch. The hole is just large enough to permit the head of the chicks to enter. A can opener is a good tool to do the cutting with. The lower end of the can is open and fits closely around a row of nails which prevents its being blown over. It is easily lifted off to permit of scalding occasionally. The plank needs scrubbing and scalding frequently.

CHICKEN FOUNTAIN.

I will bid you good by now until the September issue. I will be trying to discover something new and interesting for you while you are at play. I love the work or I would not be able to do it. All my waking hours I share with you, for the problems incident to editing a department of this kind are never absent from my mind. I sincerely wish each of you good fortune in all things.

UNCLE JOHN.

buy her one. After twenty-six long years, more than a quarter of a century, a society in the town (not a church society by the way) bought the poor, dear old lady, a rolling chair, and she was wheeled out into the sunshine for the first time in twenty-six years. That news item went the round of all the big newspapers the country o'er. Big syndicates send items of this kind to hundreds of publications from coast to coast. When I read that item it made my stomach turn over and I cried aloud: "Oh, God, how can such things be?" Millions of people I've no doubt read of that incident, but I don't suppose it meant more to the average mind than if it had been a report of a ball game, or the account of the birth of a three-legged calf or a seven-legged hog. To me however, this paragraph was a burning indictment of society, our institutions, secular and religious and our savage civilization. If this poor old soul had been lying helpless in some isolated section of the backwoods one might understand her pitiable plight, but there she was helpless and neglected in a well-to-do Christian or un-Christian community. Now it is a positive fact that no one can lie on a bed of sickness for twenty-six years in a city of even a hundred thousand people without nearly everyone knowing it. The ubiquitous reporter is always glad to run in a line every now and again about such cases. Everyone in New York knows of two or three people who have been in bed over forty years. They are public characters, and many prominent people visit them and take an interest in them. Of course these are exceptional cases, or they would not attract attention in this vast melting pit of the races. But that they do, is sufficient proof that small towns, cannot close their eyes and ears and ignore things of this character. In this particular city for twenty-six years the salaried servants of Christ have preached thousands upon thousands of sermons, probably a good half of them at least dwelling upon one's duty towards one's neighbor, and collected tens of thousands of dollars to convert the heathen Chinee and other fortunate inhabitants of foreign lands, but never once raising a finger or collecting a red cent to get this poor martyred old soul out of her living tomb. If I had known of this case that poor old lady would have had a wheel chair ten years ago even if I had had to hock my own bed to give it to her. Plenty of churchianity you see, but no practical Christianity. A few words from one of the many pulpits in that prosperous city would have rescued this poor old lady from her mattress grave twenty-five years ago, but alas not for a quarter of a century was that word spoken. Faith without works is dead and an institution that does not send its shepherds into the highways and byways and succor its sick and afflicted sheep, is nothing but a mausoleum of dead hopes and dead men. Shall we ever get together and do unto others as we would have others do unto us? Shall we ever learn that in dollars and windy words there is nothing but disillusion and death and in service to man and God alone are to be found, peace, joy and happiness? Before me lies a letter from a poor old woman down South who has been sick and helpless for many years and who never in her life has known what it is to have a blanket covering her shivering and tortured body. These are hard times, but hard or not there is plenty of money for whiskey, candy, vice and every other fool thing, but mighty little for God's suffering, neglected poor. Put your prayers into deeds and imitate Frank Vacca. He isn't letting the ashes of selfishness, greed and indifference, bury the gold nuggets of his soul. There are a thousand of you skimming around in automobiles who never allow one sweet, unselfish, Christ-like thought to enter your flinty hearts. You see I'm giving you a regular Billy Sunday raking over. It is the only kind of talk that gets results. Fine words butter no parsnips, and its deeds, not hot air that unlock the door of the better world.

Comfort's League of Cousins

The League of Cousins was founded as a means of bringing the scattered members of COMFORT'S immense circle of readers into one big, happy family. Its aim is to promote a feeling of kinship and relationship among all readers. It was primarily started as a society for the juvenile members of COMFORT'S family, only, but those of more mature years clamored for admittance so persistently that it was deemed advisable to impose no age limit; thus all are eligible to admittance into our League provided they conform to its rules and are animated by the child spirit.

Membership is restricted to COMFORT subscribers and costs thirty cents, only five cents more than the regular subscription to COMFORT which is included. The thirty cents makes you a member of the League and gives you an attractive League button with the letters "C. L. O. C.," a handsome certificate of membership with your name engrossed thereon, and the privilege of having your name in the letter list, also a paid-in-advance subscription to COMFORT. You continue a League member as long as you keep up your subscription to COMFORT. There are no annual dues, so after you have once joined all you have to do to keep in good standing is to keep your subscription to COMFORT paid up.

Please observe carefully the following directions which explain exactly

How to become a Member

Send thirty cents to COMFORT'S Subscription Department, Augusta, Maine, with your request to be admitted into COMFORT'S LEAGUE OF COUSINS, and you will at once receive the League button and your membership certificate and number; you will also receive COMFORT for 15 months if you are a new subscriber; but if you are already a subscriber your subscription will be renewed or extended two full years beyond date of expiration, if you remit 35 cents.

Or, if your subscription is already paid in advance, you can take a friend's 15-months subscription at 25 cents and send it in with five cents of your own, thirty cents in all, with your request for membership, and we will send you the button and membership certificate, and send COMFORT to your friend for 15 months. League subscriptions do not count in premium clubs.

NEVER apply for membership without enclosing thirty cents to include a new subscription or a renewal.

The League numbering over forty thousand members, undoubtedly is the greatest society of young people on earth. It costs but thirty cents to join, and that gives you at least a 15-month subscription to COMFORT also, without extra cost.

Never in the world's history was so much given for so little. Never could thirty cents be invested to such advantage, and bring such splendid returns. Don't hesitate. Join us at once and induce your friends to do likewise.

All those League members who desire a list of the cousins residing in the several states, can secure the same by sending a stamped addressed envelope and five cents in stamps to Nellie Rutherford, 1299 Park Place, Brooklyn, New York grand secretary.

Special Notice

Never write a subscription or renewal order or application for membership in the body of a letter. Write your subscription or renewal and membership application on a separate sheet of paper, separate from your letter. We have to put all subscription orders on our subscription file at once; so if it is written on the same sheet as your letter, the whole letter has to go on to the subscription file at once and thus can receive no attention from Uncle Charlie.

Never send subscriptions to Uncle Charlie nor to the Secretary of the League; they bother him and cause confusion and delay.

Address all letters to COMFORT, Augusta, Maine, and they will promptly reach the head of the department for which they are intended.

NEW EDITION

Uncle Charlie's Story Book

51st Birthday Souvenir

A Beautiful New Edition of Uncle Charlie's Story Book is now offered as a souvenir of his fifty-first birthday which occurred September 25th. This splendid book of 157 pages printed in good, clear type on fine paper, was gotten up by Uncle Charlie regardless of trouble and expense as a worthy memorial of his fiftieth birthday a year ago.

Besides six unique stories, a dramatic sketch and personal memoirs and thrilling incidents of his remarkable life, all from his inspired pen, there are chapters by "Billy the Goat" and Maria which throw interesting side lights on his character and let you into the mysteries of his daily life. Illustrated with new pictures of him and Maria and Billy.

The immense popularity of this book has exhausted the previous editions and this handsome new edition has been printed to meet the continued large demand for it.

This edition is limited, so this may be your last chance to obtain a copy. Every home should have one.

FREE Premium Offer

It is bound in two styles, both handsome and either good enough. One in heavy, fancy opal blue paper covers known as "cloth of gold paper," will be sent post-paid as a free premium for a club of two new subscription to COMFORT at 25 cents each, 50 cents in all, or for your own 2-year renewal at 30 cents and one 25-cent subscription, 55 cents in all.

The other, beautifully bound in lilac silk with stiff covers, will be sent post-paid as a free premium for a club of four subscriptions at 25 cents each, one dollar in all, or for your own 2-year renewal at 30 cents and three 25-cent subscriptions, $1.05 in all.

In either offer 2-year renewals at 30 cents each will count the same as 15-month subscriptions at 25 cents each.

This offer holds good while the supply of books holds out.

Probably this is the last edition that will ever be printed.

BE QUICK and secure a copy while they last.

These are the best and most costly premiums that we give for such size clubs.

Talks with Girls

Conducted by Cousin Marion

In order that each cousin may be answered in this column, no cousin must ask more than three questions in one Month.

HERE we are, my dears, before we had hardly thought spring had come, here we are at the merry month of May and the last month of spring is upon us and I'll bet a lot of you haven't done your spring cleaning yet. But don't worry over that, there are thirty-one days in May and you can do wonders in that time if you want to. Besides some folks do their spring cleaning in June, or even July or August, and, let me whisper it to you, some don't do it at all. However, none of you is like that, I am sure. Anyway, May is a lovely month and I hope you will all enjoy it as much as I do. May and October are the two months of the year I like best and—but I can't be talking with work to do. So here goes to the pile of letters on my desk.

The very first letter I open contains the one great unanswerable heart question. It comes from Cousin E. of Plymouth, Nebr., and the question is: "Why does the one I dearly love care more for other girls than he does for me?" Nobody can answer that, not even the one who is dearly loved and why should I try to? I won't, and Cousin E. must find the answer for herself, if there is one. Still, she is only sixteen, and I fancy it will not be a great while before she will be laughing at herself for having asked me such a foolish question.

Troubled Bells, Tenn.—If there is no other mode of conveyance and the distance is great, girls might ride behind young men from evening parties, but a much nicer way would be for the girls to provide ways of their own to go to and from parties, if the young men aren't polite enough to do so properly. (2) You may associate with the young man who asked to kiss you, provided you did not permit him to do so.

F. A. M. E., Paonia, Colo.—Don't give up your school teaching, even though the burden of your broken heart is almost more than you can bear. You are in no condition to marry the young man who wants to marry you. Ere you can marry him happily, you must forget the one you want to marry and he doesn't want you. Cupid is a curious critter, my dear.

Reader, Hardin, Ky.—Don't bother about him until you are perfectly sure that he likes you as well as you think he does. When that is settled there won't be any need to bother, will there?

Perplexed, Cleveland, O.—The difficulty with you and the young man is that neither of you is frank and square with the other. Insignificant matters you magnify and the small troubles between you you will not talk about and clear up and out as sensible people should. Now try the open and frank manner of people with nothing to conceal and see if you don't understand each other much better. If you don't, it is time for both of you to quit each other. A number of other COMFORT young people should take this advice, too.

Broken-hearted, Alum Bridge, W. Va.—You sign yourself "Broken harted" and say it is because a young man "goes with another girl a good eal." No wonder, my dear, it has such a bad effect. Suppose you try the spelling-book treatment on it for six months.

Lovie, Burlington, Iowa.—As he does not realize that you love him, yet is well acquainted with you and cares for no other girl, don't you know that if he cared a beat of his heart for you, that you would not be asking me how you should let him know how you feel? If you don't, now is the time to learn and the quicker you learn in this case, or any other you may have later, the happier you will be.

Marion, New York, N. Y.—Evidently you have the New York idea of marrying for the most you can get out of it in material results. If you loved this very desirable young man as you should, you would be glad enough to wait two or three years for him, especially as both of you would be better off by the waiting. Being engaged to him does not mean that you are not to have just as good time as any girl ought to have with plenty of friends. While he is in the West making a home for you, he would hardly expect you to retire from society and go into mourning for him, would he? I think, my dear, you don't care very much what husband you have, so long as it is a husband who is a good provider, and your parents ought to be ashamed of themselves for encouraging that material tendency in you.

Anxious, New Bloomfield, Pa.—Flirt with the man who gets cross when you talk to other young men, but don't marry him. A husband with a jealous disposition like that will make your future married life anything but a happy one.

Girlie, Crawford, Texas.—A girl makes just as much of a mistake by not caring for the attention of young men, as he does by caring too much for it. Human beings need pleasant association and companionship and every man and woman owes it to themselves and others to know each other, be with each other and help each other in every way they can. You can make yourself about as unhappy being selfish and sour as you can by being foolish and sweet. Choose the golden medium and be happy making others happy. For this reason when the boys and girls came to your house to play tennis and didn't wait for the formalities, you should have joined them and made them welcome. Possibly, they should have come to you and your sisters before playing, but they felt that you were all friends and it wasn't necessary to be formal about it. Don't be finicky.

Chums, Sunnyvale, Cal.—Certainly when a bad young man tries to reform, everybody should do all that is possible, but this does not mean that young girls should accept "marked attention" from him and his friends as a sign of his reformation. Be friendly with him and encourage him to stick to the right path, but don't put your arms around him to hold him there. It may be heroic, but it isn't sensible to lose yourself trying to save somebody else.

Fayrie Queen, Cedar Rapids, Ia.—One month is just as lucky to marry in as another, and one color as lucky as another for a bride's dress. If you expect to build married happiness on a foundation of that kind, you should never marry.

Distressed, Orient, O.—If he loves you so little that his love can't follow you one hundred and eighty-five miles, it isn't much of a love. However, as you are sixteen and he nineteen you have plenty of time to think it over. It would be much more correct for him to get work in the neighborhood of your new home, than it would be for you to get work in his neighborhood and let your parents move away without you, as they have first claim on you until you are of age. Go on to your new home with your parents and if he loves you really and truly, he won't lose you, and maybe you won't lose him. Both of you should wait for at least five years to see if your love is warranted to last.

Anxious, New Haven, Conn.—You should have asked for an apology for his strange conduct on his previous call, and you should not have kissed him good by until he had made it and explained why he acted so. Don't be foolish over him and don't let him treat you any way he pleases, or you will be sorry enough before you are through with him. Young men of his type need to be controlled properly.

Cousin, Belle Plaine, Ia.—Sweethearts are always having little quarrels and this one of yours will soon pass over, if it hasn't done so already. But why should you worry about it more than he does? If he doesn't worry, you should give him up for someone who cared more for you.

Dimples, Peck, Va.—A fifteen-year-old girl shouldn't write to her "beou" at all and she will not, if her parents are doing their duty by her. You keep to your spelling-book. That's what you need more than beaus.

There, my dears, you have my best wishes, some in pleasant humor and some other scoldy but my best wishes no less when I have to talk sharply to you for your own good, than when I don't. Now run along in the bright spring weather and let all of us be just as happy as the good Lord wants us to be. By, by, till we meet again.

COUSIN MARION.

Betty's sake. You see, I knew about her; I heard them talking about her in the store that night, before I stepped in. I had just started to ask if you still lived on the hill—but let that go. I was coming home to stay as long as I lived. I have been over most of the world, wandering in its countries, sailing all of its seas; but I never could forget that little cabin up there—among the rosebushes and honeysuckles—and I remembered the Sunset Window—and you—and Betty——"

He broke down, sank to his knees in the darkness, and sobbed as a child, only more bitterly.

But he was a man, and he recovered himself quickly.

"No," he went on calmly, "it will do no good whatever to own me. Nothing on earth can change the verdict now. We must keep Betty happy. Am I not right, Sheriff Raines?"

"It's hard," said the officer, his voice thick, "but it's best. You won't have to suffer long, Sarah Lee; and then you have the consolation of knowing your son is innocent, even if he can't prove it. Sarah Lee, there's a reward for such as you and your son, else there's no God. Newton Oliver, I want to shake your hand—you're your mother's son. I wish I could help you—hold ——" as a startling idea came to him—"Newton Oliver, if I were to let you out of here, would you tell it if you were caught?"

Young Oliver gripped the officer's hand hard, and his voice came shakily but determinedly:

"I cannot let you do that. You were my father's friend, and you have an oath to keep. Besides, I would as soon die as be hounded over the world for the rest of my life. Still, I thank you, sheriff."

Sarah Lee Oliver felt for George Raines' other hand, raised it to her lips and kissed it, her heart too full to permit her to speak her gratitude.

Then the little woman bade her son farewell and left the jail. He had told her that she must be a soldier, and that she must not try to see him again. Whispering over and over to herself that she would be almost satisfied if she knew he had not sworn to his innocence only to relieve her mind, she crept through the thick darkness to the lonely cabin on the hill.

When the pounding and rasping of hammer and saw came to her ears she would not look down into the jailyard. She knew that the gallows were going up.

As time ran on, the gossip spread the suspicion that the man to be hanged was the son of Sarah Lee Oliver. People began to look pityingly toward the old woman, and some of them asked her about it. But Sarah Lee would smile and deny it, while the wound ran red in her mother soul. It was a lie; but it was for Betty's happiness, and it must be done. What would Betty's set think if they knew that Betty's brother had died at the rope's end? That he was innocent would make little difference; all criminals protested their guiltlessness.

The day of the hanging came, and with it the terrible hour. The sun was bright; the air was filled with floating leaves of all colors and tints. Many of the townspeople crowded to the cabin on the hill to view the execution at a little distance.

Mrs. Spurden called Sarah Lee into the best room.

"Sary Lee," she whispered, "it's no use to try to keep it. I know it's your son. Let us offer our sympathy."

"Why, Jane Spurden!" retorted Sarah Lee. "Do you think for one moment that I would hesitate to own my flesh and blood?"

Finally, with a strength that she had hardly dared hope was within her, she almost disarmed the gossip of her suspicion. Then the cries of those on the outside told them that the condemned man had walked to the scaffold.

"Come on out, Sary Lee," called Mrs. Spurden.

It was the crucial test. Must she see her son hanged? But to refuse to go with Mrs. Spurden was as good as to admit that she was the unfortunate's mother. So Sarah Lee went to join the others, who stood watching the doings in the jailyard below with morbid interest. And there the little widow stood bravely in the front ranks of the on-lookers, numb from pain, crucified on an invisible cross with nails of fire.

They saw the sheriff adjust a bandage about the eyes of the man who had called himself John Doe—and they noted that the condemned man stood as gallantly erect as though he were waiting for a crown instead of the most ignominious of deaths.

But something seemed wrong. Instead of throwing the trap, Sheriff Raines slashed at Newton Oliver's bonds and pushed him from the scaffold. Then he turned his face toward the cabin on the hill, and recognizing Sarah Lee, cried out in a voice that was terrible:

"It was your kiss—the mother kiss—it has burned a hole in my hand! There is a reward for such as I—and I am going to that reward! I killed Morton Hendricks!"

He quickly put the noose about his own neck, and the next moment had hurled himself to his death.

Newton Oliver hastened to the little woman who knelt at the Sunset Window, under the sparrow's nest.

A Thorn Among Roses

has jeopardized Mr. Fletcher. If I give you up it will be as a midnight burglar, who stole into my room for the probable purpose of robbing the house. I shall not accuse you of having stolen those papers, but you will be searched—they will be found upon your person, and no matter what story you may then tell, very little credence will be given to it."

He saw it—and cursed himself again.

What should he do? Should he yield to this woman whom he had persecuted for a score of years—own himself beaten by one who had practically been his slave?

He dropped his head upon his breast to think, and rammed both his hands savagely into his coat pockets.

Suddenly he started, and a satisfied exclamation broke from him.

"What is it?" demanded Imogen, who had caught the sound.

"No, —— you! do your worst. I'll never yield a peg to you," he sullenly retorted.

The woman caught her breath sharply and swayed dizzily where she stood.

"Very well," she said, after a moment, "you will remain my prisoner for the night. I know it must be rather close in there, but you'll have to make the best of it, and you're welcome to take anything you can find to make a bed for yourself. I shall not retire, however; I shall remain here to give instant alarm if you attempt to use forcible measures to release yourself."

Again an oath escaped the man, for he had depended upon her going to bed, when he had hoped to make his escape; for, when he had plunged his hands into his pockets, his fingers had come in contact with a pair of pliers, which he had not known he had about him, and, as he was an expert in using such implements, he knew he could easily turn the key in the lock and thus escape from his prison.

But if his jailer contemplated sitting up all night, matters would become more complicated. At all events, he told himself that he would not give in until the last moment.

Accordingly, he tore a quantity of garments from their hooks and, spreading them upon the floor, settled himself to get what rest he could.

He finally fell asleep, while Imogen tried to while away the weary hours with a fresh novel; but she failed to get interested in the book, and it seemed as if daylight would never come.

When the dressing bell rang in the morning she knew that Olive would soon come for her to go to breakfast.

She knew that she must not let the girl suspect that she had been up all night; she dare not play the invalid, either, and have her breakfast sent up, for that would bring others into her room, and she was most anxious to keep everyone out, at least until she had tried once more to bring Reardon to her terms.

Accordingly, she dressed herself in a fresh and tasteful wrapper; rouged her white cheeks and tried to look as bright as possible, and feeling that her prisoner would be perfectly safe until she returned—for even if he could manage to burst the door of the trunkroom open without arousing the house, she was sure he could not force the one leading into the hall; while he certainly never would think of going out the way he had entered in broad daylight—she joined Olive in the hall, after securely locking her door, and went down to the dining-room, just as Will and Alice were leaving.

The moment Reardon heard the door close after Imogen he realized that his opportunity had come. He knew that she did not dream of his possessing tools that would enable him to escape without making a noise, and he chuckled as he thought how he should outwit her, and what would be her dismay upon her return to find that her bird had flown.

With the use of his pliers, he succeeded in turning the key, and in less than five minutes found himself free in the blessed daylight and pure fresh air, which he breathed most gratefully into his tired lungs.

Of course, he could not get out of the room, for Imogen had taken the key with her, and he did not relish the thought of going out of the window and down by the waste pipe, as he had entered; for he knew it would be a very dangerous proceeding in more senses than one. Even if he could make the descent safely, there were liable to be men about the grounds who might interfere with his getting away.

But there seemed to be no other way, and after reconnoitering and seeing no one outside, he made a bold venture, passed through the window, and was in the act of getting over the railing of the balcony when Alice saw him from her room.

We know the result, and with what dispatch and resolution the brave girl accomplished his arrest and had him conveyed to town.

We also know that both Olive and Imogen were ignorant of what was occurring outside, for they were in the dining-room in the opposite wing of the house.

CHAPTER X.

A LEGAL CONSULTATION.

A chamber in Lincoln's Inn, the private room in the offices of Mr. Richard Burdon, solicitor. Mr. Burdon himself is seated at the writing table in the center, talking to his friend and brother in the law, Mr. Edward More.

The table at which Mr. More sits is new, of well-seasoned mahogany and the best workmanship; the chairs—well stuffed and upholstered in leather—in which Mr. Burdon and the barrister sit, and their fellows round the room, are luxurious and comfortable to match. There is a handsome, sober-hued carpet upon the floor; dark, expensive rep curtains to the windows; and altogether an air of substantial, well-to-do comfort that is noticeable at a glance. At one time it was considered that a lawyer's office could not be too musty, dusty and badly furnished; but the lawyers themselves have changed all that; perhaps they have come to agree with the wisdom of the proverbial spider, and deemed it politic to make the ensnaring parlor pretty and enticing for their hapless victims.

The owner of the room, as he sits in the half-cool sunlight of this first morning in September, harmonizes well with the room and its adjuncts. Elderly, white-haired, sharp-browed, close shaven, he looks, like his chairs and tables, well-to-do and prosperous, and, in addition, offers a striking contrast to the appearance and bearing of his companion, who, as well as differing from him in being small made, thin, dark and dissatisfied-looking, is, at the present moment, ill at ease and suffering from the first effects of a surprise, which he scarcely knows whether to consider welcome or unpleasant. Mr. Burdon leans back in his chair, his hand upon a thick pile of parchment, his placid, yea not unacute, eyes regarding his companion, as he fidgets in his chair and gnaws, restlessly, at his three forefingers.

"This—is a most extraordinary story," he says, at last, in response to the elder gentleman's patient, but nevertheless expectant regard.

"Most extraordinary! And you say that it is as fresh to you as to me?"

There is palpable doubt in the tone, and still more plainly hinted incredulity in the look which accompanies the question.

Mr. Burdon does not appear to notice, certainly does not resent, either word or look.

"Yes, quite as fresh. I have, of course, never opened the deed until this morning—until just now. Why should I?"

"Why, indeed?" mutters Edward More, rising and walking to the window, where he stands for a moment to beat the devil's tattoo with his finger upon the glass. "Why, indeed, and yet—it is an extraordinary story—such a—a romantic"——he says the word with a burst of irritable contempt—"business, that I should have thought you would have known something about it."

Mr. Burdon shakes his head.

"I did not know till this morning. I might have had some suspicion or idea, but nothing more——"

Edward More breaks in with a sudden, suspicious question:

"I suppose it is all right?"

"How do you mean?" asks the other. "If you mean is the money all right, of course it is. Lord Sunley and myself are trustees."

"Yes, yes, I know," interposes Edward, with an impatient nod. "I don't suppose the money's anything but right; but the deed?"

"Is without a flaw," replies Mr. Burdon. "Look at it yourself—it was drawn up by one of the first conveyancers—Green. Nothing could be clearer."

"I wonder you weren't asked."

"How?" responds the other, with a smile. "Then the secret would have been out! No—John Weston was a far-seeing, acute man; he would have made a good lawyer, More; and he took every precaution to keep the thing quiet."

"Of course Green knew?"

"Of course! but there was nothing in that, any more than if the Sphinx had known it. You don't suppose Green would open his lips about a deed he had anything to do with if it was the understood thing that he shouldn't. No, I feel convinced that we three—Green, you and I—are the only ones who know of the existence of the deed, excepting the witnesses. Yes," he added, thoughtfully, "it is strange."

"And that precious brother of mine," commenced Edward More, with morose repugnance, "is in happy ignorance of this stroke of luck. Luck! no one ever had such luck, and no one less deserved it," he added, with an envious snarl.

"Well," said Mr. Burdon, with a curious smile, "as to luck, that remains to be proved. He may—he may, you know, refuse to comply with the conditions——"

"Pshaw!" interrupted the amiable brother, with a sneer.

"I said—may," remarked Burdon. "Of course it is not likely that he would be so unwise, so ill-advised as to turn his back upon such a fortune. It is to be hoped not, for your sake," he added, with a smile.

"Ah!" snarled Edward, biting at his finger and fidgeting in his chair. "For my sake, indeed! Do you think he'd spend any of it on the estate? Not he! You don't know him! He's a fool, and a spendthrift, and a profligate, who'd waste and play ducks and drakes with twenty such fortunes, all as large as this."

Mr. Burdon smiled, and rustled the documents under his hand.

"We can't say that. May have sown his wild oats by this time; and if he hasn't, the very condition by which he'd get the money would help him to! 'Pon my word, More, I don't think you've much to feel cut up about. The money would be in the family at least——",

"In one member's pocket, and that not for long," said Edward More, with a malignant sneer. "Oh, don't expect me to be overjoyed and congratulatory. I know too much of my precious brother ever to hope to get any advantage, directly or indirectly, through him. Now, if this money——"

He stopped abruptly, for a little bell sounded in the distance—it was the bell attached to the door of the clerks' office.

"Had only been left to you—if Edward More's name instead of Cyril's had stood in the deed," and Mr. Burdon laughed softly.

Edward More's ill-favored face flushed angrily and enviously, but before he could make any reply there was a knock at the door, and a soft-footed, discreet-voiced clerk stepped in and placed two cards before his principal.

"One minute, Lane. When I ring," said Mr. Burdon. Then he held up the cards.

"They have come," he said.

Edward More glanced at the substantial, expensive clock upon the mantelshelf, and fell to biting his forefinger again.

"The girl," he asked, "have you seen her? Do you know anything about her?"

Mr. Burdon shook his head.

"No, nothing. She has been living with her father, old Weston, the bookworm, as we used to call him, in Geneva. Since his death she has been under the care of her aunt, Weston's sister-in-law."

"And you've no idea what she will be likely to do—what course she'll take."

"How should I have?" asked Mr. Burdon. "Candidly, I don't expect any girl, however unsophisticated, to throw away a chance like this any more than I should suspect your brother of doing so."

"No, of course not!" assented Edward More, ill-humoredly. "She must be told today, I suppose."

"Certainly," said Mr. Burdon, tapping the deed. "What good would it be to anyone to keep it from her? Nothing could be done without her—nothing at all. I wish I had your brother here! You have no clew to his whereabouts?"

"None!" snapped Edward, the look of dislike and repugnance, which always rose to his face, showing on it as usual. "None at all. How should I have? We never correspond; I take no interest in his proceedings. Have you——"

Mr. Burdon shook his head.

"I have not the remotest idea where he is. Since the general smash and wind-up I have seen little of him—lately, nothing at all. He took what money there was—the rents and a slight advance in bank notes. There was some talk of Italy, or Switzerland, or it might be Germany—I could not take upon myself to say that I remember. Poor fellow!"

"Poor fellow!" echoed Edward, with a spiteful ring to the echo, however. "You pity him! A man who has brought all upon his own head, a fool who has wasted a fortune upon blacklegs and—and—every kind of profligacy, and not only his own money, but squandered and wasted, to the best of his ability, the estate that belongs to his family! Pity! I cannot understand how a man of sense can feel anything but disgust and contempt for him."

"Ah, yes—yes, very true," said Mr. Burdon, as the handsome face of the abused man rose before him, with its genial, light-hearted, good-tempered smile; "but one may be too hard—a little too hard. But there, bad as he is, or is not, I'd give something to have him here."

As he spoke he took up a memorandum book, and consulted it.

"I sent Jackson after him last week, quite on my own responsibility, but of course I can't tell whether he will find him. There is one good thing. Sir Cyril carries a pretty distinct identity about with him. Few people who run against him are likely to pass him unnoticed. Like most of your wild men he is confounded handsome."

This was of all subjects the least to Edward More's taste.

"These people are still outside."

Mr. Burdon nodded.

"Nothing more to say before they come in?" he asked, with his hand on the bell, and as Edward shook his head, Mr. Burdon gave the signal.

The discreet clerk opened the door noiselessly, and the two ladies were ushered in.

Mr. Burdon rose from his chair with an inward sense of surprise. Of course no trace of it was visible on his legally composed features.

He had expected to see a half-formed, fairly bred, but rather commonplace young woman, with a decidedly foreign air and appearance, and with whose embarrassment and nervousness he should have to struggle and contend during the task that was set before him.

Instead, he saw a tall, graceful girl, with a face that, but for its look of weariness and pallor, would have been simply lovely; and what told with still greater effect upon the lawyer, an unmistakable air of high breeding which displayed itself in the carriage of her head, the composure—yet not constrained composure—and self-possession of her manner.

The lawyer had expected to have the task of soothing and overcoming the shyness of an inexperienced girl; before him stood a beautiful, queenly—well, almost woman.

"Miss Weston, how do you do? Miss Weston, I am very glad to see you; this is Mr. Edward More, with whom you will soon, no doubt, be well acquainted;" and he turned with his pleasant smile to introduce the then sour-visaged brother of wicked Sir Cyril.

Beautiful Hair and lots of it—if you use Crystolis

Here's good news at last for men and women whose hair is falling, who are growing bald and gray, whose scalps are covered with dandruff that nothing seems to keep away and whose heads itch like mad.

Good news even for those who imagine themselves hopelessly and incurably bald or who suffer from hair or scalp trouble of any kind.

We have secured the sole American rights for the great English discovery, Crystolis, the new hair remedy that in Europe has been called the most wonderful discovery of the century, having been awarded Gold Medals at the big Paris and Brussels Expositions.

Already since securing the American rights hundreds of men and women have written us to tell of phenomenal results obtained by its use. People who have been bald for years tell how they now glory in their beautiful hair. Others who have had dandruff all their lives say they have now a clean, healthy scalp and that hair stopped falling after a few applications of this wonderful new treatment.

We don't care whether you are bothered with falling hair prematurely gray hair, matted or stringy hair; dandruff, itching scalp, or any or all forms of hair trouble, we want you to try "CRYSTOLIS" at our risk.

We give you a binding guarantee without any "strings" or red tape, that it won't cost you a cent if we do not prove to you that "Crystolis" will do all we claim for it, and what's important, we have plenty of money to back our guarantee. We have deposited $1000 in our local bank as a special fund to be forfeited if we fail to comply with this contract. "Virtue itself offends when coupled with forbidding manners."—Bishop Middleton.

In order to meet the demand for information made by COMFORT subscribers on the kindred subjects of Etiquette and Personal Appearance, this column will be devoted to them, and all questions will be answered, but no inquirer shall ask more than two questions each month. We would suggest to readers to cut this column out and paste it in a scrap book. Address letters to Etiquette Editor, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Ark. Greenhorn, Little Rock, Ark.—Your fellow traveler having performed a service for you at some inconvenience to himself, you should not hesitate to recognize him when meeting him anywhere afterwards, provided, of course he is a person whom a lady should recognize socially. They might even become friends, though their meeting was so unconventional. (2) Fish is not to be eaten from the fingers, but one may take a chicken bone in his fingers, or a bone of any meat, or an ear of corn, though it is a little neater not to, except as to the ear of corn, which is not so greasy. Coffee, while hot, may be sipped with a spoon, but it is better form to let it cool sufficiently to drink from the cup. The small spoon of the demi-tasse is hardly to be used except to stir the coffee with.

Violet Eyes, White Springs, Fla.—Your mistake has been with the young man in postponing for a few weeks at a time the date of your marriage. You should, when he failed the first time to meet the date as he was not ready to marry, was to have made the next date a year ahead. A young man out of a job cannot very well find within a few weeks enough to do to make him ready to assume a wife. In a year he might. As you are older than he is—twenty-one is too young for him to marry—you should manage the affair better than you have. We are inclined to think that the engagement should be broken and the young man left free to act, as he seems to be square enough, only he lacks the proper push to get anywhere. Also we may add that you seem to be too anxious to marry.

Fisherman, Paynesville, Minn.—As you called on the visiting lady and showed her attention while she was in your town it would be quite proper for you to call on her at her town without invitation as many ladies do not invite gentlemen to call. Still, it would be just a little more safe if you should write her asking if you might call. As to inviting her to spend the summer at your lakeside home, that would not be proper unless the invitation also went to her mother, or sister, or brother, or the whole family, or unless your home was also a summer hotel, and she would be willing to accept the courtesies of the hotel. However, talk to her about it.

Foolish, Rich Hill, Mo.—If the necklace is of any value and the young man declines to return it, thinking it smart to keep it, you might ask some lawyer friend of yours to write him a letter demanding its return, or risk being arrested for taking and holding it. Otherwise you will have to get it back anyway you can.

J. W. W., Tate, Tenn.—For plain home comfort the girl, who likes work and her home better than anything else and doesn't care for books and company and is not much of a talker, will make the better wife for the man who likes his physical comfort. But for a man looking for companionship and the livelier mind and wider interest of a woman who divides her work with books and the wider interests of the world, the girl who is of that type is the more suitable. It is entirely a matter of individual taste and nobody can decide the question except yourself.

Dimples, Hecla, S. Dak.—The lady, to whom the gentleman says in meeting: "Well, how are you today?" should tell him how she was and ask him how he was or something like that. It is rather familiar and off hand, but passes properly among friends. (2) "Most sincerely," or "Most cordially" is the usual form nowadays of closing a letter to any one, except family letters or love-letters, though the writer may choose any form of closing.

N. F. S., Chelmsford, Mass.—You may be blushing and quiet and pretty and neat and care nothing for the young men, but you are getting away from that very commendable condition when you begin to question whether you should be that kind of a girl or not. As a rule of action in all your association with the opposite sex, always be agreeable and responsive to their attentions with the most kindly appreciation of them, but don't seek in any direct way to win their notice. If they don't notice you, be so intent upon other things of more value, that you won't notice whether they notice you or not. That is not indifference at all, but attention to what is more important to you in the world's work.

Troubled Three, Sharon, S. C.—A wave to a passing friend of either sex is quite proper in the country and quite the custom. (2) In going home from a dance or a call or other social entertainment, it is the lady's place to say when to go, though if they are friends and the man wants to go he may tell the lady how he feels about going and she may make the start. (3) It is very tomboyish for a girl to ride horseback with a man on the same horse. It is all right, when she has to make a journey and there is but one horse for both. At least, it used to be so a hundred years ago.

Dimples, Hamill, S. Dak.—It is bad enough when a girl gets silly over a man, but it is decidedly much worse and unnatural besides when she gets silly over another girl. If this girl you so fondly love is wise she will nip your silliness in the bud right at the beginning, and have nothing to do with you, unless you get some good common sense to mix with your admiration.

S. F. H., Rochester, N. Y.—It will be quite correct for you to ask the gentleman to call, though if you have known each other for some time and he has not called recently, you should not invite him, as it will appear that you are more interested than purely social.

Curly, Gibbons, Mont.—We are not surprised that a boy eighteen years of age is in love with a girl. The woods are full of them. Neither are we surprised that you do not know how to propose to her. Many grown men find it difficult when they reach that point in their courtship. However, we advise that you wait until you are a man before proposing, and maybe by that time you will have learned something. An eighteen-year-old boy wanting to propose to a girl and not knowing how would be pathetic, only there are so many of them that they are a joke. At the same time, there should be more, because there are enough of them at that age who do know how and do get married as to cause a tremendous lot of domestic trouble.

Subscriber, Riddle, Oregon.—There has been quite a romance in your life, as you say, but the man of seventy is not the same man of forty years ago who said you were to be his second wife. There was a time when he was first a widower when you might have had him, but you chose differently and he took another in your place. Now that each of you has divorced your respective spouses you want to marry him, but the man of seventy with money is looking for a pretty young girl, not a handsome matron of sixty, and we fear that your romance is at an end. He knows as well as you do that he can get you if he wants you, and as he makes no effort to do so, you should accept his indifference as a sure sign that he doesn't want you and make up your mind not to want him. But it is an interesting story just the same.

Advil, Camp Crook, S. Dak.—A gentleman, who brings a lady home from a dance or other entertainment, is not entitled to kiss her as a reward for his services in her behalf. You owe him nothing except your thanks for his courtesy, and he owes you an apology for asking more than that.

Chick, Kannapolis, N. C.—Yes, sir, it was highly improper to ask a young lady to kiss you on leaving town after an acquaintance of four weeks, unless you had been busy and become engaged to her in that time. However, as you are only sixteen and want to know if you are old enough to wear long pants, you may be forgiven this time, but please do not let it occur again. P. S. An unkissed kiss is sometimes loaded as you have found out to your sorrow, but you will outgrow it. Cheer up, there's worse to follow.

Ozma, Fairmont, W. Va.—A lady may say what she pleases to a gentleman who asks her to go to the theater—"Yes, thank you," or "No, thank you," according to how she feels about it. (2) As you know only a few gentlemen and want to give a birthday party, and don't want all ladies, why not ask such gentlemen as you know and ask each lady to invite a gentleman of her acquaintance. That would be quite proper and add to the interest of the occasion. (3) A girl may best attract young men by being attractive herself and not trying to attract them.

Wynola, Lehigh, Iowa.—It is perfectly correct for a girl to accept a respectable young man's company home from church, or a party, but if the young man is really and truly respectable he will not let her find her way to church or a party, but will take her there and then bring her home.

P. H., Warrenton, N. C.—An engaged couple owe almost as much to each other as if they were married, and when either of them disregards the reasonable wishes of the other, the engagement should be broken. In your case the young woman is not acting at all as she should, in accepting the attentions of a man with whom you will have nothing to do for good reasons. It indicates a disposition that no man wants in a wife and is a very sure sign that she has neither love nor respect for you. The engagement should be broken, and if you are wise there will be no reconciliation thereafter. Make the break permanent, unless you are marrying for trouble.

The Littlest Lover

small adorer stopped abruptly in his tracks and stared at her.

"Oh, Marg'ret!" he gasped, "you look ist like a rose yerself!"

"Thank you, my gallant cavalier. It seems to me you are beginning rather early making such flowery compliments to young ladies." There was a sudden avalanche of roses. She caught the small boy in her arms nearly smothering him with kisses, and finally deposited him on a patch of velvety grass. He scrambled up, straightened himself stiffly and stood regarding her with a great air of outraged dignity.

"You don't do other young men like that, Marg'ret," he said reproachfully.

"Oh, I beg your pardon! Indeed I do! I forgot it was a young man. Will you forgive me, Sir Cavalier?"

Morris stood looking at her a troubled light in his big brown eyes. "You're my own sweetheart, ain't you Marg'ret?" he asked wistfully, "Mine and Robert's?"

"Why, surely I am, honey boy," Margaret replied kneeling down beside him and putting her arms around him.

"Then what makes you go with Jack Ford?"

Talk about angels—or devils. Before Margaret could frame a reply there was a whir and a "honk-honk" and with an ostentatious flourish a gaudy red touring car drew up in front of the gate. Mr. Jack Ford alighted and came straight toward the pair in the garden. He doffed his hat with a lavishing courtesy.

"Miss Alden, the new car entreats the honor of your presence for its initiative trip."

Margaret laughed audaciously in his face. "Thank the car for me," she replied, "I shall be delighted to honor it with my presence."

At this juncture she felt a fierce tug at her skirt and looking down met a pair of indignant protesting eyes.

"Marg'ret, you promised to pick me some roses." The small voice was perilously near to tears.

Margaret gathered up the armful that had fallen to the ground and placed them in his hands. "Run in, sweetheart, and tell mamma that Margaret has gone for a little ride," she wheedled.

Morris fixed a withering eye on the young man. "I ain't your sweetheart if you go with him!" He stamped his foot vehemently.

"Oh, don't you understand, dear," said Margaret mischievously, "I am going with the car."

"He ain't a nice man, Marg'ret, he called me a bad, bad name, an' he said 'at you——" Morris never got to finish his sentence for the young man interrupted hastily:

"See here, youngster, do you know what I've got for you in my pocket?"

"I don't want nothin' 'at you've got!"

"All right, then I'll give it to Miss Margaret. Come, Miss Alden."

The child clung to her. "Don't go, Marg'ret, please!" he pleaded.

But she laughingly brushed him aside and with an airy wave of the hand she was gone. Glancing back as she entered the car she caught a glimpse of Morris as he flung his roses to the four winds and threw himself face downward upon the ground.

Margaret did not expect to enjoy that ride. She herself could not have told just why she went. It was in line with her innate love of adventure and her usual disregard of the proprieties. The wildest burst of speed could not carry her away from the vision of a tear-stained imploring little face and the sound of a wistful childish voice, "You're my own sweetheart, ain't you Marg'ret, mine and Robert's?" She had not noticed the direction the car was taking until they suddenly halted before a pretentious building in the country club district.

"Why are we stopping here?" she asked.

"Oh, just to look around, and get a little refreshment," answered the young man lightly.

Margaret did not like the appearance of the loungers on the veranda, and she had no desire to stop anywhere.

"I do not wish any refreshments, Mr. Ford," she said coldly, "and I do not care to stop here. Please let us return."

At that moment a dissipated looking young man came swaggering out to the edge of the veranda and hailed the car.

"Hello, Ford," he grinned, "what bird of paradise have you picked up now?"

"Which do you mean?" inquired Jack Ford, shifting his eyes significantly from Margaret to the car and then back to the girl.

Margaret's eyes blazed dangerously. Her face flamed crimson and then went white.

"Oh, that's all right, girlie, just a little joke." The two men winked at each other, and Ford put out his hand to assist her in alighting. Scorning the proffered hand she sprang to the ground on the opposite side.

"What the devil!" ejaculated the man.

"Will you be kind enough to take me home immediately?" The tone was low but not to be misunderstood.

"I didn't mean any harm——"

"Will you take me home, or shall I walk?" He looked at her.

"Oh, I'll take you home," he muttered.

Margaret took her place in the rear seat. The homeward trip was made in an ominous silence except for the humming of the machine. The girl cowered in the farthest corner alternating between fierce anger and shamed chagrin. As they neared home she leaned forward to say:

"Please let me out on seventeenth street."

There was no answer save an increase of speed. As the auto whirled up to the curbing a little figure stumbled out and started to cross the street.

Margaret had only a confused sense of the happenings of the next minute. She recalled vaguely a muttered imprecation of "d—d brat!" as the car scarcely halted but sped on its way up the street. Then she found herself in the house with the still form of the child in her arms.

What a nightmare of anguish was crowded into the next few days, when the precious life hovered between earth and heaven! Margaret could only pray for mercy.

On the evening of the fourth day Margaret sat by the little bed watching. Morris clung to his idol and was quieter when he felt her presence near. All at once the big brown eyes opened and looked wonderingly into hers.

"Where's Robert?" came the faint little question.

Margaret could hardly repress a start. She had forgotten the big lover, she had forgotten everything in the world except the littlest lover. But she mustered a tender little smile.

"Robert is all right, darling. And how is my little sweetheart?"

"All wight." He lay still for a moment and then another question had to come.

"Where's Jack Ford?"

Margaret flushed distressingly, but she bent over him tenderly. "He's gone, deary, gone, gone. I never will speak to him again. I just want to be your own sweetheart. Will you let me?"

"And Robert's?"

"Yes, and Robert's."

"Ist mine and Robert's?"

"Just yours and Robert's, dear."

"Oh, goody! goody!" The little arms clasped her neck in a close embrace. And with his dimpled hand nestling in hers he dropped off into a quiet natural sleep.

"Fine!" said the doctor on his next visit. "He'll be as good as new in a day or two."

With her mind at ease concerning the child Margaret had time to grow uneasy at Robert Jordon's continued silence. Two more days passed and still not a word. The suffering of the past few days coupled with the uncertainty and suspense were telling on her terribly.

On the afternoon of the seventh day Margaret stole away to her retreat in the garden. She wanted to be alone to think things over.

In the midst of her cogitations the blood suddenly rushed to her temples and she stood up breathless. She had caught a glimpse of a tall, well-known form coming with swift strides down the street. She covered her face with her hands and waited tensely. She heard his quick step approaching, and then she was swept off her feet into the shelter of a pair of strong comforting arms.

It was too much. The flood gates burst, and Robert Jordon found himself helpless to cope with the situation.

"Margaret, child, don't!" he begged. "I'm scared, I never saw you cry like this before. I was a brute. Look up, dear, and say you forgive me!"

But she only clung to him and cried inarticulately, "Hush, Robert! Keep still, and let me cry it out! I'll be all right in a little while."

At that instant the other lover came tumbling in on the scene as though the very life of the community depended upon his getting there. But he stopped short, rooted to the ground in sheer amazement.

Surprise, bewilderment, reproach, chased each other across his chubby features. Finally he managed to blurt out:

"I—didn't s'pose you'd make her cry!"

"I didn't mean to, partner, honest I didn't!" pleaded the culprit. "I don't know what she is crying about, do you?"

At that the pendulum swung to the other extreme. Margaret began to laugh. Morris's face brightened.

"Aw, she ain't crying at all! She's ist a foolin'! Look at her!" he exclaimed gleefully, dancing about on one foot.

Margaret wiped her eyes and seated herself on a bench with a lover on each side of her. Morris snuggled up close to her.

"We've got her now, ain't we, Robert?" he said. "She can't ever get away from us, can she?"

"Sure thing, partner!" The big lover reached across and grasped the hand of the littlest lover.

"You are a brick," he said. "You stood by the guns while I ran away like a coward."

"I don't deserve the two of you," said Margaret with misty eyes.

Comfort's Information Bureau

Under this heading all questions by COMFORT subscribers on subjects not related to the special departments elsewhere in the paper will be answered, as far as may be. COMFORT readers are advised to read carefully the advertisements in this paper, as they will often find in them what they seek through their questions addressed to this Bureau. They will thus save time, labor and postage.

NOTICE.—As the privileges of this Bureau and of all other departments of COMFORT are for subscribers only, no attention will be given any inquiry which does not bear the writer's correct name and address. Initials only, or a fictitious name, if requested, will appear in the published answer, but the inquiry must invariably be signed by the writer's true name.

A. M., Minersville, Pa.—Writers to write photo-plays that will sell have to have a great deal more than a "registered coupon," or forty such. They have to have the ability and the practise. (2) If you have pictures which the papers do not have and they are such as they want they will buy them at good prices, but be sure you know what they want, or you will be disappointed. Pictures, songs, poems and stories are bought constantly but they are supplied by skilled artists. Don't try it unless you are skilled.

O. G. S., Warfordsburg, Pa.—The Gazette and The Republican, at last accounts, were the leading newspapers in Phoenix, Ariz. Our report is not the latest and there may have been changes.

T. M. T., Factoryville, Pa.—When a firm has misrepresented itself to anyone through the mails, and letters of inquiry are not answered, the final recourse is to submit the case to the Postmaster General, Washington, D. C. Simply state your case to the P. O. Department and the matter will be investigated. We hardly believe you will get your money back, because the company will claim that you were insured during the years you were paying and if you had died you would have been paid in full. Still, it should be made to play fair with its patrons.

S. H., Hawk Run, Pa.—The talk about the movement from the city to the farm has been increasing for several years, but thus far no definite general organization has been effected, though there are some individuals who are taking special interest and leading the way to what is sure to take place after a while, that is, as soon as people realize the advantages of the country. Of course, everybody can't live in the country, nor can everybody live in the city, though, at present the movement of the population is cityward. By and by the necessity will come for those to live in the country who can, and the movement will be in that direction until there is a just balance established. Write to Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. for reliable information and such addresses as you wish. If they are to be had, you will receive them.

Mrs. L. H., Callam, Wash.—This is not the proper department to apply to for legal advice. COMFORT employs an able lawyer to answer law questions through our "Home Lawyer" department. Write to "Editor COMFORT's Home Lawyer," Augusta, Maine, for any information regarding law matters. Other readers please take notice.

G. B. G., Clio, Mich.—A man votes where he lives and pays his taxes, but if he lives—that is, makes his permanent residence—in one place and owns property elsewhere and pays taxes there, he votes where he lives. At least, that is the common practise, for every voter is not a taxpayer. Young men of age in college vote at their homes, unless they have never voted and may elect to claim their college town as home and vote there. In Michigan a voter must have lived in the state two years, and in the county, town and precinct twenty days. Voting laws vary in various states. Voters must register before voting in nearly all the states, but registry laws vary also. No matter what opinions old voters hold, the final settlement is made by the election judges wherever the voter goes to cast his vote.

M. A. G., Toone Furnace, Tenn.—We do not know where you will find the "consumption cure" you mention, but we wish to say to you positively that no plant on earth yet discovered is a cure for consumption, nor has any other cure yet been found by science though scientists are seeking it all the time. Fresh air thus far seems to be nearer a cure or a prevention, than anything else. If there is a predisposition to consumption in your family, you should move to the dry air of Colorado or Arizona or New Mexico and live in the open. The opportunities for industrious people are quite as good out there as in your state—maybe better, depending upon what your occupation is.

H. L. P., Sanborn, Ind.—The letter e is oftenest used of any letter in the alphabet. Vowels are used oftener than consonants, there being only five or six of them to go with about four times as many consonants. The letters most frequently used in ordinary writing are e, a, o, i, t, h, d, r, and s. Those least used are j, q, g, x, b, k, z. Get a job in a printing office and pull information right out of the case. Besides if you become a good printer your information will be worth money to you.

Grant, Lochgelly, W. Va.—The books of O. Henry and Rudyard Kipling are first-class, but they are hardly suitable for children, except Kipling's "Jungle Book," and "Just So" stories. The books you should choose for entertainment and at the same time instruction are those juvenile books written especially for young people. If you will write to the Robert Clark Co., Publishers, Cincinnati, Ohio, or to Rand, McNally & Co., Chicago, Ill., for list of juvenile books you will find in them the titles of the best books for juveniles. Good books for boys are the Scientific American Boy series, Munn & Co., New York. Captain Mayne Reid's stories are good for natural history, though they are not as modern as the others. Louisa Alcott's books for girls are always good. Maria Edgeworth wrote popular stories but they are not modern. The Henty books, as they are called, are historical stories, popular with boys, but not wholly reliable as history. They are highly interesting, however, and will cultivate a taste for reading. We are glad to see that you are interested in books, good books, and we hope other COMFORT parents will follow your example and get good books for their children. If you will write to H. Malkan, 42 Broadway, New York City, asking for prices of second-hand books for juveniles, you will be able to buy books very much cheaper than new, and quite as useful, though they may not be as fresh in their outside appearance. Many city boys and girls buy books and having read them, trade them in for others and thus the second-hand supply is always full, and prices are very low indeed, as compared with original prices.

M. T., Elizabethtown, Ky.—The hollow stone which you have found, filled with what you call glass, but which are quartz crystals, is known as a geode, and they are too common to be worth anything much, unless one happens to be very large with unusual crystals. This might bring a very fair price if some geological collector wanted it bad enough. Kentucky's geology is rather productive of geodes and we have seen some fine ones from there.

Mrs. S. B., Burgaw, N. C.—We advise you not to go to any trouble and expense to secure your share of any estate in England, because you will hardly get it. If you must make an effort though, write your letters to Secretary, United States Embassy, London, England, and not direct to English officials, unless you put your case in the hands of an attorney who will act as he thinks best.

M. A. N., Pearl, Ill.—You are not going about it right to get a position as railroad timekeeper. The men high in authority, whose addresses you ask for, are not the men you should try to reach, but those in immediate charge of such a position as you want. If you wrote to the others your letters would be at once referred to the department where they belonged and the men high up would know nothing about it. As you are experienced in the work you ought to know someone personally who could assist you in getting a place. Naturally, friends or acquaintances will have the call over strangers. Other COMFORT readers, who write to us for the names of high officials when they are looking for subordinate positions, please make a note of this. The big men of all these great corporations have nothing whatever to do with employing men except for the very highest official positions.

Dolly Prim and Her Dresses

HERE is the fun you have been waiting for. A neat little dolly and four beautiful dresses to cut out and put on her. The best way to do it is to paste the whole picture on a piece of cardboard and after it is dry, if you wish, you can color them all nice bright colors, with crayons or chalk. For instance you can make the hair dark or light brown, and the face pink, and the skirts blue, and the waists red, and so on to suit yourself. When this is done cut around the edge of each dress and hat with the scissors. Take care to leave the tabs on. The dresses are put on Dolly Prim by bending the little tabs back. The wedge-shaped piece is bent on the dotted line and pasted to Dolly's back so she can stand up alone. The hats are slit at the dotted line and placed over Dolly's head. In this picture we have four different gowns and three hats. Keep Dolly Prim and her dresses in a nice clean box when you are not playing with them. This is the last paper doll we shall print this season because the weather is getting warm now and it is best for you little girls to play outdoors through the summer. How have you liked the Cubby Bear stories? I wish you would write me, or get your mammas to write and let me know what you think of those stories and the paper dolls, and tell me what kind of stories you little girls like best.

UNCLE JOHN, Care COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Story About Dolly Prim

One day Miss Alice, who is Dolly Prim's mistress, asked her where she wanted to go, and Dolly answered, "To the seashore." Alice then put on Dolly the black dress and hat, with the shovel in one hand and the pail in the other, and they went and dug in the sand and had a jolly time. After a while they got tired and wanted to go home. Miss Alice thought best to put the gray-striped suit and sunbonnet on for the return trip and this pleased Dolly very much. They got home very hungry just in time for dinner. After eating they felt tired and wanted to sit in the shade and read." "I have just the proper costume for this," said Alice gaily, and she dressed Dolly in the white suit which needs the pointed cap with the feather in it to make a complete change. For a while Alice was busy looking at the pictures and did not notice that Dolly had nodded to sleep. "Why you dear little thing," she said, when she looked around and saw what had happened, "I should have put you to bed long ago." In a minute she had Dolly dressed in her cute little pajamas, and after giving her a great big kiss tucked her cozily in bed. Was not that a pleasant day for both of them?

Cubby Bear, Peacemaker

By Lena B. Ellingwood

Copyright, 1915, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher, Inc.

"BUNNY RABBIT! BUNNY RABBIT! Where are you going so fast?" called little Cubby Bear, hurrying after the gray streak that was disappearing around a thicket of cedars.

Bunny Rabbit stopped.

"You may go with me if you like," he said. "I am going after a plant. I saw it yesterday—such a beautiful plant, with a fine, red flower! I am going to plant it just beside the door of my house. Then I shall look for other pretty flowers in my walks through the forest and fields, and I hope some day to have a fine garden."

"Oh, how nice!" cried Cubby Bear. "I will help you."

They soon came to where the beautiful red flower was growing. Taking it up carefully, with plenty of dirt, so that the tender roots might not be destroyed, they hurried back to Bunny Rabbit's house. When it was planted beside the door, they called Chirpy Chipmunk, who lived near, and Wollie Woodchuck, who happened to be passing by, to admire it.

"How glad I shall be," said Bunny, "when I have a nice, large garden; I shall have ferns, and ladies' slippers, and jack-in-the-pulpits, and many pretty things growing in it!"

For three days after that, the weather was rainy, and Cubby Bear stayed at home, but the next pleasant day he went to call on Bunny Rabbit and see the red flower.

Poor Bunny was trotting back and forth, waving his paws in distress.

"Oh, what is the matter?" asked Cubby Bear. "Are the Bunny Babies sick again?"

"No, no!" answered Bunny. "Not so bad as that, but my flower—oh, Cubby Bear, look, look!" The beautiful plant was crushed and trampled, the red flower on the ground, half covered with mud.

"It is bad enough," cried Bunny Rabbit, "to lose my plant, but that is not the worst! For it was trampled down and spoiled by Wollie Woodchuck, and I thought him one of my best friends! I have never done anything unkind to him! Oh, I can never like him again!"

"I am sorry," said Cubby Bear. "I do not want trouble between my friends. Who told you Wollie spoiled your plant?"

"It was Redtop Woodpecker. But what does it matter who told me? My plant is spoiled, and Wollie did it!"

For two days little Cubby Bear watched for Redtop Woodpecker, and when he heard him tap-tapping at the bark of an old tree, he called, "Redtop Woodpecker! please come here! I want to talk to you!"

Redtop came, hopping daintily along, his gay crest glowing in the morning sunlight.

"Did you see Wollie Woodchuck trample down and spoil Bunny Rabbit's beautiful red flower?" asked Cubby.

"No, I did not see him do it."

"Then why did you tell Bunny Rabbit so?"

"Because Molly Muskrat told me."

Then Cubby Bear trotted off to where Molly Muskrat sat sunning herself on a flat stone beside the Big Brook.

"Did you see Wollie Woodchuck trample down and spoil Bunny Rabbit's beautiful red flower?" asked Cubby.

"No, I did not see him do it."

"Then why did you tell Redtop Woodpecker so?"

"Because Racky Coon told me, when he came to the Big Brook to wash his paws."

A long way Cubby Bear had to go to find Racky Coon. He was high up in a spruce tree, playing tag with his brother.

"Did you see Wollie Woodchuck trample down and spoil Bunny Rabbit's beautiful red flower?" asked Cubby.

"No, I did not see him do it."

"Then why did you tell Molly Muskrat so?"

"Because Dr. Squilly Porcupine told me."

Then little Cubby Bear went to Squilly's house. But Squilly was not at home.

"I know where he is," called Billy Blue Jay. "He has gone to see Polly Partridge, whose cold is worse."

So Cubby Bear sat down and waited until Squilly Porcupine came home.

"Did you see Wollie Woodchuck trample down and spoil Bunny Rabbit's beautiful red flower?" asked Cubby.

"No, I did not see him."

"Then why did you tell Racky Coon so?"

"Because Woozie Weasel told me."

"Ah!" cried Cubby Bear. "I was afraid Woozie had something to do with it! He is always making trouble. Oh, here comes Shinyblack Crow! We will see if he knows anything about it!"

"Yes, I know all about it," said Shinyblack Crow. "I happened to be flying by and saw Woozie Weasel and Foxy Reynard in front of Bunny Rabbit's house, so I lighted on a tree and watched them. They had trampled down and spoiled Bunny Rabbit's beautiful red flower, and I heard Woozie say, 'We will tell him it was Wollie Woodchuck did it! Oh, what fun!'"

"It was not good fun," said Cubby Bear, "and it has made trouble."

"I hope, Squilly Porcupine," said Shinyblack Crow, "that you will not tell anything again that bad Woozie Weasel tells you without first finding out if it is true."

Then little Cubby Bear and Shinyblack Crow went to Bunny Rabbit's house, taking Wollie Woodchuck with them.

When Bunny Rabbit saw Woolie, he said:

"Why do you come to my house, Wollie Woodchuck? I have no pretty flowers left for you to spoil! Go away! I do not want you here!"

Then little Cubby Bear said:

"No, no, Bunny Rabbit, it was not Wollie Woodchuck who spoiled your plant, it was that bad Woozie Weasel, as good Shinyblack Crow knows. He has come here to tell you about it, and we brought Wollie Woodchuck, so that you and he may be friends once more."

So the two little animals shook paws, promising always to be friends, and kind-hearted little Cubby Bear was happy.

Got More Pleasure Out of Uncle Charlie's Poems Than Any Other Book

That is what Mrs. Bjerke, Detroit, Minn., says about Uncle Charlie's Poems and you'd say more than that if you had a copy in your hands. For eight years we've been telling you about this gorgeous book of rib tickling fun, and though we have given you an opportunity to secure this delightful volume that would bring joy and happiness to you and yours, only one COMFORT home in fifty contains this delightful book, a book which you can obtain without the outlay of a single cent. If you want to know the real Uncle Charlie, possess pictures of him at his work and know the history of his life, get up a club of only four fifteen-month subscribers to COMFORT at twenty-five cents each and secure this exquisitely bound, 160-page, lilac cloth bound volume which contains the funniest and best recitations for parlor and stage ever written. Best spring medicine in the world. Work for it today.

Uncle Charlie's Songs Sang Themselves Into Her Heart

That is what Mrs. Bjerke, of Detroit, Mich., also says about Uncle Charlie's gorgeous song book which contains twenty-eight of the most delightful songs ever written. Full music for voice and piano. Songs for all occasions—love songs, coon songs, comic songs, sacred songs—all gathered into a superb volume as big as a copy of COMFORT, with an artistic cover on which appear four splendid pictures of Uncle Charlie, equal to photographs. Yours free for a club of only two fifteen-month subscriptions to COMFORT at twenty-five cents each. Both books free for a club of six. Work for them today.

PLANT FIFTY-SIX MILES OF ROSES IN ONE DAY.—Fifty-six miles of roses were recently added to the beauties of Portland, Oregon, with the planting in one day of 100,000 bushes. They were purchased as a result of the campaign started by the City Beautiful Committee of the Rose Festival Association, the purpose being to make the city more than usually attractive in preparation for the coming of visitors on their way to and from the exposition at San Francisco. Many roses worth $1 were sold by the committee through the cooperation of florists at 12½ cents each. The bushes sold are large enough to bloom in time for the Rose Festival in June.

COW CREATES NEW WORLD'S RECORD.—Tests completed by the Dairy Department of the Ohio State University establish a world's record in milk production, according to figures made public. The new dairy queen is Murne Cowan, a five-year-old Guernsey cow which in the last year produced twelve tons of milk. The cow's milk averaged five per cent in butter fat. During the year she produced 1,096 pounds of butter fat, which churned into 1,400 pounds of butter. Her home is a farm near Barberton, Ohio.

Four Wheel Chairs in April

278 is COMFORT'S Total to Date

Four more shut-ins provided with COMFORT wheel chairs and enabled to get out into the blessed sunshine and breathe the perfume-laden air of spring is our April record.

Following are the names of the recipients of the four April wheel chairs. The figures after their names indicate the number of subscriptions sent in by them or by their friends in their behalf.

Mrs. Ersley C. Mote, Double Springs, Ala., 141; Mrs. Callie Grubbs, Batesville, Ark., 100; William E. Parris, Bryson City, N. C., 84; Mrs. Louise Fenner, Dunellen, N. J., 82.

Mrs. Mote is a widow 82 years old and lives with her granddaughter, as she has no children living She enjoyed good health and was active until she suffered a stroke of paralysis, last August, which rendered her lower limbs helpless. Since then she has been confined to her room, which is very trying to her as she had always led an outdoor life, although she bears her affliction patiently. Her neighbor, Mrs M. C. Adkins, who helped get the subscriptions for her, writes me that Mrs. Mote is very anxious for the COMFORT wheel chair and that it will be a great help and give her a world of pleasure. She is grateful to those who have helped her get this as she is not able to buy one. I am glad this chair will be the means of getting her out again in season to enjoy the spring and summer

Mrs. Grubbs is crippled by rheumatism, and is a great sufferer from that and the effects of a surgical operation. Julia Saunders, who helped get the subscriptions for her, writes that Mrs. Grubbs and her husband are highly respected but poor, and that the wheel chair will be very helpful as the doctors advise her to be out in the open air.

William E. Parris is 78 years old, and has been crippled since five years ago when his left thigh was broken and hip dislocated by a falling tree. His wife is 68 and afflicted with rheumatism. This brave woman writes me regarding her efforts to secure subscriptions for her husband's wheel chair; "I find that most people prefer to get the club premiums which you offer, rather than let the subscriptions go to help a poor shut-in get a wheel-chair. If my husband did not receive a small pension as a Confederate soldier we could not live at all. I have all the work to do in the house and out, and him to take care of besides. If I can get him the wheel chair it will be a great help to us both.' If it were not, as Mrs. Parris says, that most people who get up subscription clubs prefer to take the premiums themselves rather than help the shut-ins, COMFORT'S Wheel-Chair Club would be putting out 20 to 40 wheel chairs a month and soon every needy cripple in the land would be supplied. We have a lot of other shut-ins on our waiting list who, like this old soldier, need your help to provide wheel chairs for them.

Mrs. Fenner has two small children, the elder a sickly boy of six years She has been a crippled invalid and great sufferer since the birth of her youngest child four years ago. She is helpless. She cannot use her hands to sew and her eyes are becoming affected so that she cannot read. To care for her and the little ones is a difficult task for her husband and his folks. She is very desirous to have a wheel chair which she hopes will prove some relief to her and help those who have the care of her.

Have a merciful remembrance of the many poor shut-ins suffering for much needed wheel chairs to get them out into the sun and air while you are enjoying the beauties of springtime and do something, even a little, to help our Wheel-Chair Club's splendid work.

The Roll of Honor follows, but I have little space for letters of thanks.

Sincerely yours,

W. H. GANNETT, Publisher of COMFORT.

P. S. For the information of our many new subscribers let me explain that for each and every 200 new 15-months subscriptions to COMFORT sent in either singly or in clubs by persons who direct that they are to be credited to COMFORT'S WHEEL-CHAIR CLUB instead of claiming the premiums to which they would be entitled, I give a FIRST-CLASS INVALID WHEEL CHAIR to some worthy, destitute, crippled Shut-in and pay the freight, too. It is a large and expensive premium for me to give for that number of subscribers, but I am always glad to do my part a little faster each month than you do yours.

Subscription price is 25 cents, but if sent in clubs of five or more for the Wheel-Chair Club, I accept them at 20 cents each.

Her Wheel Chair Is a Comfort and Help

ATLANTA, IND.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:

Please accept for Mr. Gannett and yourself my sincere thanks for the wheel chair which arrived in perfect condition a few days ago. I also wish to thank through COMFORT the many friends who helped me obtain the chair, which certainly will be a comfort and help to me. Very sincerely yours,

GOLDEN GERTIE FIPPEN.

COMFORT Wheel Chair Enables him to get Out and See Things he Never had an Opportunity to see Before

BRADFORD, 9 High St., MASS.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:

My wheel chair arrived safely yesterday afternoon, and I immediately began to use it. I like it very much, and in the short time I've had it, I've been able to see things on the street and around my home that without the chair I would never have had an opportunity to see. I want to thank you and Mr. Gannett and all kind friends who helped me get this chair. God bless you all. Your sincere friend,

GEORGE W. SPENCER.

The Roll of Honor comprises the names of those who have sent five or more subscriptions to credit of the Wheel-Chair Club during the month previous. Following each name is the number of subscriptions sent.

In this department will be carefully considered any legal problem which may be submitted by a subscriber. All opinions given herein will be prepared at our expense by eminent counsel.

Inasmuch as it is one of the principal missions of COMFORT to aid in upbuilding and upholding the sanctity of the home, no advice will be given on matters pertaining to divorce. Any paid-up subscriber to COMFORT is welcome to submit inquiries, which, so far as possible, will be answered in this department. If any reader, other than a subscriber, wishes to take advantage of this privilege, it may be done by sending twenty-five (25) cents, in silver or stamps, for a 15-month subscription to COMFORT thus obtaining all the benefits which our subscribers enjoy including a copy of the magazine for fifteen months.

Should any subscriber desire an immediate, special opinion on any legal question, privately mailed, it may be had by sending one dollar with a letter asking such advice, addressing the same to "THE EDITOR, COMFORT'S HOME LAWYER," Augusta, Maine, and in reply a carefully prepared opinion will be sent in an early mail.

Full names and addresses must be signed by all persons seeking advice in this column but not necessarily for publication. Unless otherwise requested, initials only will be published.

Mrs. M. K., Louisiana.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that unless otherwise stipulated, community of acquest and gains exists between husband and wife, that the husband is the head of the community and administers the property and can sell or mortgage without wife's consent, but that if community is dissolved by death or otherwise, wife or her heirs are entitled to one undivided one half of the community property; that a second wife of the husband would have no interest in such one half interest of the first wife's heirs in the community property of her husband and his first wife, and no interest unless she survives him in her husband's community property of a former marriage or his separate property. (2) We think that the children of the former wife can compel the division of their share of the community property in a reasonable time after their mother's death, such share as would go to a minor to be paid to a general guardian and an infant's share in real estate to be disposed of by a court proceeding or action. We think it may be more economical to hold the real estate until the minors come of age.

Miss C. S., West Virginia.—We very much doubt that your Board of Education would be willing to issue a teacher's certificate upon an examination through the mails; we think such a method would afford to the applicant for such certificate, too much opportunity to obtain assistance in answering the difficult questions, and would not be a proper test of such applicant's competency.

Miss M. B., Maine.—Under the laws of our state, we are of the opinion that anyone of two or more owners of real estate in common can through the proper action, compel the division or partition of such real estate, or in case the physical condition of the property is such that it cannot practically be divided in kind, can compel the sale of the property and a division of the money proceeds of such sale; such an action, we think, is necessarily quite expensive, and in cases where the property involved is of small value, we think it is sometimes more economical to come to an agreement for a voluntary sale by all the parties in interest. (2) We think that if your brother-in-law refuses to pay you the money he owes you it will be necessary for you to bring an action against him to enforce the collection thereof. We think a letter to his employer might have some moral effect, but would have no legal effect.

J. M.—In the absence of a will, we do not think you are entitled to any share from your stepfather's estate; we think that upon his death without a will his whole estate would go to his surviving widow and his own children; in default of these his estate would go to other of his blood relatives depending upon who was left.

Mrs. L. A. C., Missouri.—We do not think your neighbor has any legal right to allow the water from his house roof to flood your dooryard, but if your complaint is based upon a small dripping from a leak in his leader into your yard, we think you will find it difficult to convince a court or jury that you have suffered much damage.

C. D., New Hampshire.—We think that the defendant in a breach of promise action might base a defense of such action upon the fact that the plaintiff, during the engagement to marry, received attentions from other men. The success of such a defense, we think would depend upon the nature and extent of such attentions, and to what extent the plantiff in the action encouraged and reciprocated them.

Mrs. L. O. D., Arkansas.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that upon the death of a married man, leaving no will, and leaving a widow and children as his heirs at law and next of kin, his widow would receive dower of a one third interest for life in his real estate and a one third interest absolutely in his personal estate, the balance going in equal shares to his children, the descendants of any deceased child taking the parent's share; we do not think the fact that the children were by a former wife would affect their intestate rights of inheritance from their father's estate.

Mrs. J. F. Q., Massachusetts.—We do not think the fact that you have no property would defeat the right of the company you mention to bring action against you if you refuse to carry out your contract with them, such fact, we think might ultimately defeat their collection of any claim they may have against you, but we think the right to bring action belongs to them and they can do as they see fit in regard to the matter.

Mrs. J. L., Nevada.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that all property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife, except such as may be acquired by gift, devise or descent shall be common property, and upon the death of the husband, after payment of debts and expenses, shall all go to the surviving widow; we think the husband's separate property, if he leaves no will, and leaves more than one child, would go one third to the surviving widow and the remainder in equal shares to his children, the descendants of any deceased child taking their parent's share, and children of a former marriage taking the same share as the children of his last marriage.

Mrs. L. N. H., Colorado.—Under the laws of Illinois, we are of the opinion that upon the death of a married man, a resident of that state, leaving no will, and leaving a widow and six children, his widow would receive dower of a one third interest for life in his real estate, and one third of the personal estate absolutely, the balance going in equal shares to his children, the descendants of any child who predeceased him taking their parent's share; if the daughter you mention who died survived her father, her husband would receive from her estate dower of a one third interest for life in her real estate and one third of her personal property absolutely, the balance going to her children in equal shares, and her estate would include, of course, her share of her father's estate as well as whatever other property she might own, but if she predeceased her father, the descent of her share of her father's estate would be direct from the grandfather to her children, and her husband would have no share in this property.

S. E. S., Washington.—Under the laws of your state we are of the opinion that all property acquired during the marriage, except such as may be acquired by gift, devise or descent, constitutes the community property of the husband and wife, and that upon the death of one, one half of such property goes absolutely to the survivor, the other half of such property being subject to the testamentary disposition of the one so dying; we think the wife could, by will, leave her one half of the community property and the whole of her separate property to her husband for life with the remainder over to their child or children, and that the husband could thereafter only dispose of his life estate in such property; we do not think she can dispose of by will or otherwise, his own share of the community property, or of his separate property; we think she must survive him before she acquires any intestacy right in his property.

LET US MAKE YOU FAT

50c Box Free

We Want to Prove at Our Own Expense That It Is No Longer Necessary to Be Thin, Scrawny, and Undeveloped.

Fair Bather: "I'm going to leave this writing in the sand and see if that skinny pair yonder won't take the hint."

This is a generous offer to every thin man or woman who reads COMFORT. We positively guarantee to increase your weight to your own satisfaction or no pay. Think this over—think what it means. At our own risk, we offer to put 10, 15, yes, 30 pounds of good, solid "stay there" flesh on your bones, to fill out hollows in cheeks, neck or bust, to get rid of that "peaked" look, to rejuvenate and revitalize your whole body until it tingles with vibrant energy; to do this without drastic diet, "tonics," severe physical culture "stunts," detention from business or any irksome requirements—if we fail it costs you nothing.

We particularly wish to hear from the excessively thin, those who know the humiliation and embarrassment which only skinny people have to suffer in silence. We want to send a free 50-cent package of our new discovery to the people who are called "slats" and "bean poles," to bony women, whose clothes never look "anyhow," no matter how expensively dressed, to the skinny men who fail to gain social or business recognition on account of their starved appearance. We care not whether you have been thin from birth, whether you have lost flesh through sickness, how many flesh builders you have experimented with. We take the risk and assume it cheerfully. If we cannot put pounds and pounds of healthy flesh on your frame we don't want your money.

The new treatment is used to increase the red corpuscles in the blood, strengthen the nerves and put the digestive tract into such shape that your food is assimilated and turned into good, solid, healthy flesh instead of passing through the system undigested and unassimilated. It is a thoroughly scientific principle, this Sargol, and builds up the thin, weak and debilitated without any nauseous dosing. In many conditions it is better than cod liver oil and certainly is much pleasanter to take.

Send for the 50-cent box today. Convince us by your prompt acceptance of this offer that you are writing in good faith and really desire to gain in weight. The 50-cent package which we will send you free will be an eye-opener to you. We send it that you may see the simple, harmless nature of our new discovery, how easy it is to take, how you gain flesh privately without knowledge of friends or family until you astonish them by the prompt and unmistakable results.

We could not publish this offer in COMFORT if we were not prepared to live up to it. It is only the astounding results of our new method of treatment that make such an offer and such a guarantee possible on our part. So cut off the coupon today and mail it at once to The Sargol Company, 12-E Herald Bldg., Binghamton, N. Y., and please inclose 10c with your letter to help pay distribution expenses. Take our word, you'll never regret it.

THIS LARGE CONGOLEUM RUG

Sent You Free And Prepaid For A Club Of Six!

Absolutely Waterproof—Dirtproof—Sanitary!

Water Cannot Rot It, Sun Cannot Fade It. It Lies Flat Without Nailing or Paste, Will Not Curl Up or Kick Up At The Edges, Will Stand The Hardest Kind Of Wear!

NO MORE trouble with unsightly, ill-smelling, dirt and germ laden grass, matting, fiber or fabric rugs or oil cloths. Every woman who has had experience with a single one of these old-fashioned methods of floor coverings knows how unsatisfactory they are, and expensive too, because they wear out so fast it is necessary to keep buying new ones all the time. Here, however, is a rug that will actually give years of constant service—a rug which is absolutely waterproof all the way through—which is not injured or even affected by heat, cold, water or changes of temperature—which neither fades nor rots no matter where you put it in-doors or out. It is not oilcloth—it is not linoleum—it is not made of grass, fiber or fabric—it is not like any other form of floor covering in the world. It is known as "Congoleum," a combination of a special wool mixture, waterproof paint and asphaltum. When you wash the floor or porch you can wash the Congoleum rug at the same time without taking it up. You can leave it out on the porch all summer or all winter or the year round and it will not rot, fade or get that jaded look that other rugs do after exposure to sun and wear. You can use it on the bathroom floor, the pantry floor, under the refrigerator, under the stove or as an ordinary rug in any room in the house, in fact, there is not a single requirement that this rug will not fill. It is absolutely sanitary because having a hard solid surface the dust, dirt and disease germs positively cannot get into it. No nails, tacks or paste are necessary to keep it down because it always lies flat on the floor and the edges will positively not curl or buckle, thus tripping up everybody who walks over it. These Congoleum rugs cost no more and in some cases actually less than other forms of floor covering and they will wear ten times as long, therefore they are the most economical as well as the most serviceable and satisfactory rug to buy. They come in different attractive designs and beautiful combinations of shades and colors. As a premium for our readers we have selected the pattern illustrated above as the most suitable for all-round purposes. It is one and one half yards long and a yard wide. The color scheme is subdued and very charming and it will make an attractive appearance regardless of whether you use it as a porch rug or in kitchen, pantry or any other room in the house. We are positive that every woman who secures one of these rugs will want two or three more at once, therefore we worked hard with the manufacturers to get a special low price on them so that we could give them in return for a very few subscriptions. In this we succeeded as you will note by reading the following Club Offer. For a club of six 15-month subscriptions to COMFORT at 25 cents each, or three 3-year subscriptions at 50 cents each, we will send you one Congoleum rug free by Parcel Post prepaid. Premium No. 7206.

The Family Doctor

So many inquiries are received from COMFORT subscribers concerning the health of the family that this column will be devoted to answering them. The remedies and advice here given are intended only for simple cases; serious cases should be addressed to physicians, not to us.

Address The Family Doctor, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

NOTICE.—As the privileges of this and all other departments of COMFORT are for subscribers only, no attention will be given any inquiry which does not bear the writer's correct name and address. Initials only, or a fictitious name, if requested, will appear in the published answer, but the inquiry must invariably be signed by the writer's true name.

W. H., Montgomery, Ala.—You are like hundreds of other COMFORT patients who seem to be lacking in good hard common sense about themselves when there is any trouble with them that they cannot cure by some simple remedy. You say you have been advised by various physicians who are undecided whether you are suffering from appendicitis or not, and then when the finest physician in your city and head of a hospital asks you to come to him and be thoroughly examined you write to us: "But I do not want to go and be examined. I have such a horror of operations and am afraid if they examine me they will want to cut somewhere, so I decided I would write to you and maybe you can tell me what is the matter with me." Now why did you think that? When half-a-dozen physicians who can see you personally are unable to decide, how can you expect us to guess at it a thousand miles away? The only advice we have to offer is that you go to the hospital and be properly examined to determine what causes the trouble. Even if an operation is necessary, is it one tenth as bad as suffering for years, even if you don't die in the mean time in agony? Get your good sense into normal condition and go to the hospital, where you should have gone long ago.

J. S., Charlestown, Mass.—The nervousness which gives you the tremors all over when you go out on the street or in company and does not trouble you at home, can only be cured by the exercise of your will power. There is no organic trouble and you become nervous simply because you become so self-conscious that you are what in common parlance is called "rattled". If you will go out as often as you possibly can and meet people often, having a grim determination not to let your nerves conquer you, it will not be long until you overcome your nervousness. Medicine will do no good, unless there is some underlying cause we don't know anything about.

Wis. Girl, Walworth, Wis.—The dandruff remedies to be had in drug-stores are as good local remedies as can be prescribed. But possibly there is some disease of the scalp, or the blood is out of condition, as is often the case with dandruff excess which will not yield to the ordinary local applications. Only an examination will determine this. Curling the hair on hot curlers will injure it, and to a less extent on cold irons. You are trying to make your hair do something nature did not intend that it should do and such treatment being unnatural will result in injury.

Mrs. H. L. S., Denton, Tex.—Just what the Hookworm Commission has done in Texas, or is doing, we cannot say, or what your State Board of Health or Local Boards have done, but there has been a wide crusade against the worm all over the South and any doctor in your neighborhood can give you information on the subject, or treat your case himself. The treatment is simple and efficacious, but you should not attempt self-treatment, unless the Board of Health issues a formula for private use. Don't delay if there is any hookworm in your family or among your neighbors. The man or woman who permits the existence of hookworm, when the remedy is so simple, is an enemy of the state and should be punished by law.

E. A., New Orelans, La.—How do you know you have a weak heart? A great many people imagine they have heart trouble, when the real trouble is indigestion. You ask the physician who told you you had weak heart to prescribe the proper tonic. We are not guessing at really weak hearts; they are too vital.

E. A. S., Douglas, N. Dak.—Bronchitis of your kind is due more to the cold, damp climate, we think, than anything else, and if you could get down into Arizona where the air is hot and dry, you would find relief if not permanent cure. The remedies you are using are about as good as can be prescribed by mail, seeing that you can't get to a doctor. Can't you go to Arizona for two or three months and try it there? Get a job for a while and see what effect that climate will have. (2) If your son who has been suffering with boils for so long will not have a doctor, he must continue suffering. Boils are not merely local skin eruptions, but come from pathological conditions which must be treated thoroughly by a physician. One boil, or even two or three, may be cured, or rather treated by simple remedies, but when they continue for months, the whole system is affected and more radical treatment is required. (2) Unless you can remove adenoids with a case-knife, there is no home remedy we know of. If you want your boy to be a normal boy and man in mind and body, you should have a physician remove the adenoids. The operation is simple enough and is performed constantly on public school children to their great improvement in mind and body.

Farmer, Pleasant Plain, O.—The red face in your case, your health, as far as you know, being good, is due to a defect, or the nature, of your circulation. Persons of light complexion are quite frequently bothered by reddening of the face, not that their faces redden more than those of dark complexion, or that there is any difference in the circulation, but it shows more plainly. Nervousness will often cause the face to flush, and people who are always self-conscious, a kind of nervousness, will redden very easily. Stop thinking about your red face or taking medicine for it. Have a talk with a doctor who may be able to give you some good advice and maybe find that you have indigestion, which will also impair the circulation.

Agnes, La Salle, Ill.—How long a draining-tube used after an operation must remain depends upon the condition of the patient. In some cases, only a very short time suffices, and in others weeks, or even months, must pass before it may be removed. If the physician who operated on you said you had no gall-stones, he should know better than anyone else, and we can hardly be expected to guess at it from this distance. The rheumatic or neuralgic pains you feel on the opposite side are very likely due to the disturbances of the operation. As long as you feel the good effects of the tube, you should by all means let it remain. Your doctor knows when to remove it, and don't you try to doctor yourself.

J. T. W., Paris, Texas.—The knot at the knuckle of your finger, which comes and goes and is very painful, is, we think, due to a rheumatic condition not severe enough yet to be more demonstrative. Rheumatism often expresses itself in small knots at the finger and other joints, and may never get worse than that, though the chances are that it will as you grow older. The next knot that appears should have a doctor's personal attention. Prevention is far better than cure, especially in rheumatism.

A. L. J., Clanton, Ala.—We believe with the doctor who pronounced your child's trouble fistula and it may trouble him all his life. Still, if it is skillfully treated now he may become sound and outgrow it. If possible you should take him to a hospital, or to a specialist in rectal diseases. It was very unwise for your husband to use a razor on the fistula and nothing should be done except under the direction of a physician who can make personal examinations. (2) Constipation often is very stubborn and when of long standing may be incurable, but a great relief may be found in taking two or three tablespoonfuls of pure olive oil before or during meals. It will not act at once, but by and by its effects will be felt. Warm water injections, two or three times a week, are also good. In addition have a care what you eat and how you eat—never swallowing a mouthful of food until it is chewed to a pulp and thoroughly insalivated, that is, made ready for the stomach and digestive organs. Diet, exercise and massage of the bowels are much more effective than medicine for the treatment of constipation. Eat whole wheat, graham, bran or corn bread, also the coarse-ground cereals in the form of mush, and plenty of fruit. Laxative drugs lose their effect if used continually.

O. S., Kingston, Tenn.—There is no remedy that we know of for superfluous hair on face and nose except the ordinary depilatories to be had at drug-stores, unless you are able to submit to the treatment and expense of a specialist who may make a good job of it or may not, though your bill will be the same,—a big one anyhow.

Mrs. A. I., Vermillion, Ont.—Lunar caustic (nitrate of silver), to be had at any drug-store, is the usual remedy for warts. In applying it be careful not to get it on the skin around the warts as it will burn and make a sore spot. A doctor will have to see the pimple on the child's abdomen to determine its cause, as it seems to be something more than a mere local eruption.

ROSES!

6 Beautiful Monthly Blooming Roses Delivered to Your Door For One Subscription!

BEAUTIFUL Charming Roses in profusion that anybody can grow in any climate and in almost any soil. Again this season we offer our readers a splendid opportunity to secure without money cost a rare collection of six, hardy, vigorous growing rose plants that will bloom and bloom all summer transforming your flower garden into a veritable paradise of delicious fragrance and radiant colors. The six varieties described below are strong, well-rooted plants ready to be transplanted to your garden as soon as you receive them and we guarantee that they will grow and thrive beautifully if given proper care and attention. No matter in what part of the United States you live, our growers will send them to you at the proper time to plant according to the schedule printed below. Please remember, however, that these dates may vary from ten to fifteen days in event of an extremely early or late spring, so you need not become anxious if they should not reach you just on the date named in schedule. The rose growers who supply us are perfectly familiar with planting conditions in your locality and you may depend upon them to forward the roses to you at the best time for you to put them in the ground. Following is a brief description of each of the six varieties of beautiful ever-blooming roses given you free on this great offer:

Crimson Crown For color effect and general bedding purposes here is a rose that is hard to equal. It is a robust growing variety, quickly developing into a large shapely bush that is literally covered with immense clusters of deep crimson roses which are tinted a rich lemon-white at the base of each petal. The flowers are of attractive form and borne in such profusion as to give the plant a bright brilliant display from early spring until long after the late frosts.

Killarney Queen In this fine new rose some wonderful improvements have been made over the old pink Killarney and the grower now has as nearly a perfect variety as it seems possible to secure. The flowers are massive in size, very double and liberally produced. They are constructed of better substance and are of a richer dark deep pink color than the old variety. In rapid vigorous growing habit it cannot be equalled by any other rose in its class. It seems to be perfectly adapted to soil and weather conditions in all localities and if given some care, small plants will develop into fine large bushes the first season planted, returning for the little attention an abundance of magnificent fragrant flowers. This rose is a hardy everbloomer and flowers from early spring until after freezing weather in the fall.

Climbing American Beauty The American Beauty in all its glory and fragrance, develops into a hardy outdoor climbing rose. It is a prolific bloomer, with a strong habit of growth, thriving and blooming in almost any situation. The bush growing American Beauty is rarely satisfactory when planted in the open ground, but this new climbing variety has proved perfectly hardy in any part of the United States. One plant of this new rose will produce twenty times as many flowers as the old variety. The roses growing on a single stem measure three to four inches in diameter and possess the same delicious fragrance that the American Beauty alone has. This new rose must not be classed among the old-fashioned climbers of the rambler type, as it is distinct from them in its very superior quality. It has a fine foliage that does not burn, its thick glossy leaves remaining on the bush all summer. No lover of beautiful roses should fail to plant this fine climber, as it is a worthy ornament to any garden, and its beauty and fragrance will prove a lasting pleasure and delight.

Bessie Brown This wonderful rose is indeed a crowning masterpiece and has been hailed by flower-lovers everywhere as one of the greatest rose creations of modern times. With a hardy, vigorous constitution, growing to perfection in any soil or location, it has the most magnificent foliage that is possessed by any variety. It is a tremendous grower, producing flowers profusely all through the summer on strong erect stems. The handsome flowers are of unsurpassed beauty. They are full and deep, of a totally distinct character and formed of such substance as to last splendidly when cut. The color is an exquisite creamy white, delicately flushed pink.

Nita Weldon Here is another gold medal winner, well worthy a place in the heart and garden of every flower lover. In habit of growth it is perfection. Both the canes and foliage are of such strength and vigor as to withstand without injury the ravages of insects or disease. Neither soil conditions nor location seem to effect its rapid growth or liberal blooming qualities. The flowers are of globular form, very full and immense in size. They are deliciously fragrant and pure ivory-white with edges of petals tinted the faintest blush.

Lady Hillingdon In this variety has been found every valuable feature the flower-lover could desire of a deep golden everblooming rose. After being awarded gold medals over such varieties as "Sunburst" there is no ground to question its merits. It is a sturdy, vigorous grower, producing long strong stems which hold the beautiful pointed buds upright, making them especially desirable for cut flower purposes. The buds open slowly to full deep golden bloom which hold their form and color much longer than other varieties. In the garden its rich green foliage and abundance of flowers present such a beautiful display of color that it cannot be passed by the most casual observer without an expression of admiration.

Remember These roses are all strong healthy plants on their own roots and will be sent to you by Parcel Post prepaid packed in wet moss so that you will be sure to receive them in just as good condition as when they leave the greenhouse. You may accept this offer with the perfect assurance that these beautiful ever-blooming roses will grow and develop into rare specimen beauties. If any fail to grow we hereby guarantee to replace them for you free of all cost.

Offer 672 A. For one 15-month subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 25 cents, we will send you these six beautiful roses free by Parcel Post prepaid.

Offer 672 B. For your own subscription or renewal or extension of your present subscription for one year at 25 cents, and 10 cents additional (35 cents in all), we will send you these six beautiful roses free by Parcel Post prepaid. If you want us to send them immediately be sure to say so in your order otherwise the roses will not be mailed to you until the proper time arrives for you to plant them in your garden.

Wizard Water Pistol

Given For One Subscription

Premium No. 716

TO all appearances this is a regular, full size, "six shooter" but instead of shooting the deadly bullet it squirts a solid stream of water 30 feet straight to the mark you aim it at. To load this pistol you stick the muzzle into water and pull the trigger three or four times. After it is loaded you discharge it by pulling the trigger just the same as you would an ordinary revolver. After it is loaded it is good for ten shots (of water) before it is necessary to load it again. Boys and girls can have loads of fun with this water pistol by giving their friends surprise "shower baths" and as it shoots nothing but water it is of course perfectly harmless to the smallest child. The "Wizard" is shaped exactly like a regular revolver; is 5 inches long, handsomely nickel plated and beautifully finished. You can obtain this water pistol free upon the terms of the following special offers:

Offer No. 716 A. For one new 15-month subscription (not your own) to COMFORT at 25 cents, we will send you the Wizard water pistol free by Parcel Post prepaid.

Offer No. 716 B. For your own subscription, or renewal or extension of your present subscription, to COMFORT for one year at 25 cents and 10 cents additional (35 cents in all), we will send you the Wizard Water Pistol free and prepaid. Premium No. 716. Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

LOCKET AND CHAIN

Rolled Gold Plate! Warranted For 5 Years!

MOST every young lady wants a Locket and Chain. Other styles of neck ornaments may come and go but a gold Locket and Chain is always fashionable, can be worn with any dress and at any season of the year. The locket offered here is one of the latest designs. One side of it is beautifully engraved as shown in the illustration while the other side is plain. It measures exactly one inch in diameter and on the inside there is space for two pictures. The cable chain is 15 inches long and both Chain and Locket are made of heavy rolled gold plate that is absolutely guaranteed to stand an acid test and warranted for five years. You could easily pay $5.00 for a locket and chain that would look no better and wear no better than this one. It is dainty, refined and attractive and we are sure that it will more than please everybody. This locket and chain guaranteed to be exactly as described is yours free upon the terms of the following

Pair Of Turkish Towels

Premium No. 7302

For Two Subscriptions

AFTER bathing there is nothing quite so fine as a good rub down with a Turkish towel, in fact it is the best towel for all purposes, whether for the bath-or guestroom or for everyday family use in the lavatory, kitchen or pantry. They absorb the water much more readily than other towels and the thick, heavy fleece-like surface imparts to the body a delightful feeling of warmth and well-being, exhilarating the whole system and literally making one feel like "jumping over a high board fence." These towels are also great for baby's toilet as they will not hurt the tender skin. The towels we offer here are genuine Turkish towels—not the imitation kind—and are 17 inches wide and 36 inches long which is a good convenient size for all-round family use. They are of good weight, well made and finished and are in every respect equal to towels that you would willingly pay $1.00 a pair for in any store. We will make you a present of one pair of these fine Turkish towels upon the terms of the following special

Club Offer For a club of two 15-month subscriptions to COMFORT at 25 cents each, or one three-year subscription (not your own) at 50 cents, we will send you one pair (2) of these towels free by Parcel Post prepaid. Premium No. 7302.

How One City Had a Sane Fourth

True Story of a Firecrackerless Celebration

By Gertrude Hockridge

Copyright, 1915, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher, Inc.

THIS is a tale of one city, but its genesis is in a tale of two cities. These two cities are rivals in good works and progressiveness and this rivalry is a strong factor in keeping everybody up and doing in the common cause. So much for the genesis.

It was early in June that one city announced a glorious Fourth of July celebration for the children of that city. Regardless of sex, color or sicial position, all were to be taken to Raspberry island in the river right opposite the heart of the city. Here, patriotism and noise were to become rampant, firecrackers were to be free, and, in addition to being entirely surrounded by water, the island was to have a supplementary surrounding of older folk to see that casualties were kept down to a minimum. The children were used to going to the island because the public baths and playgrounds are there, and altogether the celebration seemed ideal.

Now, the other city has no island available for such an event, and for a time it appeared that in this it could not compete. But one evening the city paper published on its first page a suggestion under the head "Let's Give the Kids A Good Time." The suggestion pointed out that in a new fifty-six-acre park tract in the very heart of the city, they possessed a fine place for a good, old-fashioned celebration of the glorious Fourth. No details as to the character of the occasion were indicated, but an appeal was made for the citizens to get together on the ground of their common interest in children who deserve a good time on the great holiday. To start the things, the paper headed a subscription with one hundred dollars and called for some organization of workers to take charge of the detail of the affair.

There was a surprising response to this appeal to those strong factors in human sentiment—love of country and love of children. Not more than ten minutes after the paper had been delivered in the down-town districts, there came a hurry-up message to the editor from the head of a fraternal order known for its masculine good fellowship.

"That's our kind of a job," he said, "put us down for the work; and we'll give some money, too." There were half-a-dozen other applicants that afternoon, but the honor had been assigned.

In his formal letter of acceptance the next day, the head of the order suggested that the occasion be made a flag raising, if a flag staff and a flag could be provided. That afternoon half a score of flags had been offered. Taking its cue from the spontaneity of the responses, the paper promoting the project proceeded to ask for everything that would be needed, a halyard for the flag, candy, lemons and popcorn, labor to erect the flagstaff, cement in which to set it, the use of lumber for refreshment and amusement stands and tents for the workers. No sooner was any want made known than it was filled, while the general public was taking hold of the subscription in a way that assured success.

In the meantime, the members of the fraternal organization had organized for the detail work and had decided that there would be no firecrackers. This was partly because they did not want the responsibility of encouraging accidents by permitting explosives, and partly because the parade is in the residence district and a celebration with firecrackers might easily become a nuisance. So it was quietly decided that it was to be a "sane" Fourth. But they decided that they would not put a wet blanket upon the affair by calling it "sane." They would give the youngsters so much to do and enjoy that they wouldn't think of firecrackers.

On the night before the Fourth, the armory at one side of the Parade, housed a busy lot of workers. Men of more than local prominence sat up till dawn squeezing lemons, sorting out packets of confections and arranging every little detail against the rush. Early morning saw the field prepared for action. Around the edges of the great tract were scattered six long lemonade stands with barrels and barrels of the best lemonade it was possible to make. Through the grounds were distributed six stages for the amusements. At strategic points were stacked great bales of small flags and tri-colored caps. The fraters who weren't engaged at the stands and stages deployed as skirmishers and then—the "kids" began to arrive. From all directions came converging streams of juvenile patriots, on foot with dusty shoes and sagging hosiery, on street cars packed to suffocation, in automobiles gay with flags, and in all sorts of wheeled vehicles. Children whose names told of ancestors from Russia, Sweden, Norway or Poland touched elbows with those from families rooted in America since the Declaration was signed—and they were all joyously American. In from the orphanages came boys and girls marching in well disciplined lines which lost their identity as soon as they reached the mass of humanity which covered the grounds. Boys and girls alike upon entering the grounds received flags, and the boys received in addition the tri-color paper caps.

The celebration was scheduled to begin at nine o'clock. At eight o'clock there were not a hundred persons on the grounds aside from the workers. At nine o'clock there were at least 30,000, and the crowd kept on coming until the rain came shortly before noon.

First, there was the flag raising with a procession of national guardsmen and a flag escort of Civil War veterans. As the flag was hauled aloft, two bands and a chorus of 2,000 little girls gave the "Star Spangled Banner" in stirring fashion. Then the general program began. There was no speaking or any feature that demanded quiet, but out of the tent at the side of each stage there appeared troops of trained dogs, professional acrobats, jugglers, and the like, who proceeded with their acts and were then transferred by platform wagons to the next stage in the circuit. This kept the crowds from gathering uncomfortably at any one place. At the same time booms began to be sent up from a canvas enclosure, the projectiles bursting in mid-air to release grotesque figures of men and beasts that floated serenely away. A balloon ascension with a parachute drop was on the program as well, but the wind prevented. All this time, there were circulating through the crowd comic characters, some professional and some of them small boys who had donned grotesque make-ups in competition for a ragamuffin prize.

Everything was free. The lemonade stands were centers of attraction to the small boy naturally, but provision was made to take care of the smaller girls who hadn't the courage to fight their way through into the thirsty line. Popcorn was free, flags were free, caps were free, entertainment was free, everything was free.

After it was all over, the "kids" woke up to the fact that they had had a Fourth of July celebration without firecrackers. Not one injury had been reported and everybody had had just exactly the sort of a time that had, up to that day, seemed an iridescent dream never to be realized. Everybody was pleased, even the men who had worked themselves into a condition approximately a collapse, laying the plans. As a result, the city has put the firecracker on the list of undesirables, for youngsters and grown-ups alike have learned that there is a better way—a way which gives better expression to American patriotism and which is better calculated to impress upon the rising generation the meaning of a democracy founded upon a recognition of the fact that all men are created free and equal. And that is the best lesson of the Glorious Fourth.

WORLD'S LONGEST PIER.—New York is to build the longest pier in the world. It will cost $638,000 and will extend 1779 feet into New York Bay from the South Brooklyn shore. This great pier is designed to keep pace with the growth of shipping. Two other piers will be built. The longest will accommodate four of the largest transatlantic liners at once. The two smaller piers will cost $225,000 and $400,000 respectively.

TESTIFIED BY TELEPHONE.—One of the most unusual methods of taking testimony in the history of the courts was resorted to recently when Dr. George H. Brown, a victim of smallpox and a patient at the contagious disease hospital, testified over the telephone in a damage suit in the Circuit Court of Grand Rapids, Michigan. One attorney for each side and a court stenographer heard the testimony over separate receivers.

"The Country Woman's Vacation"

is the title of an interesting and instructive article that will appear in July COMFORT, written by one who has lived on a farm and knows the difficulties under which the farm women labor and the necessity for them to have a summer vacation with a change of scene. It is the busy season of farming and most of our readers probably think a summer vacation impossible, but the author of our article tells how she arranged the vacation for herself and the entire family to the great pleasure and benefit of all and without interfering with the work and with no expense. Her plan is well worth considering.

"The Rolling Stone" is another splendid story, with a peculiar heart interest and inspiring uplift by Hapsburg Liebe, author of "A Sacrifice to Love" which we printed in May COMFORT. "The Rolling Stone" will appear complete in our coming July number; it is a strong story of the right kind, so don't miss it.

"When Baby Has Spasms"

By Dr. Hirshberg

is a valuable and timely article telling how to treat babies when they have fits and, better still, how to care for the little ones to prevent their having fits. Every mother should read this article in July COMFORT and study it carefully.

The Once Beautiful Empress of France

By C. L. Chapman

Copyright, 1915, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher, Inc.

THERE is no other woman today whose life is so full of varied experience, so many instances of gaiety blended with deepest trials, as that of the Empress Eugenie.

Once the most beautiful queen of the world, she is now an exile from the land she ruled, her dearly beloved France. She is watching with eager eyes, an exultant spectator of the war, praying for her country's vengeance.

Today she is a pathetic figure.

Born in Granada in 1826, the daughter of the Count and Countess de Montijo of Spain. As a little child she lived a romantic life, believing in the fairies and what the gypsies told her, she felt that she had only to bide her time when some prince or king would come and claim her hand. Her girl friends told her she was as graceful as a lily, that her hair was a wonderful shower of gold and that her features were so exquisite that no artist could do her justice.

Once she was told, "You are to have a wonderful career, for some day your beauty and grace will adorn a throne." Yet with all this flattery she never grew vain or foolish. She rode, danced, lived much out of doors, thrilled with the life and joy about her, waiting for her Prince Charming.

That proud moment came when during a visit to Paris, with her mother, she met at the presidential reception, Louis Napoleon, who then ruled the Republic of France but later reestablished the imperial throne of Napoleon the Great and reigned as Napoleon III.

This glimpse proved enough to kindle a vivid spark of interest in her romantic little soul, and with all her Spanish superstition and impulsiveness, she began to see visions and to dream dreams.

But it was not until after Napoleon was made emperor that Eugenie seemed to hold him spellbound, he being completely captivated with her almost flawless beauty. At this time however, Napoleon had little thought of marrying her, but it was not long before she and her mother were invited to become his guests at Fountainbleu, the Elysee and the Tuileries.

At the Elysee,—as elsewhere—Eugenie was the handsomest of all the women, and it soon became apparent that the emperor was deeply smitten, but such a marriage is always a serious question and at once Napoleon's relatives urged him to give her up, in that they felt that she was not his equal in birth or fortune. Napoleon was not to be changed however, for to him love meant more than politics and the wedding was celebrated with great pomp and ceremony at Notre Dame, on the 30th of January, 1853.

Dressed in white velvet, wearing all the crown jewels, including the famous "Regent," which sparkled on her breast, and the rose diamond belt, Eugenie was draped in the misty folds of a wonderful lace veil—the gift of the city of Liege—which fell from the diadem crowning her graceful head. Driving to the ceremony in the wonderful glass coach, first used for the coronation of Napolen I and Josephine, her appearance wrung prolonged and repeated murmurs of admiration from the throngs. Before the service was over, people forgot their prejudice, forgot they were in the cathedral and the cheers and cries of rejoicing drowned out the music of the great organ. "She entered Notre Dame chosen by the Emperor, she left it adopted by France."

Charmed with her beauty, grace and elegance, touched by her benevolence—the people all loved her. She being accustomed to society and adulation from babyhood, received all this homage with queenly condescension and without the least ostentation, not seeming to realize her wonderful position.

Eugenie, having been brought up in Spain, France and England, spoke all three languages with equal fluency and ease, and prolonged stays in Paris, London and Madrid enabled her to become acquainted with most of the prominent men in Europe. So she determined at once to make her court one of the most brilliant, surrounding herself with the greatest writers, musicians, artists and wits of the day, 'twas the Mecca of all the sovereigns of Europe and the Orient.

These were glorious days for Eugenie, but her greatest joy was yet to come in the birth of her son, in 1856. She was so proud of this boy and always found time from social duties and affairs of state to devote herself to his care.

Soon heavy clouds began to gather in France. The people wanted a republic again. Eugenie would have probably been spared some of her sorrows had she remained aloof from politics. The French were particularly aggrieved just then, for Germany had lately won great laurels, while France had made a dismal failure of her undertaking to establish the Austrian prince, Maximillian on the throne of Mexico. Then Louis Napoleon started his disastrous war with Germany in 1870.

When he went to war he always made Eugenie regent, but the people accused her of goading the emperor onto war. Her courage never failed her, until word began to reach her of the inefficiency of the French army and the certain result that was to come, as day by day the Germans made sure the issue of their brief campaign.

The frightful tidings that reached her of the defeat of the army and that Napoleon had been taken prisoner, almost stunned Eugenie, but she still felt it her duty to defend France and maintain the Imperial authority, which—although she was not aware of the fact—had already slipped out of her hands.

With the desertion of her servants and the angry cries of the mob, the empress was robbed of her last vestige of courage and she fled, with one loyal companion, seeking safety in England. Her husband was dethroned and later joined her in exile. Meantime his health was failing and it was not long before Eugenie was to be prostrated with a new sorrow, for Napoleon passed away in 1873; the husband she had loved so devotedly in spite of all his faults. But a greater sorrow was to come to her in the death of her son—on whom she lavished all of a mother's love and tenderness. He joined the British army and was killed in South Africa in battle with the Zulus.

And so today, the maiden who by charm and intelligence won a husband and a throne, once the most beautiful queen, is now but a lonely woman, bearing scarcely a trace of her once radiant beauty. Once a woman of such influence that she was blamed for the Franco-Prussian war, now attracting little or no attention, for of the thousands who meet or pass her in the streets there are not a score who know who she is.

Eugenie has tasted all the sweets of adulation and flattery, she knows the bitterness of power and position lost, never to be regained; but she knows as well that there are devoted friends who remember her as the queen of beauty, living amid scenes of fairy-like splendor, far from forgotten and winning the world's greatest respect, because she has so nobly borne her "crown of sorrows."

From her English home she is looking on with deepest interest, hoping each day to see her beautiful France victorious in the present war with Germany; praying for France to win back the two rich Rine provinces which she lost to Germany in the war of 1870 which dethroned Napoleon III and Eugenie.

THOUGHTS THAT BREATHE AND WORDS THAT BURN

How to Celebrate the Fourth of July Suitably and Enjoyably

I HOPE all our readers, especially the fathers and mothers and those clothed with the authority of managing city and town affairs, will read and ponder well the interesting and instructive description, which we print on another page of this magazine. of how a certain American city devised and carried through a most enjoyable Fourth-of-July celebration without the nuisance, noise and danger of the pistols, guns firecrackers and other explosive adjuncts that usually make the anniversary of Independence Dav a terror to the sick and sensitive a source of anxiety to the thoughtful and a cause of distress, grief and mourning to many.

The money that is worse than wasted individually in the purchase of pistols and ammunition, firecrackers and other fireworks, if turned into a common fund in charge of a competent town or village committee would furnish a community celebration with features and attractions that would be really worth while and would be enjoyed by all without annoyance danger or injury to any, as was done by the city which our article tells of.

Of course if yours is a small town you can't expect to celebrate on such a grand scale as is possible for a large city, but most any village in the country, if its people will get together and all join heartily in the undertaking, appoint a good committee to take charge and everybody lend a helping hand, contributing cash, refreshments or personal service as each can best afford, can have a local celebration that will be creditable and long remembered as an enjoyable event

You can have a free picnic lunch with ice cream, lemonade fruits and cake at no more expense than your dinners would cost at home; by offering small prizes you can get up foot races, sack races, three-legged races, potato races, tub races, riding races and various other athletic contests among your own young people. Organize a home baseball nine for the occasion and challenge a neighboring village to send a nine to play yours; also invite the people of the other village to join you in your celebration and contribute toward it. You can do all this and a lot more yourselves, just with your local talent—enough to keep everybody interested and amused all day. If your committee have any money to spare they can hire professional performers from away to come and give an exhibition of some sort, but that is not necessary; every village has the making of a glorious good time right within itself if its people will start early, plan it right and all lift together with a will. Most any village can scare up enough local musicians to provide an orchestra or band for the occasion. Have games and races for the children including the little girls Have a masquerade, if you like, and make it a grand frolic for the young and old; go with your families; cut out the firecrackers and the firewater and you will not have to worry about your little ones getting hurt or your older ones getting into bad company on that day—no hands blown off or eyes put out, no first step in the path of vice.

Is it not well worth trying? Is it not well worth the effort, time and little money that it will cost?

Why so Many Farmers are Buying Automobiles

THE rapid development of the automobile or motor vehicle is the chief feature that marks the progress of the twentieth century and is bringing about a revolution in the moral and social as well as the material conditions of civilization. From its first appearance as a whimsical toy in the latter part of the last century it soon worked out of the experimental stage and became the synonym of luxury for the rich But now it has passed to its third stage and become well established as a practical convenience to men of moderate means and a necessary utility to professional and business men, in which latter class the farmers figure prominently as making profitable use of the automobile.

The automobile has been so perfected in its mechanism that it is as reliable as a trolley car or a horse and wagon which latter it far excels in efficiency and economy both for trucking and traveling; breakdowns are of rare occurrence and are preventable by proper care, while danger from accident has been practically eliminated except in cases of excessive speeding or reckless driving. No longer do the comic papers picture the millionaire's car stalled on the road while his chauffeur goes in search for a farmer and a span of horses to haul the disabled contraption back to the city; on the contrary the farmers are driving their own automobiles, and there are more of them owned by farmers than by any other class of business men in this country.

Farmers own one-half of all the automobiles in Iowa, one-third in Wisconsin and in many other States nearly as large a proportion. This has come about through the advent of the moderate-priced cars which are as strong, reliable and serviceable, and in point of practical utility for the ordinary man as good or better than the very highest priced machines on which so much expense is lavished for extravagant luxury of furnishings and adornment. Besides, the cost of upkeep and repair of the moderate-priced cars is much less.

The automobile is a paying investment to the farmer, as it is to the business and professional man, in the time it saves him in getting over the road, for "time is money" to the farmer as it is to anybody who has work to do; also it enables him to go to places, otherwise beyond his reach, to sell his products and make his purchases to better advantage in larger markets.

Besides superior power, speed and endurance the automobile has the advantage over the horse of requiring no feed except when working; it is always ready night or day, needs no rest and there is no fear of overworking it in weather so hot as to be dangerous for horses to be worked.

The social side of farm life is a problem of no small importance which the automobile is solving. Loneliness, due to isolation, and the lack of social privileges have been the chief disadvantages attendant on farming which are especially objectionable to the women and young folks. The former has been relieved by the telephone and the rural free delivery service, and now the automobile solves the latter by enabling the farmer and his family to attend church, Sunday school, Grange meetings, lectures, moving picture and other shows, parties, public functions and fairs anywhere within thirty or forty miles, for the horseless carriage easily covers twenty-five miles of ordinary road in an hour, and the headlights illuminate the way so that driving is safe at night.

As between the city man and farmer the expense of housing and upkeep is much in favor of the latter. In the crowded quarters in which city people live, unless wealthy, they have no place to store their automobiles and are obliged to hire them kept and cared for at a public garage and pay high prices for cleaning and for any little bit of tinkering required to keep them in running order; but the farmer usually has a building suitable for housing his car, or at slight cost can build one himself, and he will further save expense by washing and painting his own car, when necessary, and by personal attention to his machine keep it in serviceable condition. With decent treatment a present-day automobile will run thousands of miles without needing repair, and when in the course of time any part shows wear a duplicate part, that will fit exactly, can be had from the factory or the agent, so that in most cases the man who uses modern farm machinery is mechanic enough to keep his automobile in repair.

The automobile is largely responsible for the nation-wide movement for better roads. No one is more benefited by good roads than is the farmer whether he owns an automobile or not, for a farmer cannot afford the wear and tear on his horses, carts and wagons consequent on driving or hauling over roads unfit for automobile travel.

Very many COMFORT subscribers who live by farming write that they own an automobile and all such are enthusiastic over the benefits derived therefrom; never one expresses regret for the investment, while many others say they intend to buy one this season. I congratulate them on their good fortune and good sense and I wish that all our readers possessed the wherewithal to do likewise. It is a thing worth working and saving money for with a reasonable hope of attainment by farmers of average prospects.

Long Life and Health by Drinking Distilled Water

OLD age and most of its characteristic infirmities including apoplexy and certain forms of heart disease are due to hardening of the arteries. In fact it is a proverb with the doctors that "a man is as young as his arteries."

In youth the arteries are soft, flexible and elastic like a rubber pipe, permitting the blood to flow freely to all parts of the body and enabling the heart to do its work without excessive effort With advancing years the arteries harden in consequence of mineral deposits largely consisting of lime. This checks the circulation of the blood, putting abnormal work on the heart and causing heart strain enlargement of the heart and other permanent injuries to that vital organ; the arteries become brittle and are apt to spring a leak in the brain which causes apoplexy or paralysis. This hardening of the arteries causes many other diseased conditions of other organs besides general weakening of the vital powers.

While hardening of the arteries is common to old age it also appears in persons of middle age. or even younger, causing premature old age and attendant diseases and decrepitude.

Once the arteries have hardened there is no treatment that will restore them to their normal condition; but there are certain well-known causes that hasten the hardening process and certain treatments that tend to check it. Impure drinking water, especially that impregnated with lime or other alkali is one of the common causes of hardening of the arteries and of kidney troubles, stones in the bladder and certain forms of rheumatism.

The drinking of distilled water—that is water made absolutely pure and free from all minerals by distillation—is one of the effective means of preventing hardening of the arteries and the other diseases previously mentioned. This is proved by the medical records of the U. S Navy.

There are between 65,000 and 70,000 men in the Navy and Marine Corps, and the Surgeon General's report for 1913 shows only one death from apoplexy and places hardening of the arteries as the least common of all diseases among these men. He attributes this healthy condition to the enforced use of distilled water, for all water served on board ships of war is distilled. Every ship is equipped with a distilling plant that boils sea water, the steam from which is conducted through a pipe to a cold receptacle and condensed. The salt and all other impurities are left behind in the boiler and the water formed from the steam in the condenser is absolutely pure.

Dr. Wedekind, commander of the U S. hospital ship Solace, writes: "I urge that the rest of the world live as we do, using distilled water, and live on and on, youths at 65 We do not develop arterial degeneration, gout and rheumatism though not surrounded by home comforts, regular seasons, regular amusements and home life"

Certainly this seems worth trying as it can not do any harm Cut out drinking alcoholic liquor, also, which is a well-known cause of hardening of the arteries gout, rheumatism, liver and kidney diseases.

The Nation-Wide Prohibition Crusade

COMFORT is in the fight for nation-wide prohibition of the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors, except for medicinal and mechanical purposes under strict government regulation, and will keep fighting until Congress gives us an effective law to accomplish this result, which I believe can be brought about if all the friends of temperance will give the movement their earnest support.

So many of our readers from every State in the Union have written expressing their hearty approval of, and promising to help on the crusade which I proposed in my April editorial, that I am convinced it is worth while for COMFORT to lead the campaign and that our united efforts will be an impressive factor in influencing the action of Congress.

As this is a new movement that I propose there are many points to be considered and carefully worked out before the exact details can be formulated. It is very important to start just right; therefore I am taking time to insure against mistakes. However, I expect to have the matter in shape very soon and to print the form of the petitions and full instructions for circulating them in July COMFORT. That will give you ample time to get them signed and send them in, as Congress does not meet until December.

As I have not had time to answer individually I take this means of thanking all you who have written me and I promise that those who have thus far responded shall hear from me by mail.

We are on the right side of the most important issue before the American people and we must and will succeed.

COMFORT'S EDITOR.

This Department is conducted solely for the use of COMFORT sisters, whereby they may give expression to their ideas relative to the home and home surroundings, and to all matters pertaining to themselves and families; as well as opening a way for personal correspondence between each other.

Our object is to extend a helping hand to COMFORT subscribers; to become coworkers with all who seek friendship, encouragement, sympathy or assistance through the interchange of ideas.

Any abuse of this privilege, such as inviting correspondence for the purpose of offering an article for sale, or undertaking to charge a sum of money for ideas, recipes or information mentioned in any letter appearing in this department, if reported, will result in the offender being denied the use of these columns.

Do not ask us to print letters requesting patterns, quilt pieces, etc., for the purpose of, or with the expectation of receiving the equivalent in return, for this is not an exchange column.

Do not ask us to publish letters requesting money contributions or donations of any sort. Much as we sympathize with the suffering and unfortunate, it is impossible to do this as we would be flooded with similar requests.

Do not request souvenir postals unless you have complied with the conditions which entitles you to such a notice. See postal request notice in another column.

We cordially invite mothers and daughters of all ages to write to COMFORT Sisters' Corner. Every letter will be carefully read and considered, and then the most helpful ones chosen for publication, whether the writer be an old or new subscriber.

Please write only on one side of the paper, and recipes on a separate sheet.

Always give your correct and full name and address, very plainly written; otherwise your letter will receive no attention.

Address all letters for this department to MRS. WHEELER WILKINSON, Care COMFORT, AUGUSTA, MAINE.

"HE hath never fed of the dainties that are bred in a book; he hath not eat paper, as it were; he hath not drunk ink; his intellect is not replenished."

Shakespeare's manner of expressing his ideas was quite his own, but the same opinion exists today and the person who cares nothing for books, is, or should be, regarded with pity for one of the greatest pleasures of life is thereby lost.

In the following letter from Mrs. Schiller, a very good list of authors are given and I wish every reader of COMFORT would make an effort to devote some time each day to reading and, of equal importance, serious thought of what has been read.

Children should be taught to exercise as much care in selecting their books as in choosing their friends, for books either aid or mar the moral development almost as surely as one's associates can.

While it is not a financial possibility for every family to own a well-stocked library, now is the time to begin no matter if you possess only a few books. The homelike appearance they add to a room is but secondary to the broadening and uplifting influence on the mind, but both are worth any personal sacrifice to obtain.—Ed.

DURANGO, P. O. Box 1171, COLO.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

Since I last wrote to you from Ignacio, the Episcopal church there has been completed and dedicated, naming it Saint John's. It was not consecrated until free from debt. The church building is twenty by forty feet of cement blocks with a roof of bungalow design. The building, exclusive of furnishings, cost one thousand dollars, part of which was contributed by church societies, and the minor part was raised by the untiring work of the women of the parish. In the corner stone of this church building, reposes a Bible, a prayer book and hymnal of the church, a list of contributors to the building fund, copy of the Ignacio paper, "The Chieftain," and various other papers. Numerous gifts have been received toward furnishing the church, namely, an organ, lectern, chalice and smaller articles.

During the fair last fall, a booth was conducted for the benefit of St. John's church fund, and a good amount cleared for that purpose, notwithstanding an assault on the booth by enemies, of which "The Chieftain" wrote:

"The heathens who played the unspeakably dirty trick to the lunch stand of the St. John's Guild Wednesday night, if apprehended, should be chased out of town and invited to stay away on pain of more severe punishment. Such beasts should not be allowed even the company of a lousy Ute dog."

I have never forgotten the advice of one of my school teachers many years ago, that to cultivate a taste for good reading and, if possible, accumulate a library, would afford undreamed of pleasure through life. I like "Sesame" and "Lilies" and the other works of John Ruskin for the beautiful thoughts, sound philosophy and fine language therein.

Charles Dickens should be read by everyone, for his wonderful insight into human nature has helped me, among hundreds of mortals striving to gain knowledge of mankind.

Some have called Edward Bulwer Lytton a writer of mystic weird tales. I especially admire his beautiful thoughts, purity of diction and his philosophy.

Even the blase will find something new in "Kenelm Chillingly" and his adventures, which might happen to any of us in the United States or in England, and Riccabocca in "My Novel" is a character worthy of emulation.

Sir Walter Scott's writings seem odd and dry, though in one novel I read a most extraordinary account of an execution; and with this writer I class Alexander Dumas.

Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables" should be read to study that grand character the Bishop, alias Jean Valjean.

The diary of George Eliot's life shows those records frequently kept by folks in days less strenuous than the present ones, and her novels are classics.

An entirely different woman is Margaret E. Sangster, to whom one should refer for good advice on subjects interesting to all who have at heart that blessed trinity, man, woman and offspring, and their dwelling place, the home.

E. P. Roe and Louise Alcott's novels point good morals while being intensely interesting reading matter.

Cooper's Leather Stocking Tales depict a phase of Indian life and the style of living of our ancestors in one section of this country.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin," by Harriet Beecher Stowe, and Letitia M. Burwell's "A Girl's Life in Old Virginia Before The War" show two sides of the life of the whites among the negroes before the Civil War.

Anna Katharine Green and Conan Doyle are good detective writers and show to what lengths a vivid imagination can go.

For humor, read Marietta Holly (Josiah Allen's wife) and Mark Twain.

When your time is limited, read Henry's short tales, with theater in various parts of the United States.

E. A. Poe always reminds me of the honor given to mortals,—after death, the same as to the author of "Home, Sweet Home."

For essays, read Bacon's and Emerson's, not omitting those of W. C. Brann, who strips off the veneer and tells the truth, whether it please or not.

Among the poets, Tennyson, Longfellow, the Brownings, James Whitcomb Riley and Ella W. Wilcox should be studied.

I feel sorry for those who do not care for poetry—they miss so much. Those who do not care for it, would be well repaid if they cultivated a fondness for the best poets.

Shakespeare's tales show that human nature in its main characteristics doubtless was the same in that age as at the present time, even if people did dress differently, and lived in somewhat more commodious dwellings and did not have aluminum or even enamelled

Comfort's Sisters' Recipes

CHICKEN BROTH.—Take the water the fowl has been boiled in, set it on to boil with half cup of rice and boil one hour, add pint of chicken cut in cubes, add onion to the stock when first put on to boil. Season with salt, pepper and celery salt and serve.

NOODLES.—Two eggs, one half teaspoon salt, one half egg shell of milk, work in as much flour as possible. Roll very thin, dry an hour or so, roll up and slice very fine. Put in soup fifteen minutes before serving.
MRS. ANDREW DABOVICH, Virginia, Nev.

BOILED ASPARAGUS.—Cut off lower parts of stocks as far as they will snap; wash, remove scales and tie into bundles. Cook in boiling salted water until soft, leaving tips out of water part of the time. Drain, remove strings and season with salt, pepper and butter.—Ed.

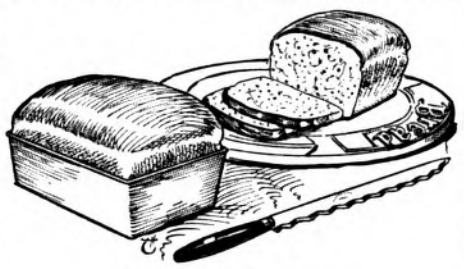
GRAHAM MUSH.—Mix one and one half cups graham flour with one cup cold water; then add three and one half cups boiling water into which has been dissolved two teaspoons suet. Boil five minutes, set in a larger pan of boiling water and cook one hour.—Ed.

A GOOD BREAKFAST DISH.—Lay in a buttered baking dish half a pound of sausages that have been cut in short pieces. Turn into a mixing bowl one teacup of flour and add a pinch each of sugar, pepper and salt, one scant teaspoon of baking powder, two well-beaten eggs, one large cup tomato sauce and very little grated onion. Beat batter until very smooth, pour over sausages and bake in a hot oven until firm and brown.
LILLIAN CARSTENS, Deep River, Conn.

HOMINY. (Requested.)—To one quart of white corn add one tablespoon of soda. Cover with water and cook till hulls get loose, drain off water, put in a large vessel of cold water and rub with the hands. Change water two or three times, till all hulls are removed. Cook till tender, drain off water, salt to taste and fry in hot fat.
LILA MCALISTER, Stephenville, Texas.

FRIED HOMINY.—Pour one part hominy into four parts boiling, salted water, stir till it thickens and then cook slowly in a double boiler for three and one half hours. Pour into a deep, greased pan till about four inches in depth. When perfectly cool, turn the mixture out of the pan, slice in one half inch slices and fry both sides in hot fat.—Ed.

HOMINY AND CHEESE.—Put alternate layers of boiled hominy and grated cheese in baking dish. Add enough milk to moisten. Cover with bread or cracker crumbs, and place small pieces of butter on top. Bake till hot through and crumbs are browned.—Ed.



PICKLED PIGS' FEET. (Requested.)—Boil the feet until they fall to pieces. Season while cooking with salt and pepper (and if liked use allspice or a few cloves or a small piece of bay leaf.) When cool remove bones. If too much liquid, boil down to at least one pint. Put meat into crock, add one cup good vinegar and the liquid from meat. Stir all together, set away to cool. It should be jellied when cold. Cut in slices and garnish platter with parsley.
MRS. I. D. GRAY, Weiser, Idaho.

LUNCHEON HAM.—Put fair-sized slice of ham in baking pan and cover with milk. Bake in a slow oven until milk has soaked into ham and ham is light brown; add milk enough to make a gravy and thicken.

FISH SAUCE.—To be used with any baked fish. One half cup of butter creamed well; add, one at a time, two egg yolks and beat well; add juice of one half lemon, one half teaspoon of salt and one quarter teaspoon of cayenne pepper. When ready to serve, add one half cup boiling water, heat rapidly over hot water and stir until it thickens. This is said to be delicious.
MRS. BULAH ZIEGLER, Arnold, Kans.

BAKED EGGS.—Make a cream sauce of two tablespoons of melted butter, two tablespoons of flour and one cup of milk. Fill six ramekin dishes one third full with the sauce and drop into each, one raw egg; sprinkle with grated cheese, cover with cream sauce and stand the ramekins in a pan of hot water. Bake five minutes in a moderate oven.—Ed.

POTATO AND FLOUR BREAD.—By the courtesy of the "Rural New Yorker," we print the following recipe for Potato and Flour Bread, which is worth trying. Not only is this pleasing to the taste, but it is economical as well as nutritious and keeps soft longer than bread made from ordinary white flour. Peel some potatoes and let them stand in cold water for a time. Drop into boiling water and when done put through a potato ricer. Place three cups of this mashed potato into the bread mixer. Add one heaping teaspoon of salt and one cup of new milk. Beat with a spoon till white and light. Put in a second cup of new milk, in which is dissolved one half cake of compressed yeast. About nine cups of white bread flour will be required to make it stiff enough. Let the dough rise till light, cut it down, let rise again. Place on the molding board and shape into two loaves, let rise again and bake one hour.

MRS. J. W. SMITH, Massachusetts.

TASTY POLISH POT ROAST.—Procure a good pot roast the night before you wish to cook it: place in an enameled pan with one sliced garlic, placed under and over the roast. Stick a few cloves into the meat. Then half cover with good cider vinegar. Turn a few times and cover tightly. Next day allow fresh cold water to run over meat fifteen minutes. Dry with a clean cloth, dredge with flour and brown thoroughly in smoking hot fat. Put in pot, adding one quart boiling water and cook over good fire; add little hot water at times to keep one quart in pot. When tender add one minced onion, salt, pepper and a little chopped parsley. When onion is cooked, lift meat to platter. Thicken gravy with one tablespoon flour in a little cool water. When thickened pour little over meat and rest in gravy boat. Delicious hot with gravy or sliced cold.
MRS. GRIFFITH RYAN, Los Angeles, Cal.

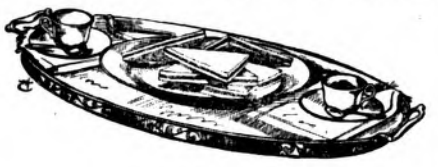
CHILI-CON-CARNE. (Requested.)—To make the original chili, you must use the real Mexican Chili peppers, not the ground pepper, as that contains curry powder, which gives a peculiar and not pleasant flavor. Two pounds ground beef, commonly called Hamburger, one whole garlic, and for this amount of meat, use from ten to twelve peppers. Place meat in hot lard together with garlic chopped fine, one heaping tablespoon flour, brown together to nice brown, pour enough water to cover meat, not too much (depending on how much gravy you wish) and place back to cook slowly. Wash peppers, open and remove seeds, place on stove to boil about ten minutes, remove pulp, placing same in pot with meat. If desired very highly seasoned, you may add some of the water in which the peppers were cooked; let all this boil slowly for about two hours. Season with salt to taste. Do not use seeds nor outer skin of peppers. If you follow these directions, you will find a most excellent Chili-Con-Carne, and eaten with plain boiled red beans, is a very palatable dish. I will also state, that it may be possible that you would use these numbers of peppers and then not find the Chili very hot, and then again you may find in using only two or three it would be very hot, as sometimes the peppers are not hot. Hope this will be of some service to your subscribers.
MRS. M. E. WHITNEY, 1017 Third St., New Orleans, La.

KOHL RABI. (Requested.)—Take young Kohl Rabi, peel and wash; then put it in some cold water with a little salt; dice it and boil until soft. Make a cream sauce of two tablespoons of butter, one half tablespoon of flour or corn-starch, one cup of milk or cream, salt and pepper. Melt butter, add the flour mixed with seasonings, and stir until thoroughly blended. Pour on milk, one third at a time, stirring until well-mixed, cook until smooth. When done, pour over Kohl Rabi and serve while hot.
MRS. T. SCHARPF, Sparkill, N. Y.

SALAD DRESSING.—One egg, one teaspoon mustard, two teaspoons sugar, two tablespoons vinegar; pepper and salt to taste. Cook in double boiler, when thick take off, add one third cup cream or milk and a small piece of butter.

OATMEAL BREAD.—Dissolve one compressed yeast cake in one half cupful of lukewarm water. Add to two cups of rolled Quaker oats, two cups of boiling water. Let stand one hour. Then add one half cup molasses, one teaspoon salt, one tablespoon butter, the yeast cake and five cups sifted flour. Let rise until double in bulk, then beat well, and turn into greased bread tins. Let rise once more and bake. Sufficient for two loaves.
NORMA NELSON, Huntington Sta., L. I., N. Y.

ROLLED OATS BREAD.—Two cups boiling water, one half cup molasses, pinch of salt, one tablespoon butter, one half yeast cake dissolved in one half cup warm water, one heaping cup rolled oats, four cups flour. Add boiling water to oats and let stand one hour; add the rest of the ingredients and let rise, beat thoroughly, turn into buttered bread tins, let rise again and bake.



DELICIOUS MUFFINS.—Beat the yolks of two eggs. Into this stir one pint of flour in which two heaping teaspoons of baking powder have been mixed; then stir in gradually one pint of sweet milk or water, and add lastly the well-beaten whites of the eggs; salt. Add two tablespoons of sugar mixed with the flour if muffins are liked sweet. Have the pans well greased, and hot. Put in a hot oven and bake quickly twenty minutes.
MISS HELEN S. NAGG, Allison, Pa.

CREAM WAFFLES.—One pint of sour cream, two eggs, one pint of flour, one tablespoon of corn-meal, one teaspoon of soda, half a teaspoon of salt. Beat the eggs separately, mix the cream with the beaten yolks, stir in the flour, corn-meal and salt; add the soda dissolved in a little sweet milk, and, lastly, the whites beaten to stiff froth.
MRS. I. T. DEGROFF, Roubaix, S. Dak.

JAPANESE CAKE.—Two cups sugar, four cups flour, one cup butter, four eggs, one teaspoon lemon extract, one teaspoon baking powder and enough milk to make a medium batter; bake in layers.

FILLING.—Juice of two lemons and rind of one, one grated cocoanut, one and half cups sugar, one half cup water, and three teaspoons corn-starch; cook until thick and spread between layers and on top.
MRS. W. S. GRAHAM, Athens, Ala.

SANDWICHES.—Cut the bread very thin and in triangular shape and remove crusts. Butter the bread, with melted butter, and spread with a mixture made of equal parts of cream cheese and chopped dates, and finely chopped walnuts if desired. Serve with tea. Other fillings, equally as good, are made of the following combinations: Cucumbers, sliced thin, with salad dressing and chopped nuts. Cottage cheese and juice of onion. Stuffed olives, ground, and salad dressing. Bananas, sliced thin and sprinkled with lemon juice, salad dressing and chopped nuts.

GENUINE PARKER HOUSE ROLLS.—Three tablespoons butter, one teaspoon salt, one half cup lukewarm water, one yeast cake, two cups fresh milk, one tablespoon sugar, whites of two eggs, six cups flour. Scald the milk and add to it the sugar, salt and butter. Let it stand until lukewarm, then add three cups flour and beat for five minutes. Add the dissolved yeast cake and let it stand until very light and frothy, then add the remaining flour. Let it rise again until it is twice its original bulk, place on your molding board, knead lightly and roll into a sheet half an inch thick. Take a large biscuit cutter and cut the dough into rounds, brush with melted butter, fold over and press the edges together. Place in a buttered pan one inch apart. Let them rise until very light and bake in a hot oven fifteen minutes.
MRS. C. M. HILL, 1121 Guerrew St., San Francisco, Cal.

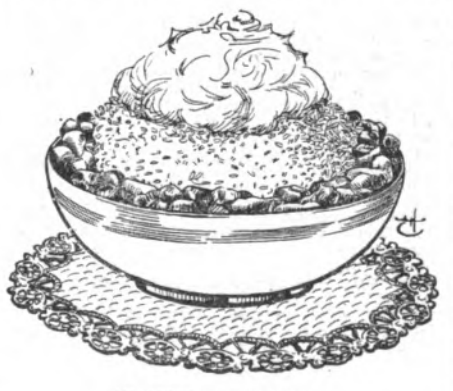
DROP MOLASSES COOKIES.—Two cups brown sugar, one half cup melted lard, two eggs, one cup cold water, one half cup molasses, one cup raisins, one teaspoon salt, one teaspoon cloves, two teaspoons cinnamon, two teaspoons soda dissolved in a little water. Six cups sifted flour or enough to make the dough stiff, and drop from a teaspoon one and one half inch apart on greased tins.
MRS. O. W. BOLFING, Osage City, Mo.

PLAIN CAKE.—One cup sugar, one half cup butter, three eggs, yolks and whites beaten separately, two cups flour and two teaspoons of baking powder. Flavor with any kind of extract.

SUMMER MINCE MEAT.—One cup raisins, eight rolled crackers, two cups sugar, one quarter cup vinegar, one tablespoon butter, cinnamon, cloves, nutmeg and allspice if liked. Cook these ingredients together while preparing the crust.
MRS. IDA SOUTHERLAND, Garrison, R. R. 1, Kans.

SNOW CAKE.—Whites of six eggs, one and one half cups milk, two and one half cups sugar, one and one half cups lard, pinch salt, flavor, and enough flour to make soft dough; bake. This recipe makes excellent layer cakes.
MAE SMITH, Kiblah, Ark.

DARK LAYER CAKE.—Four eggs (leave out two whites), two cups dark brown sugar, one half cup butter, one half cup sour milk, one level teaspoon soda, two teaspoons cinnamon, one half teaspoon cloves, two cups flour, one quarter teaspoon salt. Add soda last in one tablespoon boiling water. Use white boiled icing between layers.



NEAPOLITAN COFFEE CAKE.—One cup sugar, one half cup butter, two eggs, one cup molasses, one half cup strong coffee, one teaspoon soda, one half teaspoon lemon extract, two and one half cups flour, one cup raisins, one cup currants, one quarter pound citron, one teaspoon cinnamon, one half teaspoon cloves, one teaspoon nutmeg. Dissolve soda in coffee. Bake nearly an hour in a moderate oven.
MRS. LAURA HALE, Johnsonville, Ill.

PLAIN CAKE.—Three eggs, well-beaten; one cup sugar and one third cup butter, creamed together, one cup sweet milk, two cups flour, two teaspoons baking powder, and desired flavoring. A cup of chopped nuts improves it.

COMMON FRUIT CAKE.—One half cup sugar, one half cup melted lard, one half cup syrup, one cup water, one cup raisins and currants, one egg, four cups flour, one tablespoon vanilla, one teaspoon soda, one tablespoon cinnamon, one teaspoon nutmeg and cloves, a pinch of salt. Bake in deep breadpan.

DROP CAKE.—One cup butter, two cups sugar, three quarters cup water, one half teaspoon soda, four and one half or five cups of flour, two eggs. Drop by large spoonfuls in a buttered tin.
MRS. GEORGE G. TUBBS, Montevideo, Minn.

RICE WITH DATES.—Cook a cup of rice with a pint of milk and a pint of water, till soft. Sweeten to taste and flavor with vanilla. Use enough dates to make a

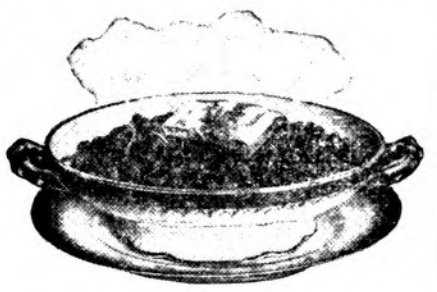
That Masculine Zest in the Van Camp Sauce



Ask the man at your table what he finds so appealing in Van Camp's Pork and Beans. He is likely to say, "The Sauce."

Do you realize what it means to make it?

Tomatoes are grown on certain soils and from special seed. They are picked in their ruddy ripeness.

Then the sauce is seasoned and spiced as per recipes developed by our chefs. It is made to please men, and it does that.

But it never would seem one-half so delightful did we not bake it into the Beans.

VAN CAMP'S
PORK & BEANS BAKED WITH TOMATO SAUCE

Also Baked Without the Sauce

10, 15 and 20 Cents Per Can

But that's only one of the Van Camp attractions.

Another is the beans, which are mealy and whole, fragrant with oven flavor.

Another is ease of digestion. One is never sorry that he ate Van Camp's.

These things are due to modern steam ovens, to hours of baking in a fearful heat. They are impossible at home.

Baked Beans is a man's dish, hearty and nutritious. It is always welcome when you serve it right. And it's very convenient.

Let our chefs help you make this dish attractive. They are baking it now for thousands of places where men eat Beans downtown.

Buy a can of Van Camp's Beans to try. If you do not find them the best you ever ate, your grocer will refund your money.

The Mysterious Soprano

By Nora E. Young

Copyright, 1915, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher, Inc.

TO an onlooker, the varying expressions on the faces of Dr. Meredith's good people that Sunday morning would have been interesting as they sat and listened to the earnest expostulations of the young minister as he criticized the divorce evil of our country so severely. Some of the older and wiser shook their heads and nodded and slightly agreed; some of the happily married looked at their wives or husbands and fervently thanked their maker for their happy lot; but, the hen-pecked husbands, and the neglected and unhappy wives looked defiant or amused, wondering if he himself were married, and if not,—wait.

The little church was crowded. A new minister was a treat, and this young man had made a place for himself in the front ranks of his calling at the early age of thirty-two, and his fame as a speaker had reached even Harrisville.

"Those whom God hath joined together, let no man put asunder." He ended his discourse with the quotation, and stood for half a minute looking over the congregation, letting his exhortations sink deeper into their souls. Then, before he had time to add the accustomed words, "Let us pray," clear, and sweet as a silver bell rose the wonderful voice:

"Love divine all love excelling,
Joy of heaven to earth come down," and so on, verse after verse until the hymn was ended.

The people sat spellbound, gazing at the choir loft. Never had such a voice been heard in their little church. Presently a deep indrawn breath seemed to break the silence; a soft rustle followed, and eyes met eyes full of silent questioning.

The minister too stood enthralled, wondering. The prayer that followed would never have been accorded to him, if heard by any of his own congregation.

The benediction over, the people reached the church steps before they gave vent to the curiosity that was consuming them, each one waiting and lagging behind, trying to get a glimpse of the singer who failed, however, to appear.

"Who is she?"

"How did she happen to sing at such an opportune time?"

"Do you suppose she came to help out the new minister?" asked one.

"Oh, no," cried another, "I'm sure not. Did you notice his face?"

This last remark was speedily confirmed by the minister himself, for after he was introduced to, and had shaken hands with the people, he remarked with great earnestness: "You have been fortunate in securing for your choir such a wonderful soprano. It is one of the purest and sweetest I have ever heard. Is she a resident among you?"

"No," cried several, "she doesn't live here, and we don't know who she is."

"She didn't stand up when she sang," explained one, "and the curtains of the choir loft are so high we can only see the tops of the heads of those who are sitting behind them. I wonder who she can be, and—why, where is she anyway?"

"Let us ask Miss Manning, the organist. Here she comes."

The young minister was almost deserted while the little organist, her eyes shining with excitement, became the center of attraction.

"Why, I don't know," she replied breathlessly to their questions. "Just after Mr. Graham began the sermon, someone laid a hand on my shoulder and asked me to keep my seat, and to play when she told me, as she was to sing. I was so surprised; I hadn't heard her come in. She just seemed to get there. As soon as he, Mr. Graham, said, 'Those whom God hath joined together, let no man put asunder,' she whispered 'now.' It was a second or so before I could begin, and she seemed impatient and said 'play.' As soon as I touched the keys she began to sing. I tell you, I don't know how I played; she was so wonderful. Then, as soon as the hymn was over, and everyone knelt, she stepped down back of the organ and was gone, out the door I suppose."

"Don't you know who she is?" they chorused.

"No, I never saw her before."

"But, what did she look like? What had she on?" Truly these good people were excited, and the minister, too, stood on the outskirts of the group, an interested, if silent listener.

"I don't know what she had on, something white and soft, and lacy, and no hat. Nice looking? Well, I can't describe her, except to say that her hair was brown with big waves in it, and done low on the back of her neck. Her eyes were either black or dark gray. She kept her face turned from me as much as she could. I guess the choir was surprised—some," she added with an excited laugh.

The good people of Dr. Meredith's church had food for gossip for many a day. For once the young minister, whose coming had been looked forward to with so much pleasure, sank somewhat into oblivion, and the mysterious singer was given first place in their thoughts and talk.

The words of that beautiful hymn brought back to many, the obligations of their marriage vows, more forcibly than the words of the minister had done.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Lawrence Graham reached home, a puzzled man. The words of the hymn seemed to cling to him, and he would find himself repeating over and over again the first two lines:

"Love divine all love excelling,
Joy of Heaven to earth come down."

Try as he might he could not forget them. Deep down in his heart they stirred to life a faint elusive memory of something, but what?

Search as he might, the annals of his past, he could find no one who had ever touched him, except, perhaps, Margaret—and Margaret had scorned him after their quarrel. He smiled ruefully as he remembered it. But then,—it was not Margaret. Many an hour he spent idly wondering who the singer might be.

One Sunday evening about six weeks later, just before the service began in his own church, the organist came to him in despair. He had worked so hard on the anthem for the evening, and now the soprano was sick with a cold. What was he to do? The music was to be special, as everyone knew.

"Have the tenor sing a solo, and I'll announce the facts. Miss Kane can't help being ill, you know. I'm sorry however, but, never mind," the minister consoled.

It was a disappointed congregation when the notice was given out just before the expected anthem was to begin, but, when the organist began the prelude to "O promise me," the expressions of disappointment changed to amazement, for sweet and pure, and true, rang the soprano, but, what a soprano, and whose? Only the minister had an inkling.

With the first few notes he had started forward, but, his long practise of self-control served him well, and he sat there drinking in each word as the voice rose and fell.

As soon as the service was over he hurried to the organist. It required all his self control to keep the eagerness out of his voice, as he asked where the singer had been obtained at the last minute.

"Where?" almost shouted the organist, "Where? She came while you were giving out the notice and handed me copies of the music, and said she was requested to take Miss Kane's place; she left me no choice; it was a command. I just handed the other three their copies and played. Heavens, such a voice. She left as soon as it was finished. I thought you sent her."

Such was the gist of the information he obtained from the organist. Miss Kane knew nothing of her.

Lawrence Graham was piqued. His keen mind searched eagerly for a clue, but, in vain. It seemed as if the earth had swallowed her.

To the members of his flock, he could only shake his head and refer them to the organist or Miss Kane, and as neither of these could give a satisfactory explanation, the matter soon lost its interest. But, for a few Sundays after the occurrence, the Rev. Graham could not flatter himself for the appearance of many of those who were non-members, who came to his church. Well he knew the fame, without the name, of the singer had gone the rounds, and equally well he knew that the strongest trait of many of these good people was curiosity.

As for himself, he could not believe that the appearance and disappearance of the singer in Harrisville, and again in his own church, was a mere coincidence. But what could the object be? The words of that first hymn he had heard her sing, were still coursing through his brain. Love divine, all love excelling," etc.

He made up his mind, irrevocably, to find her. But where and how to begin? All winter he sought her, quietly, but, persistently, but, with no result.

One morning in April, as he was opening his mail he encountered a large square envelope. He clipped it open with little interest and drew out a folding card, decorated with hand-painted blue bells and maple leaves. "An ad.," he said to himself, "but, how cleverly done."

He opened it, and on the inside printed in gilt letters was the last verse of "Loch Lomond."

"The wee birdies sing, and the wild flowers spring,
An' in sunshine the waters are sleepin'
But the broken heart it kens, nae second spring again,
Tho' the wae'ful may cease frae their greetin'," and underneath in parenthesis:

"Oh, how could ye gane laddie, how could you gane,
Oh, how could ye gane sae to greet me."

"What the——," well might he be excused the exclamation.

By some intuition he immediately connected the sender of the card with the singer. Hastily he scanned the card and envelope for some mark of identification, but, the postmark was indistinct, and the address typewritten.

The old song was familiar, everyone had heard "Loch Lomond," of course, but, the lines in parenthesis,—had he heard them? He could not remember, and yet there was that same elusive something that held his attention, and still hovered just beyond his reach.

He carried the card to the window, looked at it carefully, turned it at every angle, and finally, with an exclamation, threw it into the waste basket.

"All right, young woman, you seek to attract the wrong man. Impertinence." He settled himself firmly in his chair, fully determined to forget the whole affair; picked up a book on theology and began to read, but, presently he found himself staring at the waste basket and repeating "Loch Lomond." In disgust he threw aside his book, picked the card out of his basket, and propped it open on his desk.

"Well, I admit you've got me guessing young lady, but, I give you clearly to understand, if I have in any way 'greeted' you, it was purely your own imaginative self, and if you expect me to take any interest in you whatever, you will have to change your tactics. But, by George," bowing to the card, "you have a most wonderful voice, and—brown wavy hair, and big gray or brown eyes. That much I do know, but, I promise faithfully to know more about you."

On his desk the card remained. Much of his spare time was spent on it; the whole affair was never far from his mind.

The last day of April marked another epoch for the singer. He had gone down to officiate at the Colby-White wedding. Perhaps his "Mysterious Lady" as he called her, was farther from his thoughts that day than at any time since the arrival of the card.

The bride was one of the most popular girls in the town, and the groom, a well-known professional man. It seemed as if the whole of Kingsbury were present.

The house was beautifully decorated; the musicians were seated on a little gallery entirely hidden by palms.

The bride was charming, her dress a wonderful creation of art; and the bridesmaids looked very sweet with their baskets of flowers.

During the short service, the musicians played softly, the music seemingly coming from afar. The minister's words rang clear and distinct, "Those whom God hath joined together, let no man put asunder."

The bride and groom knelt to receive their blessing, and the guests stood with bowed heads until the minister had ended the prayer.

"Love divine all love excelling,
Joy of Heaven to earth come down."

Everyone except the bride and groom and minister looked up, but, the singer was hidden with the musicians behind the palms.

Presently it was all over, and the bride and groom were receiving the congratulations of their friends; the interest in the singer was temporarily forgotten, except by one, and it was not until the bridal party had disappeared that he found an opportunity to question anyone. The bride's mother did not know anything about the singer, as Miss Kane was to have sung, but, she remembered just before the wedding march began, Alice, her daughter, had said something about Miss Kane's sore throat, and she had been too excited at the time to remember who it was would replace her, but, she was wonderful, yes, wonderful.

He could hardly conceal his disappointment when Mr. White was unable to tell him who she was.

Harold, the bride's brother, had gone back to New York with the bridal party, and the bride herself was off to Europe, to be gone until nearly the Christmas holidays.

"Well," he said to himself rather bitterly, "I can wait, if wait I must; but my vow holds good, I will know you yet."

Gradually he made inquiries, but, the answer was always the same, and so the mystery still remained a mystery.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Spring days lengthened into summer; summer days waned and the autumn leaves had fallen, but, the mystery was still unsolved.

People sometimes wondered why the far-away look appeared so frequently in their young minister's eyes, and why he so often sat listening for the anthem to begin, on a Sunday morning, as if he expected something; then after the singing began, he would sink back in his chair, and the look of expectancy die out of his face.

On the eve of December fifteenth, the town hall was crowded; the local talent was giving a benefit concert in aid of the Orphans' Home. Everyone was expected to take as many tickets as possible, and bring their friends. The secret as to what the program was to consist, had been well kept, and curiosity helped to swell the receipts; hence the crowd.

It was a merry, good-natured, crowd who appreciated and applauded every number. The program was well selected; songs, instrumental solos and duets, recitations, etc., all old-fashioned and mostly rich in humor, but, no one was allowed an encore as the program was too long.

The numbers had been nearly all rendered, when the chairman announced that "As the last number has taken you to the Sunny South, the next one will take you to Bonnie Scotland;" then the singer stepped lightly to the front of the stage, dressed in Highland costume. Gracefully lifting her little cap from her dark hair, and saluting the audience, she began to sing "Auld Robin Gray."

People seemed to hold their breath, and the house grew painfully still as the voice rose and fell. Toward the end of the last verse, she gradually stepped to one side of the stage, and as the last word was sung, raised her cap, bowed, and disappeared.

The thunder of applause almost shook the building; cries of "more, more," came from every part of the hall. The chairman tried to speak, but, more and more insistent came the cries, and the louder grew the applause. In comical despair he motioned, and the girl came forward, hesitated an instant, then spoke to the accompanist who began without prelude.

"Oh, how could ye gane laddie, how could ye gane,
Oh, how could ye gane sae to greet me,
Wi' your winnin' ways and art, ye hae broken my puir heart,
Oh, how could ye gane sae to leave me."

and with hardly a break the music changed to,

"But, will ye no come back again,
Will ye no come back again,
Better lo'ed ye canna be,
Will ye no come back again."

That was all, but the pathetic appeal in the voice touched nearly every heart. There was silence for perhaps half a minute, then men clapped and stamped—perhaps to hide their emotion; women, with tears running down their faces, rapped on the backs of seats with their fans; the boys in the back of the hall whistled and stamped, "More, more, more;" the cry kept up.

The singer was brought back; there was a lull in the uproar. Their disappointment showed plainly when she only bowed and then disappeared. "More, more," "Bring her back," "Bring her back." The audience seemed to have gone mad.

The chairman came forward and held up his hand for silence, but, no one noticed him. "Bring her back," they shouted. Then back she came. When the noise had quieted, she sang, "Has anybody here seen Kelly." The effect of the rollicking song was marvelous; everyone was smiling, and equilibrium restored. She was allowed to go after a round of hearty applause, but, when a little tot came forward immediately and sang in his little piping voice, "For she's a jolly good fellow," the whole crowd stood up and sang with him.

Then it was over. The chairman thanked the audience for their presence and attention; announced the receipts of the evening, and all started for home.

When Lawrence Graham left the hall, he did not go home; instead, he walked to the park and stood looking with unseeing eyes over the moonlit lake.

The Highland girl and "his singer" were one. Memories of the past rose quickly before him. As soon as she had stood before him, that faint elusive something had become a reality, had become just Margaret. But that voice.

Suddenly he realized why he had never cared especially for any other girl; why he had never married. She had stood between him and all others; an ideal, although he had tried to shut her out of his heart, and had made himself believe he had forgotten her, all because of his indomitable pride of a hurt that still rankled, even after eight years,—and eight years is a long time.

He remembered the last time he had seen her. It was at home—for their homes were in the same town and their parents friends. He had taken her driving, and during their drive she mentioned a dance. He was a student then, full of theory, but of little else—and tact! it was missing altogether.

"Dance," he had said harshly, "Why do you care for dancing. It is not right."

"No? Really Larry, really? Now why?" He could see the tilt of her chin as she straightened up against the buggy seat, and her careless voice might have warned him.

"Why? It is positively indecent for a girl to allow any old Tom, Dick or Harry who happens along to put his arms around her," he had answered hotly.

"But my dear Larry, I do not dance with any old Tom, Dick or Harry. They are all nice boys."

"I can't see that it matters who they are. Nice girls don't allow it."

"But Jack is going, and so is Betty. I'm going with them." The information had been very sweetly given. Jack and Betty were his own brother and sister.

"I can't help that," he had retorted, as her answer stung him. "I can't keep them away, but, I still maintain that dancing is indecent and vulgar."

"Nice girls really don't do it, Larry?" so softly had the answer been given that he was entirely misled.

"No. Don't do it Margaret, will you? Be guided by me and don't go. Perhaps we can persuade Betty and Jack also not to go."

"Then what would you suggest for the evening? Checkers, dominoes, or what?"

He detested checkers as much as he did dominoes; they both were abominable games, but, he had eagerly agreed, "Oh, all right anything."

He could still hear the ringing laugh that had followed, and even now his face burnt painfully at the remembrance of it.

"Larry, take me home," she had commanded softly, "you, a would-be minister driving with an immoral and vulgar girl like me? What will the people say? Take me home."

He had not answered, but drove steadily on, too furious with her and with himself to reply.

"You heard what I said? Take me home at once." The voice had changed and was harsh and stern, for hers.

"Don't be a fool altogether Margaret," he had retorted, but made no effort to turn the horse.

She had immediately stood up in the carriage and put her foot on the side of it as if ready to spring out. "Must I jump?" was all she had said. He had drawn her down beside him and held her firmly around the waist. "Are you crazy, someone will see you."

Then he received the answer that cut like a lash.

"I told you I allowed no old Tom, Dick or Harry to put his arm around me. Remove your arm at once."

Then he turned the horse and silently they drove home. When they reached the house, she sprang out, not waiting for assistance, and without bidding him good night, entered the house.

He smiled now, as he remembered how hurt and sore he had felt when his sister had persisted in telling about the dance; how Margaret had been the acknowledged "belle," and how she had been so eagerly sought out. He had vowed to punish her by being cold and distant when he next met her, but, he might have spared himself the trouble, for when he did meet her he had bowed, raised his hat with as much dignity as he could assume, but, she—she looked him over from head to foot, said something to her companion, laughed and passed on.

Since then he had never seen her. Twice within the year following he had written and apologized and asked for news of her, but, his letters had not been answered. During his occasional visits home, his sister at first used to mention her, but, for sometime now he had heard nothing of her.

He could have shouted when she came on the stage. He recognized her at once, and the old liking leaped into flame and burned a hundredfold.

"That was a boy-and-girl affair. I wonder if she has forgiven me," he murmured as he looked over the cold moonlit sheet of water. "I wonder—By George," the thought came with sickening dismay. "I wonder if she is married. That 'Auld Robin Gray' song, what did she mean?" He remembered the bright laughing face, and the quick witty answer that had always drawn admirers to her.

"Where is she staying now? I wonder if she will see me? She must," drawing out his watch he saw with surprise the late hour and hastened home.

Morning was long coming, for when one does not sleep the hours drag.

At nine A. M. sharp he picked up the telephone receiver, and called up Harold White who had been chairman the evening before.

"Hello, Mr. White?"

* * * * * * * * * * *

"Oh, good morning, congratulations on your success last night."

* * * * * * * * * * *

"Receipts above expectation, did you say? Fine, fine. I hear nothing but praise for the participants."

* * * * * * * * * * *

"Yes, yes. Say can you tell me where Margaret Elkins is staying? I knew her when she was only a girl."

* * * * * * * * * * *

"Well, I suppose not, for it is almost eight years since I saw her. Her home and mine were in the same town you know."

* * * * * * * * * * *

"Staying at your home? She sang at your sister's wedding last April?"

* * * * * * * * * * *

"Yes, I'll come over this morning, if they are going out later. At eleven you say?"

* * * * * * * * * * *

"Oh, all right, thanks. Good by."

At ten forty-five he rang the bell of the White residence and was shown into the library. Presently he heard voices in the hall; someone went out banging the door. He was standing by the window, but did not turn, although he knew someone had entered and was coming towards him, until she stood within a few feet of him. Then he faced her.

She stood looking at him, her head tilted slightly to one side, her hands clasped behind her. She did not offer to shake hands with him, but, regarded him with a look of demure amusement as he came close and stopped directly in front of her.

"I—I"—he began, but, as of old, the head tilted to a more dangerous angle, and instead of offering the congratulations he had intended, he blurted out, "Margaret, Margaret, have you never forgiven that idiotic boy in all these years? Tell me Margaret, haven't you?"

The girl was completely taken by surprise. The amusement died out of her face and left her white. She tried to back away from him, but, firmly he laid a hand on each shoulder and gently, but firmly, held her.

"Tell me," he insisted, "am I forgiven after eight years?"

"You—you," she stammered. The mischief danced back in her eyes. "That depends, your reverence. Have you retained for eight years your high opinion of me? Am I still the——?"

CHAPTER XX.

A MOMENTOUS INTERVIEW.

"DRIVE on faster, Buxton," Mr. Fletcher ordered, and the carriage went rolling swiftly over the road toward Beechcote. Roland Fletcher could scarcely control his impatience. He was torn with a hundred emotions, hopes and fears, doubts and conjectures, and was almost wild to have them either corroborated or denied.

Could it be possible that he had been deceived during all the past twenty years? he asked himself; that, after all, the child of someone else had been palmed off upon him and his own darling thrust upon the care of strangers?

But who could have done the deed? How had it been executed? What had been the motive?

He knew that he had never experienced for Olive the tenderness, the close feeling of kinship, of fond, proud possession, which a loving father should experience, since that never-to-be-forgotten day when she had struck him the blow in the face and refused to go to him. He had tried to forget, to overlook it; had tried to take her into his heart and assure himself that she was all in all to him; but, down in the depths of his soul, he had always been conscious that there was an unacknowledged sense of repulsion; a feeling of something lost or gone out of his life—a void which she could never fill. On the contrary, from the moment of their first meeting, he had been strangely attracted to Alice, and he recalled now how he had experienced a feeling of almost personal insult and resentment when Imogen and Olive had deliberately slighted her at the lawn party at Castleview four years ago.

He sat absorbed in thought and revolving these things in his mind, until the carriage drew up before the cottage, nestling so cozily beneath the shade of the kingly beech for which it was named.

Will and Mr. Fletcher very tenderly lifted the suffering girl from the vehicle and, bearing her into the house, laid her upon a couch in the sitting-room.

Mrs. Weston was at first quite alarmed to have her daughter brought home to her in such a helpless condition, but after examining and showing the injured foot and ankle, she cheerily declared it would soon be better—it wasn't such a bad sprain, after all.

She soon had it nicely bandaged and supported on a pillow, and, after serving her with a fragrant cup of tea and a light lunch, Alice said she felt much refreshed and really very comfortable.

When Mrs. Weston was at liberty, Mr. Fletcher inquired if he might have a few moments' private conversation with her. She appeared somewhat surprised at the request, but courteously assented and invited him into another room, when Mr. Fletcher, too eager to be ceremonious, put the question that was burning upon his lips point-blank:

"Mrs. Weston, I wish to ask you if Alice is your own child?"

"Why!" panted the widow, flushing and paling by turns, "why!—of course. I—what do you mean? You—I——"

She could not frame a coherent reply, but stopped, literally out of breath, and gazed at her companion with wide, terrified eyes.

"Pray do not be distressed, Mrs. Weston," Mr. Fletcher continued, with kindly courtesy, and beginning to realize that he had been very abrupt. "I should not have taken you so unawares. Let us sit down, for I have something of great importance to say to you."

He placed a chair for her, and she gladly sank into it, for a nervous trembling had seized her.

He seated himself near her and began:

"More than twenty years ago, and shortly after my marriage, I was called to Italy, where we resided for some time. While there a dear little girl was born to us, and, shortly after that event, my wife became hopelessly ill. Following close upon this there came orders to me to change my base of operations to a far distant country. There was but one thing for me to do, and that was to obey, or forfeit my position, which I could not honorably do. My wife I put under the care of an eminent physician, and my child I decided to send to her grandfather in America, in the care of the captain and head stewardess of a certain steamer. My orders were so imperative that I could not even remain long enough to deliver my babe to them personally, and assure myself that she would have every comfort and attention during the voyage. I was obliged to solicit the United States Consul and his wife to attend to the matter for me. But, just before giving her into their care, and about a week before she was to sail, some unaccountable impulse prompted me to tattoo upon the inside of both ankles a small cross in India ink."

"Oh!" breathed Mrs. Weston, at this point, and then she averted her face and covered her eyes with one hand.

"My child was only about three months old at that time," Mr. Fletcher resumed, "and it was a terrible trial to me to part with her and trust her to strangers while crossing the ocean; but word came to me later that she had arrived safely, and after that I heard regularly from her, every letter telling me that she was thriving beautifully. Two and a half years slipped by, when I was allowed leave of absence and returned to America to visit my child and friends. A strange thing happened when the little one was first brought into my presence; she appeared to be repelled by me—refused to come to me, and struck me a passionate blow in the face. That blow was like a dagger plunged into my heart, and something seemed to tell me that the hand which struck it could not be my own flesh and blood. Remembering the marks I had pricked into her flesh, I removed her shoes and stockings and examined her ankles. To my horror, I found them without a blemish. The discovery appalled me. I declared that the child was not mine. Everyone laughed at me—thought me mad. I sought the consul and his wife, telling them my discovery. They assured me that the child was mine—there had been no possible opportunity for any exchange while she had been with them; they remembered the tattooing on her ankles, but said they were not quite healed when they took her on board the steamer. The consul's wife assured me that she herself had given the babe into the care of the stewardess not more than half an hour before the vessel sailed. Even this did not reassure me. I sought the captain of the steamer, saw both him and the stewardess, and they both confirmed the story of the consul's wife. The child was sound asleep, the woman said, when she came aboard, and did not awake until the vessel was far out at sea, and both claimed that there had been no possible chance for any exchange. Of course, I was forced to be content, after all these assurances, and to accept the theory that the marks in India ink had not been pricked in deep enough, and had been obliterated in the process of healing. I have never questioned these conclusions, from that time to this, until today, when Mr. Marchmont insisted upon cutting open Miss Weston's hose, and I was startled to observe, on the inside of her ankle joint, a cross, in India ink, identical with that which I had tattooed on my babe so many years ago; she told me, also that she bore its counterpart on her other ankle. Now, Mrs. Weston, I have told you this long story to explain why I questioned you as I did. I am sure you will not wonder that I was startled, and that all my former doubts were revived, and I beseech you to explain to me how those marks came upon your daughter. I beg that you will tell me truly—is she your own child?"

There was a full minute of silence after Mr. Fletcher concluded; then Mrs. Weston's hand dropped from her face, which was very pale and lined with pain, although there was a tender light in her eyes, which were also full of tears.

"No, Mr. Fletcher," she tremulously replied, "truth compels me to tell you that Alice is not my child."

"Ah!" breathed the man, with a ring of joy in his tones, "I felt sure of it. I have wondered, throughout the trial just over, what there was about her to thrill me so, every time she spoke, every time our eyes chanced to meet, and now, since the discovery of the tattooing, as I have studied her features critically, I have seemed to trace some of my own characteristics and lineaments in her."

"This revelation will cost me much," Mrs. Weston resumed, huskily, "for I can truthfully say that I love the dear girl just as fondly as if she were indeed my very own. I also have observed her resemblance to you; I have trembled at it, too, and wondered that others did not remark upon it."

"Then you have had your suspicions that she might belong to me?" said Mr. Fletcher, inquiringly.

"No, I cannot quite say that," his companion thoughtfully responded, "for I could see no reason why a child of yours should have been lost or—abandoned; but——"

"Ah! then Alice was abandoned! She fell into your hands in that way!" Mr. Fletcher interposed, eagerly, and with a great heart throb.

"Yes. I suppose I must tell you the whole story, although I have hoped that, after so many years, it need never be known, and I might always claim her as my own," replied Mrs. Weston, with a sigh. "During the first two years of our married life our home was in Dover, about a mile from the place where the channel steamers land. My husband rented a small but thrifty farm there. May was born there, and when she was about five months old she had a very severe illness, and we thought that we must lose her. One evening—we feared it would be her last—just after the lamps were lighted, my husband returned from town, where he had been to deliver some fresh vegetables at one of the hotels, and as he stepped upon the porch he found a gray linen packing case or extension standing there. Wondering how it came there, but thinking it unsafe to leave it outside, he brought it in, and wondered still more to find that its top was thickly perforated with holes. On opening it we found a sleeping babe within—a beautiful little girl, a trifle younger than our own. The child had evidently been drugged to keep her quiet. In spite of my anxiety for my own little one, and the constant care she demanded, my heart at once went out to the dear young stranger, and I told John that I could not let her be taken to the county house. I said that we would keep her, for a few days at least, until May's fate was decided, and we could know whether she would be spared or taken. The mother love in me prompted this, for I knew that, if the worst came, I could never bear a silent house and empty arms. But she seemed to bring us good luck, for almost from that very hour May began to improve, and by the time she was out of danger I had become so fond of my other charge, I told Mr. Weston that I would never part with her. 'It is almost as if God had given us twins,' I told him, 'for both are fair and have blue eyes and golden hair.' The idea pleased him; he consented without a demur, and said the little one should be called Alice, after his mother."

"That was the name of my dear wife, and it seems a remarkable coincidence," Mr. Fletcher gravely observed.

"Indeed!" said Mrs. Weston, in a tone of surprise. Then she resumed: "It was only a short time afterward that my husband was called to supply the place of his father, who had died, with Col. Hamblin. About six months later the colonel was ordered abroad, his place was sold, and Mr. Weston secured the position of steward with Lord Ellerton, at Castleview, where he remained until his lordship died. We were very glad to leave Dover and come to this part of England, because we felt that in a strange place no questions would be asked about the children; they were so near of an age and of the same complexion that they would easily pass for twins, and would not be likely to be told that they were not own sisters. They never have been told the fact, and it will be a great shock to them," the woman concluded, with a regretful sigh.

"But did you never try to ascertain to whom the abandoned child belonged?" Mr. Fletcher inquired.

"Yes, though in an indirect way, for, as we had made up our minds to keep her, we did not want too much gossip over the matter. Besides, Mr. Weston was pretty well satisfied in his own mind that the abandonment had been deliberately planned, and there would be little use in trying to trace the parties. That very evening, on his return from town, he had met a woman, just on the outskirts, walking very rapidly. He could not see her very distinctly, for it was quite dark and she was closely veiled; but he felt sure that she must have been the party most interested in the child, and he reasoned that, even if he succeeded in tracing her and compelled her to take it back, she would be likely to repeat the offense, when the little one might fall into worse hands."

"Can you give me the exact date when this occurred?" Mr. Fletcher eagerly questioned.

"Yes. It was the twenty-seventh of April, 18—."

"That was exactly five weeks after my child was given to the United States Consul at Rome!" said Mr. Fletcher, with pale lips. "But it is the greatest mystery I ever heard of! Who could have been that woman who stole my little one? for I am now convinced that she was stolen; what could have been her object? Whose child was substituted for mine, and why? and when could that person have found the opportunity to make the exchange? It all seems inexplicable," he concluded, with an air of perplexity.

"'Exchange!'" repeated Mrs. Weston, in astonishment; "then Miss Olive is not your child?"

"I never had but one," the gentleman gravely returned; "thus it follows, if Alice is mine, and my heart assures me that she is—that Olive is not."

"It is very, very strange! And you have no idea who committed the deed? Can you think of no enemy who would wish to injure you or yours in that way?" Mrs. Weston inquired.

"I cannot seem to think of anyone, and yet—good heavens!"

The man sat suddenly erect in his chair, his face white and rigid almost as marble, a look of mingled horror and conviction growing in his eyes as, like a flash, he seemed to comprehend the whole plot.

His thought flashed back over the last twenty-three or twenty-four years, and a thousand events, as in panoramic procession passed before his mind's eye.

He recalled Imogen's hopeless love for him before his marriage to Alice; the despair and pique that followed and impelled her to marry Robert Ingraham; her widowhood, which occurred just about the time of his own child's birth, and Alice's illness in Rome; her return to the home of Judge Ashburton in Philadelphia a few months later; her remarkable fondness for Olive and the child's strong affection for her; the little one's impulsive repudiation of him as her father and his own consequent repulsion toward her, and the absence of all signs of tattooing upon her person.

He remembered Imogen's manifestations and confessions of love for him during recent years; her visit to him in jail, only the night before his trial; her peculiar tone and manner upon that occasion in referring to her affection for

Cut your wash in half

—not with a knife, but by using Fels-Naptha Soap.

Of course, you sort your clothes first—white and colored, fine and heavy.

Then—and this is important—put them to soak for 30 minutes with Fels-Naptha Soap.

While they soak, take a few minutes to look over the paper, or straighten up the house.

When you come to wash, the Fels-Naptha has already done the hardest part—loosened the dirt. All your clothes need is a light rub or two, (no boiling nor scalding,) rinsing, blueing, wringing, and they are hanging on the line by noon—clothes-basket is empty—afternoon free.

Every woman who uses Fels-Naptha Soap can get her wash done without loss of strength in half the time, and without waste of fuel to keep up a hot fire.

Fels-Naptha is just as time saving and labor saving for all soap-and-water work about the house.

THE RAJAH'S DAUGHTER

or Perils of Love Near a Throne

HECTOR GRAHAM was only a lieutenant in the Fifth Bengal Fusiliers, when, in April, 1857, he was transferred to the Thirteenth Native Infantry, at Amritsur, with the rank of Captain. He was also appointed Regimental Adjutant; and Colonel Cowan, the only other European officer of the Thirteenth, having gone to Sabbathi on sick-leave, Hector Graham, at the age of twenty-four, found himself in command of the Amritsur Fort.

The garrison of the fort consisted of six companies of the Thirteenth, half a battery of the Sixth Brigade of Artillery, white, and a small detachment of engineers, also white. Thus, on the eve of the great Sepoy rebellion, one of the youngest officers in the British army had charge of an important fortress, garrisoned by thirty-five Europeans he could depend upon, and about four hundred natives merely awaiting orders from Nana Sahib to enact the terrible scenes of Cawnpore and Delhi.

At this period Hector Graham possessed the kind of physique men would look after in the streets to envy and women to admire. He was tall, straight, broad-chested, and of the blond type of Scottish beauty, if such an expression is in order when speaking of one of the male sex.

It was a May morning. The air was pregnant with perfumes of the mango groves so numerous in that section of the Punjaub, and the young soldier, taking advantage of its comparative coolness, sauntered leisurely along the magnificent road that wound round the palace of the Rajah, Dowlah Sing, a mile or so outside the fort. He had not been long in Amritsur, and having heard much of this palace, described by the poets as an exquisite dream in marble rising fairy-like in the midst of tropical vegetation and sparkling fountains, he thought the present an excellent opportunity to obtain a complete view and make a sketch of it for a friend in Kurrachee. The palace grounds, laid out on the pattern of the ever-famous "Taj," near Agra, were surrounded by a low marble wall, pierced with twenty gates, all of them jasper or onyx, the whole presenting a piece of artificial scenery only to be found in India.

"By Jove!" exclaimed Hector Graham, "it is grand! But—great heavens!"

This exclamation was drawn from him, near what was called the Lahore Gate, by a spectacle that almost froze the blood in his veins. On turning a curve of the wall, he had come suddenly upon a young girl of extraordinary beauty. It was not, however, the rare beauty of this apparition that struck him just then, though he took in that, too, at a glance, but the mortal terror displayed on her face. Her eyes were distended to their utmost capacity, her lips, even her white teeth, were drawn apart, and her hands worked convulsively at the silken girdle round her waist. In fact, the young woman was paralyzed with terror, and she stood there in all her sinuous grace of form as immovable as a statue.

Advancing a few paces and glancing over the girl's shoulder, the heart of Hector Graham gave a great bound and then stood still, for twenty feet in front of him, between two clumps of cypress trees, crouched the largest and grandest Bengal tiger he had ever seen, his tail lashing the greensward, his eyes blazing like yellow diamonds, and his huge body balanced as if for a spring. To glide between the great beast and his intended victim and at the same time to draw a pistol from its sheath, occupied the soldier only a moment of time. His movements caused the tiger to hesitate, perhaps in astonishment, while his fury grew deeper, his eyeballs flamed with more ferocity, and the black stripes on his back assumed a more somber hue.

"The chance of my escape from death," communed Graham with himself, "is about one as against a thousand; but if I let him spring upon me I will be reduced to one against a million. I shall, therefore, take the offensive, and—I commend my soul to God."

This reasoning may seem a little too philosophical at such a time and place; but whether or no, Captain Hector Graham of the East India Company's service advanced toward the Royal Bengal tiger as coolly as if moving toward a target, keeping his eye fixed, meanwhile, on the blazing orbs of his majesty of the Asiatic jungle.

He had taken only two paces forward when his vision was obscured, he felt the fetid breath of the great cat on his face, and as the muzzle of his pistol almost touched its head, he fired into the brute's left eye. Then he lost consciousness.

How long he remained unconscious neither he nor his paralyzed companion could ever tell. When his senses came back, only that he felt an unpleasant sensation in his left arm, he might easily have imagined himself in heaven and gazing into the glorious eyes of one of its angels. But this was only for a moment, for he soon realized that they belonged to the lady of the Gate. The features were the same, but what a change in the countenance! The look of fascinated terror in the eyes had given way to one of melting tenderness; the statue, in fact, had assumed life and warmth. The young man closed his eyes for a few seconds to give himself time to think, and immediately inhaled a perfumed breath, and—did he dream?—the touch of warm lips on his forehead.

"Oh, do not die, sahib! Preserver of my life, do not yield now!"

Hector smiled and opened his eyes once more to assure this young girl who had evidently become deeply interested in his welfare, that he was alive.

"Die!" he said, sitting up. "Well, I should say not. Why, it is nothing. But where is the tiger?"

"There, sahib," replied the lady of the Gate, stepping aside that he might behold stretched out at his feet the victim of his prowess. "He is dead, and it was you killed him, invincible warrior that you are."

The lady spoke excellent English, with a sweet Hindoostanee accent and in a diction all her own. Hector could not help smiling at her oriental eulogy, and he thought "invincible warrior" good enough on which to base a camp-fire story.

"Oh," she cried, "I am so helpless I wish my attendants would come. Your poor arm!"

Hector saw that his left arm was saturated with blood, and he felt an ugly sensation in that limb from the shoulder down to the wrist. He then realized, although the tiger carried a bullet in his brain, that while on the spring he had strength enough left to stun his antagonist with a stroke of his huge paw, while his claw made the ugly longitudinal cut from which the blood flowed so freely.

With a supreme effort—he was weak from loss of blood—Hector Graham managed to stand up.

"Will you think me rude if I ask your name?" he said.

"Rude! You have the right to ask it. My name is— Call me Ajmour."

"It is a pretty name," he said, "and you are the most beautiful woman I have ever seen. But, pardon me, I know not what I am saying. I hope—I trust I am not foolish enough to allow myself to—to faint."

But he was. The trees danced around him, and he would have fallen prone upon the earth had not Ajmour thrown her arms around him and, by exerting all her strength, placed him sitting on the grass, with his back against a cypress tree. Then taking a white silk handkerchief, she wrapped it round the wounded arm, having accomplished which, she looked anxiously around as if for assistance. Fortunately her ayah—who in India stands for the duenna of southern Europe, and who is never far from her mistress—presently arrived on the scene, and uttered an exclamation of terror and amazement.

"Yooka! Yooka!" cried Ajmour, "this is no time to be hysterical. Run at once to the palace. Or, stay; my palanquin bearers cannot be far off. Seek them, for the love of Heaven, and bring them here."

Hardly had the ayah disappeared, when Hector Graham once more opened his eyes.

"I am afraid, lady," he said, "that I am giving you a good deal of trouble. If I had only a messenger to send to the cantonments."

"Trouble, my brave rescuer!" rejoined Ajmour. "As if I would not go through fire for you; but I am helpless—unless."

"Well," said Hector, with a smile he meant to be reassuring, "you can do something for me."

"What is it?"

"You can kiss me."

Just then the lovely Hindoo maiden did not give herself time to notice the audacity of this request, and taking the pale face of the wounded soldier between her hands and tossing back the silken masses of her ebon hair, she imprinted a kiss on his forehead.

"Ah, here comes the palanquin," she said, rising to her feet; "may Allah be praised forever!"

Four stalwart bearers conveyed Hector Graham to the Rajah's palace, and ten minutes later he was reclining on a couch in Dowlah Sing's own bedroom, pending the arrival of Doctor Donovan, the garrison surgeon, for whom a courier had been dispatched, mounted on the fleetest horse in the Rajah's stables.

"I would not trust you to our native physicians," said Ajmour; "they are good at herbs and drugs, but don't know much about surgery."

"Hello, Hector, old man!" said Doctor Donovan, when that gentleman entered the room half an hour later. "And so you have killed a man-eater, eh, and rescued the Rajah's daughter? Lucky dog!"

"The Rajah's daughter, Larry?"

"To be sure. She is reckoned the most beautiful woman in all India, and if that was she I just saw going out, report does her only mere justice. But let me see that arm of yours. Phew! What an ugly scratch!"

While Doctor Donovan was stitching the injured limb, Hector Graham had time to think, and this is what he thought:

"Surely there is not in all Asia a more impudent beggar than you, Hector Graham. Just fancy a poor devil of a captain in John Company's service asking a princess of royal blood to kiss him. Why, her father is one of the richest of India's rajahs. There comes His Highness now."

The Rajah was a tall, slender man of middle age, with the face of a diplomat, cold, calm and inscrutable.

"Captain Graham," he said, "permit me to thank you with all my heart for the service you have this day rendered my house, also to congratulate Her Majesty, the Queen, in having in her service so gallant an officer."

"It is kind of your Highness to say so," rejoined Hector, modestly. "But say nothing about gratitude. I did only what any gentleman should do under the circumstances."

"How is your patient, Doctor?" said the Rajah, turning to Fort Surgeon Donovan.

"The wound is not necessarily dangerous, your Highness, but he has lost too much blood to have him removed with safety for a few days."

"It is not to be thought of. He must remain until he is strong enough to ride to his bungalow. The palace is his home as long as he pleases, and all its occupants are his to command."

And so it was arranged. Doctor Donovan came daily to see his patient, always bringing with him from the fort a non-commissioned officer to receive orders. His companion the day before Hector's sick-leave expired, however, was the Rev. Dr. Jessup, the garrison chaplain, on which day the Rajah Dowlah Sing was on a visit to his principal palace at Secundra, twenty-five miles distant.

As for the Princess Ajmour, it will be seen later on whether Hector had seen much of her during his sojourn. We shall content ourselves for the present by saying that she took cordial leave of him in the presence of her royal father the morning of his departure, and that when the convalescent reached his quarters in Amritsur Fort, he found in his stables four Arabian horses, a gift from the Rajah worthy the acceptance of an emperor.

CHAPTER II.

It was the custom of Dowlah Sing, Rajah of Burrapore, to move with his daughter and the few ladies of his harem who happened to be with him at Amritsur to the Sabbathi Hills in the beginning of every May, which is also the beginning of the hot season in the Punjaub. Ajmour, strange to say, having reference to an Indian rajah, was his only child. Her mother was a Mingrelian Princess; which accounted for the whiteness of her skin and the extreme purity of her complexion. He was proud of his daughter, and the ambition of his life was to marry her to a son of the Great Mogul, whose throne, though eclipsed by the power of England, was still the most splendid in India. This season, however, much to the surprise of his entourage, he lingered in his palace at Amritsur for the, to him, good, secret and sufficient reason that he was expecting a visit from Sir James Luders, Acting Resident of the Punjaub. Early one bright morning, toward the middle of the month, in fact, that powerful and haughty official alighted from his palanquin in front of the Rajah's palace, and sent one of his retinue to crave audience, which really meant to command it.

"Your Excellency is always welcome," said the Rajah. "You are just in time for breakfast."

"I thank your Highness," said the Resident, as he followed Dowlah Sing into the audience chamber; "I shall avail myself of that honor on a future occasion. I am come just now upon important affairs of state."

The Rajah winced, knowing full well that state affairs meant a more generous exhibition of the British lion's paw.

"You have, no doubt, heard," began the Resident, when they were seated, "that the Sepoys have mutinied in Delhi, Cawnpore and other cities, and murdered the Europeans?"

As Sir James said this he eyed the Rajah keenly.

"I have heard of it," was the rejoinder, "and, of course, I am inexpressibly shocked."

"The purport of my visit this morning is to ask your Highness for an explanation regarding this correspondence. It was found on the person of Prince Akbar, the Mogul's eldest son, by Major Hodson, who, I may state incidentally, shot the prince and his two brothers a few days ago."

The Rajah took the letters handed him, and read them through without any emotion that was visible.

"I see here," he said, coolly, "nothing but two letters relating to a proposed alliance between my daughter and the Great Mogul's eldest son."

"It appears," said the Resident, with a rising inflection of voice, "that it was you who began the negotiations?"

"I believe," was the firm reply, "that I had the right to do so."

"But you promised her to me."

"Yes, were she willing; but she is not, and I cannot force her inclinations."

"Is this also," asked the Resident, "in relation to your daughter's marriage?"

This time the Rajah's face assumed an ashen hue as he read the paper, and his hand trembled as he returned ot.

"The Mogul," he said, after a pause, "asked me what forces I could place in the field in case of a Russian invasion, and, as you see, I furnished him with the information."

The official representative of Britain smiled, and his smile was sardonic.

"Your Highness," he said, as he stood up and faced the Rajah, with flashing eyes, "is doubtless aware that with this paper in my possession I could kill you where you sit, as Hodson killed the Mogul's spawn. You are guilty of treason, and this is a time when punishment is swift and summary."

It was a bold assertion, but literally correct. Sir Henry Lawrence, Resident of the Punjaub, had gone to Delhi to direct military operations, leaving Sir James in absolute control. India was under martial law, and Sir Henry's successor was empowered to deal with Dowlah Sing as he would with a simple Sepoy mutineer.

"I shall spare you on one condition," said the Resident.

"What is the condition?"

"That this very day you give me your daughter, the Princess Ajmour, in marriage, right here in this palace. The fort chaplain will perform the ceremony."

"I accept," said Dowlah Sing, in a choking voice.

"Send for the Princess, then."

The Rajah rang a bell, and in a minute or two Ajmour entered the chamber, bestowing, as she did so, a glance of quiet scorn on the all-powerful official.

"Ajmour," said the Rajah, "circumstances, reasons of state, demand your immediate marriage to His Excellency, Sir James Luders."

"It is impossible, my father."

"Impossible. And why?"

"Because I am already married."

At this announcement, made with the utmost nonchalance, the Rajah sprang to his feet and the Resident gave utterance to an oath.

"Girl," exclaimed the unhappy father, whose face was now livid, "you lie! You know not what you say."

"To whom are you married?" demanded Sir James, in a menacing tone.

"You have no right to ask such a question, sir," answered Ajmour, "but to my father I will state that yesterday morning the fort chaplain united me in marriage to Captain Hector Graham."

Had a bombshell exploded in the audience chamber the two men could not have been more confounded. They stared at each other in amazement.

"Retire for the present, wretched girl," commanded the Rajah, "to your room, where you will consider yourself a prisoner."

The Princess bowed and withdrew.

"She cannot have told the truth," said the Resident, when he had recovered his power of speech.

"I am afraid she has. She never told a lie in her life, and I know for a fact that the chaplain was here yesterday."

Saying this, Dowlah Sing let his head fall on his chest, like one utterly crushed, and Sir James paced up and down the chamber.

"Will you then sacrifice your life and dominions for a girl's whim?" asked Sir James, breaking the silence.

"What can I do?"

"Do! I have heard that there is in your service a man of the name of Roree Dhak."

The Rajah nodded.

"I believe that he was a Thug and is so still, for a Thug is always a Thug. Well, he can render himself useful in a professional capacity. Does your Highness understand?"

"I do. If your Excellency will pay me a visit this time tomorrow I may have news for you."

The Resident, approaching closer to the Rajah, said, in a low tone:

"It may not be necessary to put Roree Dhak's skill with the cord to the test. The native troops, as perhaps you know, will rise tomorrow morning and kill their white officers. But if they fail you comprehend?"

"That the cord may be necessary."

"Now, as your future son-in-law, I advise you to keep quiet. I can do nothing to prevent the mutiny myself, but am going to Lahore for reinforcements, which though they may be too late

HOP up onto my lap, and take notice, you young folks especially you girls for I want to tell you all over again a few things that simply don't seem to penetrate your noddles. It is the old story about leaving the country and going to the city. This migration to the cities is the most menacing problem of our times, and it is largely the result of ignorance and stupidity. It is one of the ingrained follies of human nature to decry the place you are at and paint rosy pictures of some hole in the wall several hundred or several thousand miles away. People leave home in the East where they are close to markets and where thrift, energy and good sense would make them a living, and hike off to some rainless wilderness in the West where only a prairie dog or rattlesknake can live and where there isn't a market within a couple of hundred miles. Then they spend the rest of their lives pining for their happy old New England homes. I get this thing dinned into my ears every day and many a girl has knocked at my door after getting all the heart and health slammed out of her here in the city and begged for shelter and carfare to get home. The man who can stem this human current and force its foolish waves back to the land from whence it came, is a human benefactor. I'm going to start out on the benefacting business by letting you girls know all over again what's in store for you if you hit New York and cities of that ilk. If the girls will stay home, so will the boys. If the girls clear out the boys will go too, and if boys and girls both clear out, we may as well close up shop and prepare to starve to death. We are producing greater crops, because our farmers are getting more scientific, but there is today less land under cultivation than there was some years ago. If the people who have trooped into the cities had only stayed at home and built up the countryside and used as much brains in the country as they have to use in the cities, countryside isolation and loneliness would be a thing of the past. There ought to be a telephone in every country home and if there was a demand for the phones they would soon be supplied. Many already have these phones but all ought to have them. It would pay the government to install them and charge a moderate price for their use, rather than let that lonely feeling drive our food producers into the consuming ranks of the city hordes. Families should get together and own automobiles collectively when they can't own them individually. Good second-hand cars can be got for very little money. The five-cent gasoline jitney automobile bus is solving the transportation problem in the cities. Some wise gazook will make it a ten cent bus and tap the countryside and make a fortune. You who own cars, gather your neighbors up and take them them to the city at so much a head. Have a lecture or entertainment once or twice a week at the local schoolhouse. Let the young folks have a dance at the conclusion of the entertainment and you parents go along as chaperones. If the young folks don't dance in the country they are going to dance in the cities. Youth is going to have enjoyment. Animal spirits have to be worked off—have to find a vent or there's going to be an explosion. There are plenty of wholesome dances. Ban the suggestive ones. North Dakota has taken the loneliness problem in hand. That state has a very large percentage of insane, due it is believed to the loneliness of the country districts. In the state are five hundred towns each with a population of less than two hundred and fifty souls. Professor Alvord of the State Agricultural College of Fargo, with the assistance of Percy McKaye the poet and lecturer are going to attempt to establish community theaters throughout the state. Mr. McKaye says: "It is believed that these community theaters in which the farmers are the actors, stage directors and playwrights will become social centers and bring the people in closer touch with one another." A recent state census of public opinion as to the course most desired in the Fargo school brought the following astonishing results: 1564 requests for a course in the drama, and the second largest agriculture, received only 154 votes.

Now that ought to put a jolt in the heads of some of the bigoted goops who think that everything that smacks of pleasure and enjoyment, everything that suggests life, gaiety and happiness, is sinful. Girls who see their mothers slaving on the farm say: "Nix on that kind of life for me. Me for the city." Mother however, can always be assured of plenty of wholesome food while if daughter goes to the city she'll be having one side of her stomach trying to bite a hole in the other, for she won't even have the price of a cracker to keep them apart. If you boys want the girls to stay on the farm and become your wives, make life at least as easy for them as you do for your horses and mules. Here's a little bit from the Boston Transcript that throws a lot of light on a tremendously important subject: "The betterment movement for farmers' wives, which has been started by the department of agriculture, is said to be unpopular with the farmers themselves. In some of the newer sections may be seen fine barns but very indifferent houses as their companions. The latest machinery must be had and the best labor-saving devices employed, while the housewife must still go to the pump for her water supply, to the woodpile for heating arrangements, and in other ways follow the primitive methods of a hundred years ago. The farmer pleads that he cannot afford to equip his house with modern knickknacks. It would weaken his resources for keeping his outdoor activities up to the highest standard. But invention has been as busy in providing for indoor comfort as for outside expansion. When farmers consider their wives to the same extent as themselves there will be more young women than at present willing to accept these positions."

Here's another hint by which the farmers can make life easier for the women. A group of farmers experimented with a cooperative creamery. It was a big success and they made money at it, then they built an addition and put in a first-class steam laundry plant which does all the family washings at an average cost of ninety-five cents each. The housewives meanwhile have forgotten all about blue Monday. There are unfortunately men who would not pay ninety-five cents a year to relieve their wives of exhausting tasks which if they are not as strong as an ox, prematurely age them and start them on the road to invalidism. This kind of men should marry horses. Keep an eye on this type, girls and let them stay single.

Now for the letter which suggested this discourse, I get thousands of such.

TROOPSBURG, N. Y.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:

There are six children in our family, four girls and two boys. Two of the girls are married, and gone to homes of their own. They do not live far away so we see them quite often. We live on a farm of two hundred and fifty acres. We have lived here eleven years next April. We have a phonograph also an organ. We milk from eighteen to twenty cows and have four horses. One of the horses is thirty-two years old this spring. We have a horse that my sister and I drive when we feel inclined. Uncle we have your books and they are fine. Uncle Charlie what would you advise me to do, stay on the farm or go to town? I like the farm but sometimes think I would prefer it in the city. Please give me your advice. I know it will be good, and I thank you for it. Your niece, ETHEL BURNSIDE.

Ethel doesn't know much about conditions in town or she wouldn't want to go there. Anyone who would willingly and willfully leave a good home in the country, situated on two hundred and fifty big broad acres of God Almighty's good old earth where the cows sing in the tree tops and the birds give milk twice a day, and the trees whisper choice bits of scandal to each other and the streams tango over their pebby beds, and the grasshoppers gather in the crops and the worms shake dice to see who will get on the fisherman's hook, anyone I say who would exchange a rural paradise for a hall bedroom and starvation in a cold, cruel wilderness of bricks, ought to be locked up in the Willie house until his or her senses have returned. I have warned you girls time and again to keep away from the cities, unless you have some friends who can give you a home and find you a good job. If you think a business education will help you to get a job in New York you are mightily mistaken. There are ten thousand stenographers out of work in this city. Hundreds have turned to housework to keep them from starvation, and now there is no more housework and hundreds have been pushed onto the streets. One of my friends, one of the cleverest and most cultured women I have ever known, a woman who knew every capital in Europe, a woman who had held some of the most prominent positions, having done secretary work for some of our most prominent men, men of national fame, took her life only a few days ago. She came of a fine, old New England family, was an expert stenographer and could handle the most intricate business problem as well as any man that ever lived. I'll admit she was within five years of the forty year danger line, but she didn't look thirty-three and was nimble as a kitten. Of course an inexperienced kid with soulful eyes and a baby stare, with as much character and intelligence as a cod fish cake, would have got a job in the average business man's office where my friend would have starved. So many business men do like to have a fluffy thing around, one they can take out to lunch and tell their troubles to, tell them how unsympathetic wifie is, how she ignores all the attentions he lavishes on her (of course he does not tell her that wifie has to go down on her knees every time she wants to get a two spot for Oxford ties to cover her hoofs—he's too foxy for that) how she never did understand him, never tried to, never sewed a button on, never had a meal on time and was always flirting with the iceman. The empty-headed little goose falls for it all and then when he tires of her she is pushed out and some other fluffy fish comes in and gets the same line of talk and like the other girl gets it in the neck at the finish. Youth and good looks are a great asset, but in a few years the bloom has gone and the struggle gets harder and harder until finally as my poor martyred friend found, death was better than humiliation and slow starvation. This friend of mine had gone from door to door peddling toilet articles but she couldn't make fifty cents a day at it for scores are doing that and only one in twenty will answer the door bell. Every advertisement for female help you see in the paper begins "Wanted an experienced girl." If you haven't experience they don't want you.

A state commission has been investigating the conditions under which women have to struggle for a living in the State of New York. The investigations were conducted in department stores, candy, paper box, and shirt making industries. It included 5,800 establishments employing over four hundred thousand people. This commission originally only investigated the safety of workers as regards fire. "But," said Professor Wollston, professor of sociology at the College of the City of New York, "we soon learned that workers were exposed to other equally serious hazards. It is possible not only to kill workers outright but to wear them out. This may be done, not only by unsanitary conditions but by insufficient wages. It is not sufficient to guarantee a young girl a model factory to work in, if her work does not pay her enough to live decently." When you girls in the country hear about girls getting six dollars a week in department stores you must remember those are the theoretical and not the actual earnings. Many girls are laid off during the slack summer months, and it's a lucky girl indeed who gets from seven to nine months' work a year. That brings the wonderful six dollars down to four. Then there are fines for being late, breakages and mistakes. Employes are too often forced to belong to mutual benefit associations and that makes another hole in their pitiful purses. In the great collar making district of Troy, N. Y. it is customary in the shirt factories for the employers to charge the sewing women for the use of machines and thread. Some concerns even charge them for water. It is well for you to bear in mind that if any of you boys go into the candy making industries in the State of New York, it will take you thirty years before you can earn fifteen dollars a week. If any of you girls want to enter a candy factory it will take you just twenty years before you can earn ten dollars a week. It's a long way to Tipperary—I mean to independence isn't it? The worst part of this whole wretched business is that there is no certainty about employment. A number of New York department stores employ fifty-six thousand people in the busy months, but in the slack summer season they only employ thirty thousand. That means that twenty-six thousand people every year are turned onto the streets by a few stores, the majority of them without a cent in their pockets, to hunt work and face starvation. "In eleven department stores," says Professor Wollston, "we found that forty-three thousand people had been hired and fired in the same year." I know it will take more than I can do to convince young people who have the city craze, to stay at home, but perhaps if I let some of these girls tell you of the wretched, hard, drab lives they lead it may impress you more deeply than anything I could say. Listen to this one: "I sleep three in a bed with the landlady's children, then too I help her with the housework. I never spend more than twenty cents for dinner. How can I when I haven't the price? I'm covered that's about all you can say for my clothes. I do without break-

The First Breakfast

"This is how I like it"

You can have your husband say this not only at your first breakfast together, but morning after morning.

If you should discover that every woman in your town used the same coffee, you would never rest until you had tried it.

A great many more women than live in your town are using Arbuckles' Coffee. In millions of homes throughout the country, it is considered necessary to make breakfast complete. So rapidly has its sale increased, so popular has it become, that today more of it is sold than any other packaged coffee.

Big value and how it is possible

You will find Arbuckles' Coffee an honest coffee at an honest price. It's big value—bigger than any coffee value you have ever before been able to secure—is made possible by the buying power of the greatest coffee merchants in the world. It is because of their big resources, their equipment, and their economical methods of importation, roasting and handling coffees that you are able to get such a good coffee at such a small price.

This low price would be impossible if Arbuckles' Coffee were bought and sold in a small way instead of in millions of pounds.

In its low price, you get the benefit of this tremendous demand.

Don't let another day go by until you try Arbuckles'. Get a package from your grocer today—either the whole bean or the ground. Notice the smiles of satisfaction at the breakfast table. Give your family the enjoyment of drinking the coffee that is, by far, the most popular in America.

Make your coffee earn lovely gifts for you

Foundation of the First American Breed of Fowls

WE all like to see what we call beauty and symmetry in our fowls and other farm animals, but the practical breeder should learn to understand what form of symmetry is best adapted to and associated with the purpose which he has in view. A study of the characters of different distinct breeds of farm animals shows us that different forms and characteristics depend upon varied qualities and powers, and that certain forms colors and proportions become so well fixed that a bird that does not strongly resemble the true type of its breed is rejected from the breeder's list or breeding stock. The breeder having ascertained as much as possible by the study of his animal's ancestry through pedigrees and records, next seeks to understand further qualities by the study of individual conformations and characteristics; and finally, as opportunity offers, studies his breeding animals by their own records and by their offspring, thus coming in due time to know his animals most completely.

The beginner is usually convinced that two perfect-looking creatures of any sort or kind will produce their like, but unfortunately such is not the case. A bird's ancestors have almost more influence on its progeny than the individuality of the bird itself. For that reason it is necessary to know the characteristics of the ancestral progenitors of the bird that you desire to cultivate, so that the side of reverted heredity can be recognized at once, and intelligently combated by the next season's mating.

Plymouth Rocks were the first American creation in poultry to achieve any public recognition. Years and years ago there was in New England a common fowl, often referred to in the early poultry literature as "the hawk-colored hen."

The birds are gray, with rather red wings and many black feathers. It is said that they were even faintly, but indistinctly, barred on neck and saddle. They had single combs and clear shanks, and often weighed from five to six pounds. A few progressive farmers, wishing to improve the laying quality of their hens, following the old-time theory of like begetting like, selected the best birds at their disposal and mated them, and in time their descendants became known as the "Dominick fowls," an improvement on the old hawk-colored birds but still not satisfactory to this group of utilitarians. Brahmas, Cochins and Langshans, which were at that time being imported to a limited extent, were too slow and heavy to fill their ideal; Leghorns and Minorcas too light, excitable and difficult to control within a limited space. Besides, the cold New England winters were not conducive to the Mediterranean bird's productiveness. So a Mr. Clark, who had some Black Cochins, which had been imported by Mr. Giles, and a Mr. Spalding who kept the hawk-colored fowls, tried the effect of mating Cochin pullets with a hawk rooster. The results were cockerels resembling their sire, but with more visible black markings. Pullets were principally black, only a few resembling the male bird, and even these were much darker in color than the sire. This mating was (on the authority of veteran poultrymen like D. A. Upham of Winsonville, Conn., and the Rev. D. D. Bishop) the foundation of the first American breed of fowls. Mr. Upham procured two of the lighter pullets and a cockerel, and for two or three years he strove to improve the markings and general type; then in 1869, showed them at Worcester, Mass., under the name of Plymouth Rocks—a name which Dr. Bennett of Plymouth, Mass. had given to some birds which he had manufactured prior to 1850, by crossing Cochin Chinas, Dorkings, Malays, and Wild Indian. According to report, these birds were not at all like the present Rocks, and were in 1869 extinct, so Mr. Upham was at liberty to adopt the name without trenching upon any one's prerogative. The birds shown by Mr. Upham created quite a sensation, not only from their appropriate size for table use and laying qualities, but for being the first real American creation they aroused and gratified national pride, and every fancier tried to buy birds or eggs. Some wiseacres, guessing how the new breed had been created, set about developing strains of their own. Some used Brahmas, others Cochins, to gain size. Even now one occasionally hears of the Ramsdell, Gilman, Essex, and May strains of Barred Plymouth Rocks. The amateur who tried to breed Plymouth Rocks twenty years ago, had to fight the legacies bestowed by the original mixed ancestry. Sometimes it would be the feathered legs of the Cochin; sometimes the black coloring or red feathers and poor breeding of the old-time hawk bird. Years of careful breeding have almost entirely eliminated such troubles in up-to-date stock. But allow a flock of originally good birds to mate indiscriminately for three or four seasons, and they will gradually lose their special Rock individuality, and reproduce in blurred form, many traits of the birds from which they sprung. To militate such tendencies and keep up the standard, the amateur must be thoroughly familiar with the form and color of the ideal Barred Plymouth Rock type. The body should be deep, yet well-rounded, the neck and tail curving upward from the back, which is broad and of medium length. Body deep, broad and full; thighs, large and of medium length; shanks, stout and smooth, well-shaped, and of medium length. Head, medium, carried high. Adult males should weigh nine and one half pounds; cockerels, eight pounds; hens, seven and one half; pullets, six and one half. Color; beak, shanks and feet yellow. Females sometimes have a few slight dark stripes at the base of bill, which are not essential, but are not counted as blemishes. Eyes, deep bay; face, comb, wattles and ear-lobes, bright red. General carriage should be alert, trig and businesslike.

Now for the most exacting and difficult item—plumage. The standard of perfection described it up to 1903 as bluish-gray with narrow parallel lines of dark blue, just stopping short of positive black. In the later issues it has been changed to grayish-white, each feather crossed by regular, narrow, parallel, sharply-defined dark bars, that stop short of positive black, free from shafting of brownish tinge or metallic sheen.

The light and dark bars to be nearly equal width, and to extend throughout the length of the feathers in all sections of the fowl. (On females, feathers having narrow, dark tips are preferred). The combination of overlapping feathers to give the plumage a bluish appearance.

Correspondence

R. F. D.—Will you please tell me what is the matter with my canary. It was taken sick all at once, and just acted stupid and laid in the bottom of the cage, and kicked one foot all the time. It would not eat, and for a whole week I pried its mouth open with a toothpick and fed it. It is a little better now, but I would like to know what to do for it if it should happen again.

A.—I can't think what ailed the little creature, unless it had rheumatism. Give it some green vegetable every day, and omit all such luxuries as sugar and cake. Put one drop of tincture of iron in the drinking water for a week.

W. M. W.—Will you please tell me what ails little chicks when their droppings dry on their rectum, and they bloat and soon die. Would appreciate any advice. I gave some Castor oil, which seemed to help.

A.—Probably the little chicks had bowel trouble. Read answer to G. A. A. in May number about feeding, and be careful that the chicks don't get chilled.

E. S.—How many mating pairs of pigeons could be kept in a pen made of wire, 12x18x10? (2) Are pigeons profitable if kept in runs? (3) Have been told that the manure is not ill-smelling and foul. Is this true? (4) Are homers the best pigeons to raise? (5) How much do squabs generally weigh, a pound?

A.—Please refer to the first part of the department in May number for answer to your questions one and two. (3) I don't think the manure is as objectionable as that of hens. (4) Yes, homers are the best pigeons to keep when the purpose is to raise squabs for market. (5) Good homer squab weigh from twelve to twenty ounces when four weeks old.

E. J.—I am young and just starting in to raise chickens, but in reading about your incubator instructions I have never found these questions and I would like to know, do you keep your chicks in incubator all the time day and night, or do you let them out to get fresh air while eating? I have a hot air brooder (a nice one), and when they get out they seem to get chilled and soon go to dying. Is it necessary to have a hygrometer and what should the moisture register while the eggs are hatching? In hatching I find several dead in the shells but still I am satisfied but in about three days they go to dying with the white diarrohea and every morning I will find from six to ten matted together and sometimes it goes through the entire flock of little chicks. I have almost all full blooded barred rock chickens and roosters not akin, all in healthy condition.

A.—You ask if I keep my chicks in the incubator all the time. No, about the end of the twenty-second day, all the eggs that have not hatched and all the broken shells are removed and the chicks left in the machine until the following morning when they are transferred to the brooder which has been heated up to 95 under the Hover. For twenty-four hours they are kept in the Hover compartment and fed in that until they are forty-eight hours old. If your brooder is of the box type with only one compartment it should be placed in a warm room during the cold weather to prevent the chicks getting chilled when they get out from under the Hover to exercise and eat. The hygrometer is quite an assistance to the amateur but not absolutely necessary. For the last twelve hours of incubation the moisture should register sixty degrees. I think the trouble with your chicks comes from want of sufficient heat and possibly indiscreet feeding. Bowel trouble and pasting up at the vent is not always white diarrohea.

F. A. H.—I have a pet hen. Last fall she seemed to be afflicted with indigestion and a lameness in one foot which seemed to be internal. She had been hurt in no way. All winter I have kept her in a box in the house, putting her out of doors in pleasant weather in some sunny spot for exercise. I feed her alternately, cracked corn and wheat and a feed mash and bread and milk. She has very clean water, food and surroundings. She has had an occasional dose of Castor oil. Her lameness seems slightly improved. What can be the cause of it?

A.—The lameness was probably caused by liver trouble. Having only one bird it is almost impossible not to overfeed her, especially as you keep her confined in a box most of the time. No doubt the Castor oil helped her. You had better give her the freedom of a yard or garden and don't give her more than a tablespoonful of wheat or oats at night. She will find enough insects and green food during the day.

B. F.—I am thinking about raising pigeons. Will you kindly tell me which breed is best and also send the addresses of a few houses that buy pigeon squabs? I would prefer the houses would be in Pittsburg.

A.—Homers are the best pigeons to keep for raising market squab. Write to two or three of the commission merchants of Pittsburgh and ask them to send you their weekly list of prices.

M. G. G.—I have read the correspondence of the poultry farming in your paper, that alone is worth the price of the paper. This spring I am going to go in business keeping turkeys. Will you advise me if the young ones will live shut up in a pen and how is the best way to raise them, to let them run loose or shut them up? The neighbors say that I cannot raise them because they die if they get wet or they will have the diarrhea if I feed them meat. Also tell me where I can get a book telling about the care of turkeys.

A.—Poultry farming in March COMFORT will give you the information you desire.

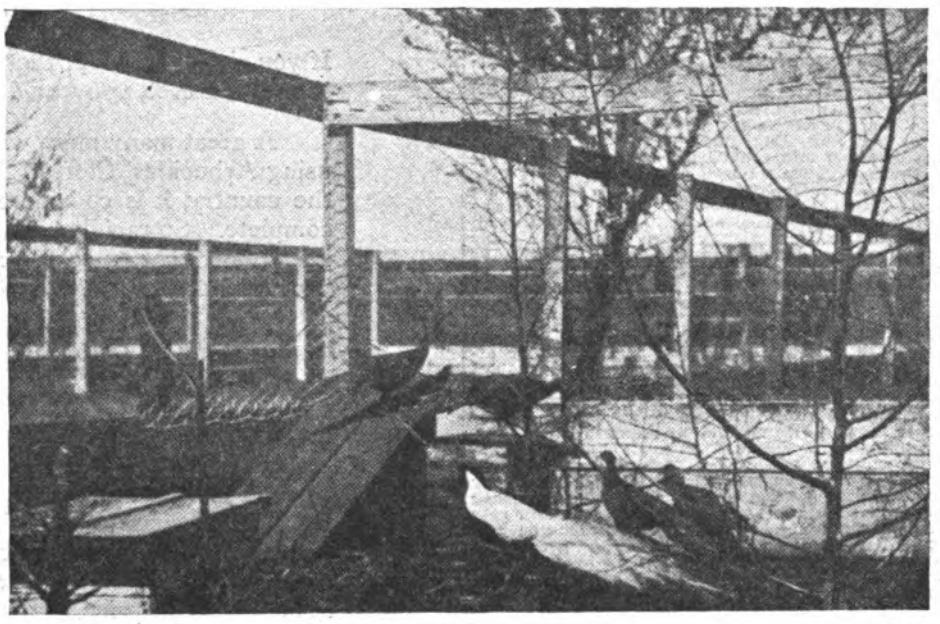
D. H.—I ordered some S. C. Brown Leghorns about six weeks ago. They seemed to do well until two weeks ago, I noticed one hen drooping around and the scallops of her comb were dark. I began to give her poultry powders, Castor oil and turpentine in her food. I had to put this down her throat as she would not eat. Her craw seemed full and in a week she died. We cut into her craw and it was full of corn and stuff that I knew she did not eat in the few days she was sick. Her comb was of a dark color when she died. In a day or two, two more got sick in the same way; one of them died and the other is almost dead. It seems that this last one's throat might be sore as she makes a gargling noise when I give her water. I have noticed water running out of her mouth and it smells sour. Will you please tell me what you think is wrong with my chicken and send me a remedy as soon as possible?

A.—Did you give the birds green vegetable food? The change in the color of the comb and the sour water running from the beak of the second hen suggests acute indigestion but you have not told me how you feed so I cannot suggest a remedy. When you buy new stock it is advisable to ask how they have been fed as a sudden change of food is likely to cause trouble, or if you cannot make such inquiry, give them very little to eat for the first few days and then gradually build up on a good laying ration.

M. H.—Will you please tell me where I can get some Homer Pigeons. How many must I start with? How large a house must I have for eight pigeons? Where can I get hemp seed to plant this spring and buy to feed the pigeons?

A.—You could of course make a start with four pairs of pigeons and by keeping the squab for the first six months and buying a few fresh birds you would be able to work up a good flock. You can always tell how large a pigeon house should be by counting up the nest boxes. Each pair of birds must have two nest boxes one foot square and the boxes can be arranged in rows one above the other or around the side walls of the house. Hemp seed to plant can be bought at any large seed store and for feeding it can be got at most feed stores.

D. L.—I am asking you for advice regarding our chickens, they have been dying so lately with swollen eyes; and pus forms in them.



A.—I fear your birds have canker or a roup cold and as all forms of cold are likely to develop into roup which is a contagious disease, it is advisable to remove all ailing birds from the chicken-house and place them in coops which can be placed in some protective situation at a distance from other poultry. Give the sick birds a tablespoonful of Castor oil or sweet oil and then spray their eyes, nostrils and throats with some good antiseptic, peroxide of hydrogen, about a teaspoonful to about a pint of water is good. I always use permanganate of potassium in preference to anything else, ten cents' worth goes such a long way. Dissolve one teaspoonful in one quart of water ready for use, then dilute one tablespoonful of the mixture with three of water, spray night and morning for a week and if the birds show no sign of recovery, don't waste any more time, have them killed and the bodies burned.

K. J.—I am interested in Indian Runner Ducks. Mine are about ten months old and have laid but very little. Do they lay at night, and where do they usually lay? Do they have a nest and what should I feed them? Should they have straw in their house? When they get sick what must I give them and how can I tell the drake from the duck?

A.—Ducks usually lay in the very early morning. Some ducks will make a nest, others will drop their eggs anywhere. The floor of the sleeping place should be kept covered with clean straw, leaves or meadow hay. When they make a nest it is usually in the corner or near the walls of a house and in the bedding on the floor. They are apt to cover their eggs with straw or leaves so it is advisable to be careful when going into the house or you may trample on them. If your ducks are properly housed and fed they won't get sick. The drakes always have two or three feathers which curl up in the tail so they are easily distinguished from the ducks.

E. S.—I have a bronze gobbler turkey ten months old and a hen turkey three years old. Will you kindly inform me if I can mate them for breeding successfully?

A.—Yes, they will mate and the eggs will be fertile and strong from such mating.

PHEASANT YARD SHOWING NESTS WHICH ARE ALSO USED AS SETTING AND BROOD COOPS.

J. M. W.—Being a subscriber to COMFORT I am requesting you to send me a recipe for an egg-preserver preparation which will keep eggs perfectly fresh for eight or ten months.

A.—Water glass is the best egg preserver; the eggs keep perfect. You can get it from any drug-store.

F. B.—I would like to know what is the matter with my hens. I have about seventy-five pure bred Plymouth Rocks. The first I noticed was little lumps on the side of the head around the eyes, then they looked like cold sores. One hen has them nearer the eyes; she was blind; the lids seemed to be closed with a thin scab. I greased them and they opened but the eyes looked dim. Their nose is dirty and they breathe hard. I found one with it near the mouth and there was a place in the corner inside that was hard and yellow. On the outside it was swollen a little and felt feverish. I greased it with carbolated vaseline. They have free range, the roosting place and laying places are separate. The henhouse is warm, I keep grit, oyster shells and sand for them and fresh water. Their combs are red, but they are not laying good. I cleaned the henhouse and painted the roosts with Lice Dip for they are lousy.

A.—The hens have canker. Read answer to D. L. You should treat the hens as well as the house, to banish the lice. Go into the chicken-house after dark at night, take the birds one by one from the perches and thoroughly dust them with a good insect powder, a flour dredger or an empty baking powder can with holes punched in the bottom of it is a good way to use the powder. Give them plenty of it, especially in the wings and in the fluffy feathers on the thighs and on the body, then place them carefully back on the roost, steadying the bird until it settles down so that it won't flutter or tumble about and shake the powder out of the feathers. Repeat every third night for two weeks, paint the roosts and nest boxes every day and you will soon get rid of the lice.

A. H.—Please advise me about the chicken business. Do you think there is any money in raising chickens for market? I live twelve miles from the city of Tulsa, have seventy white rock hens, but have been line breeding and they don't seem as large as they ought to be. Would some good roosters remedy this fault? Is there more in raising for market or selling eggs for setting, or selling day old chicks? People don't seem much interested in blooded chickens here. How could a person get people interested? I like your talks on poultry very much.

A.—There most certainly is money in chicks and eggs for market. Unless line breeding is very carefully managed it soon starts inbreeding and stock will run down in size and vigor. By all means get some new male birds. Unless you send birds to shows and win prizes and so gain reputation for your stock there is not very much chance of selling eggs at special prices for hatching, besides eggs for hatching are only in demand for a few weeks and a good market trade lasts the year round. The only way to interest people in thoroughbred stock is to show them and to advertise.

NOTE.—Correspondence has been so very heavy this month that it is impossible for me to answer all the letters in this issue.

The most imperative ones I will try to answer by mail and the others you will find in next month's COMFORT without fail.

fast and lunch, too, when I can. Food is the only thing I can cut down on. My teeth hurt me all the time but I haven't got the money to have them fixed, so I just let them keep on hurting. When I buy a pair of shoes I can't eat meat for weeks at a time. If I were to break down and be sick I guess it would be the poorhouse for me. I've been working twenty-five years and nineteen of them with the same firm. I was on the charities last year when I had typhoid. I hated that. Five dollars a week doesn't seem like much when I'm feeding thirty-nine thousand boxes to a machine a day, but when I don't get it at all it seems like a fortune. Gee! I don't even get to a moving picture show without lying awake nights planning how to make up that nickel. I do my washing nights, and I always walk to work. I'm so tired sometimes I'd love to ride, but I can't afford to waste the five cents. Sometimes I feel sick, but I just grit my teeth and go on. I can't afford to stop for anything. Five dollars a week won't get you much anywhere. Gee! but I feel sorry for the girls that haven't a 'steady.' If I had to buy all my own meals I'd never get along. I've been working since I was thirteen. I've never been anywhere or had any fun. Sure those were bum stockings I bought for ten cents. It doesn't pay really to buy cheap stuff, but when you've only got ten cents in your pocket what are you going to do if you need a pair of stockings? I drop in at my friend's just before dinner sometimes and then I get asked. I hate to do it and I feel awfully cheeky, but if I didn't I'd have to go on charity." Now there's the story of one girl, as told to the New York Factory Commission in her own words. It's shoes or food, one or the other, but never both. Another worker, a six-dollar-a-week clerk, stayed away from her work a week on account of sickness. General anæmia was the diagnosis the doctor made. No wonder she was bloodless, for it seems this girl never ate any breakfast, for she found this was the easiest meal for her to miss. She stated the situation thus: "You see I figured it all out. I paid two dollars for my room. That has to be met every week; then once a month twenty-five cents is taken out of my pay envelope for the store benefit fund. Then I've got to dress decently to keep my job. If my expenditure on clothes didn't average $1.25 a week they'd fire me sure, so what else can I economize on but food? I get so tired of the fifteen and twenty cent dinners that often I think I'd rather not eat at all, but what can I do when I haven't the price?"

Now if you think that the cities outside New York afford you country girls any better chance of making a living, you are mightily mistaken. There are sixty thousand women and girls, and this doesn't include houseworkers, employed in the cities of Missouri, and most of these are not earning enough to feed and clothe themselves. Numbers contract tuberculosis while at their work. Many girls who go to work when they are fourteen are wrecked physically at twenty-eight. Girls in candy factories start at four dollars a week and less. Even an envelope machine operator, alert and skilled, can only earn from six to seven dollars a week. A state legislative commission rooted out these facts and reported that: "Conditions in contract shops are deplorable, old buildings are used and sanitation is poor. Workers show the result of disease-breeding conditions." The commission found the average six dollar a week wage was utterly insufficient for the support of girl or woman. In Missouri, as in New York, eight dollars and a half was set as the lowest possible rate at which a woman could subsist and remain decent, healthy and efficient.

Now Ethel, I have given you an idea of what you and other girls will have to contend with if you come to the cities, and if I haven't told you enough I will add this little bit of information to clinch the matter, and if this does not make you cling to the old homestead nothing will. The Mayor of one of our very greatest Eastern cities recently gave out this statement to the press: "More than a year ago a manufacturer imported from other cities three hundred working girls. He promised them six dollars a week. When the girls arrived and began to work they found that for thirty weeks a dollar a week was held back to pay for their transportation. It cost each girl five dollars a week for board and lodging and that unable to live on the wages they received, one hundred and fifty took the 'easiest way,' while fifteen of the girls went insane." The easiest way means going into a white slave den or onto the street. I'm painting things just as they are and I'm not piling on the agony, and I don't want to use any words that will leave you in doubt as to my meaning. No one can be happy anywhere unless he has a full stomach. No one can long stand the torture of hunger without becoming a physical, mental or moral wreck. The city working girl has

Bicycle Tires $2.48 Each Smooth Tread
of Goodyear Quality $2.75 for Non-Skid

$2.75 Each for Non-Skid

No need to pay an average of $4.25 for tires when $2.48 buys the famous Goodyear-Akron, single tube—guaranteed. For here is a quality tire through and through. No better tire is built.

The price is so low because of enormous output and modern equipment. Here up to 10,000 pneumatic tires are produced daily. And we are content with small profit.

Goodyear-Akron Bicycle tires are made by the same experts that make Goodyear Automobile and Motorcycle tires, which hold top place in their fields. Tires made of lesser quality sell for less—but poor tires are not worth while. For only $2.48 you can get the world's best—a guaranteed tire of beauty, durability and service.

GOODYEAR AKRON

How To Get Them

The Smooth Tread, size 28 by 1½, costs you $2.48 per tire. The Non-Skid, sizes 28 by 1⅜, 1½ or 1⅝, at $2.75. Ask your dealer for them. If he hasn't them, and you insist, he will get them from our nearest branch. Remember this when you go to buy.

The Newly Planted Trees

GREAT care will have to be taken or some of the trees set out early in spring will die when the drought strikes them. This the tree planter is somewhat liable to forget. It is impossible to find time to carry water to all of the trees, unless a wheel slop barrel or tank is used, but mulching can easily be done and it is necessary and effective. Give the trees a thorough soaking first and then put on a mulch of straw, or strawy manure, and wet the mulch. This should have been done at the time of setting out the trees, but it may not be too late to save the trees if done now. It is most necessary as regards evergreens, but they need the mulch from the first. As to these beautiful trees, which should be far more common than they are about every farmhouse, we have learned a new "trick" which saves loss. The evergreen catches the wind with its heavy green boughs and when trying to get rooted is joggled or swayed about so that the roots tear away from the soil and a hollow space is left about the thick part of the root, underground. This is quite enough to prevent the tree from taking root and it has to be obviated by putting in a stake and tying the trunk of the tree thereto. This of course relates to evergreens four to six or more feet high. It is not necessary with little evergreens and these are the safer ones to set out, but they grow slowly and so one is tempted to set out a tree that is somewhat too large and therefore difficult to establish in its new place. There is little difficulty in getting small spruce to grow if they are set out early in spring and then cultivated like corn, on rich, moist, mellow soil. It is surprising to see how quickly they will form a hedge when so treated.

Surface Mulching

The other day we were talking with a farmer about corn cultivation and the drouth experienced in many districts last summer. He told us that he had always followed the old-fashioned, deep shoveling method of corn culture, having learned it from his father and he from his father until it had become a family tradition. When the drouth struck his district and the big green corn leaves started to droop and wilt and it became evident that the crop was in grave danger of death he happened to read about a new surface cultivating corn implement and at once went to town to look it over. The agent spoke of it so enthusiastically, quoting the success of neighbors who had given it a trial, that our friend bought one, took it home with him and got busy with it the next day. It stirred up a big dust in the field. Passing neighbors were puzzled to know what he was doing in the field raising that cloud of dust. The soil seemed devoid of a single drop of moisture and the job of cultivating under the circumstances was unpleasant and wearisome. Next day he got at it again and right along, whenever time could be spared, that surface mulch making tool was kept at work. Soon dust became much less annoying in the field and after a time the soil was actually found to be moist and mellow early in the morning and the corn stopped wilting at noon and by fall had made a real good growth and turned out to be a fine average crop, little if any the worse for the drouth. He told us that he simply would not have believed such a thing possible and that he never again would insult and abuse his corn crop by delving and destroying its roots, but would try to provide a deep, fine rich bed at seeding time and then keep the soil stirred to dust at the surface and the ground free from weeds satisfied that if this were done the crop would be insured. Discard that old-fashioned deep cultivating corn cultivator next season after it has been through the field once or twice, where such cutivation is found necessary, and then keep the surface cultivator busy long after ordinary "laying-by" time has passed.

The Best Time to Cut Timothy

Timothy, like clover, should be cut when in full bloom. Many farmers say cut when coming into the "second blossom," but since no plant blossoms twice in the same season this rule is a mistake. What they mean is, as we have stated above, when coming into full bloom. Some plants are earlier than the average of the field. These come into blossom first, and this is known by the farmers as the first blossom. A few days after this the rest of the field comes into blossom and this is known as the "second blossom." This is the time to cut timothy because the plants have their highest amount of protein and least amount of indigestible matter.

Some farmers object to cutting timothy for horses at this time because the pollen of the blossom makes the hay dusty. If they wait a few days the pollen will be shed and no dust appear in the cured hay. It is much better to cut earlier than later, as soon as the first blossoms appear and before the pollen has ripened. Though the plant does not then contain its largest amount of protein, a much larger portion of it is digestible than after the seeds have ripened. Timothy hay should be cured quickly and if possible put in the mow the same day as cut. Dew and rain destroy its fine flavor and quality and reduce its digestibility very much.

Making Clover Hay

The time to cut clover for hay is when the clover is in full bloom. Don't wait for the blossoms to turn but cut while they are a rich, beautiful red; then the plant is at its best. It contains a maximum amount of protein and is in its most digestible stage.

Clover hay should be cut, allowed to wilt—not dry—and then cocked up. If allowed to dry, the leaves and blossoms, which are the valuable part, will be broken off and lost. Clover hay will cure best in the cock and no part will be lost. The cocks should stand in the field to cure for two or three days. If there is danger of rain hay caps should be used. These are made of duck about four feet square with a wire hook in each corner to attach them to the hay.

The morning the hay is to be hauled in, the cap should be removed and the cocks turned bottom side up to the sun to dry out for an hour or two before hauling in.

Clover hay made in this way will not be dusty, but will come out of the mow green and sweet and a ton of it is is actually worth, in feeding value, two tons of Timothy hay. In the writer's own experience horses fed on clean clover hay are able to get along and do as well on half the grain as when fed on Timothy mixed or prairie hay.

Stacking Hay

Hay ought not to be stacked out but it often happens that there is either no room in the barn or the farm does not have a good place on it in which to store hay. It is then necessary to stack it out. Care should be taken to keep the center of the stack full and well tramped down; then, when the hay settles, the fibers will all slant downward. This will prevent the rain from running into the stack. A low center always lets the water in and spoils the hay.

Another precaution which should be taken is to rake the outside of the stack. This helps to make the stack rain proof. In order to hold the top on many farmers use heavy hangers to weight it down. This is a poor plan as the hangers settle the hay under them which makes holes that let water into the stack.

If the stack topples over to one side it should be shaped up without delay. No matter how careful the farmer may be, he will lose a considerable quantity of hay by stacking it out. A cheap hay shed can be built for a few dollars and will save its cost the first year.

Protecting Plants from Insects

The time of year is at hand when our plants are threatened by insects. Fortunately there are means of protecting them against these numerous enemies. For insects that actually eat the plant or any part of it poison can be effectively used. For insects that do not eat the plant but suck its sap a contact spray is the best means, but it is necessary for the spray to touch the body of every insect thus to be destroyed.

POISONS.—The usual poisons are Paris Green and arsenate of lead. These are sprayed or sprinkled over the plant in such a way as to cover it so that the chewing insects, such as beetles, bugs, caterpillars and leaf-eating worms will get it in their food as they eat the plant.

CONTACT SPRAYS.—Scale insects and lice are sap-suckers and must be treated with contact sprays. The best contact spray is kerosene emulsion made by dissolving one half pound of hard soap in one gallon of boiling water and mixing this thoroughly with two gallons of kerosene. Both should be churned together until a frothy mass is formed. This should then be diluted from ten to twenty-five times before applying. For all scale insects dilute only four times. For all lice with soft bodies a weaker solution should be used. Contact spraying must be very thoroughly done to prove effective. Strong kerosene emulsion may injure delicate plants.

INSECT SCREENS.—Against such insects as the cucumber beetle a screen will prove the best means of protection. Take a box about a foot square and knock the bottom and the cover out, then tack ordinary window screen on to cover the open top. The box should be about six inches high and may be made of six-inch fence boards. This screened box is then placed over the hill of cucumbers or squash and pressed down into the soil so that there is no room for the beetles to crawl under. As soon as the rough leaves get a good growth the screen may be removed since the beetles seldom eat the rough leaves. Some use a poison spray instead of the screened boxes and claim it is equally effective to protect the young plants.

Another method of protecting plants against cut worms is to melt the solder off old tin cans so that the seam will open and the bottom drop off. Then spread the can open at the seam and place it around the stem of the plant closing the seam and if necessary tying the opening shut with a string around the can so that the cut worms cannot crawl through. Heavy glazed paper may be used for this purpose in exactly the same way. This method will do for a small garden patch but is too expensive for a large field.

Climbing worms are prevented from crawling up young trees by winding the stems with a roll of cotton or burlap and tying it at the top so that it flares out at the bottom. The worms cannot get over this obstruction.

TRAP CROPS.—For large fields it is better to plant "trap crops." These are planted a few days earlier than the regular crop, between the rows or scattered over the field in such a way as not to interfere with the planting of the regular crop. Since these are first to appear the insects attack the trap crop first either by eating the crop or laying their eggs thereon. If the trap crop is covered with eggs the entire crop should be destroyed. If attacked by beetles it should be thoroughly poisoned which will have the effect of greatly reducing the number of insects before the regular crop appears.

Garden Suggestions for June

THE ONION BED.—The onion bed should be kept well cultivated throughout the month of June. The ground should be stirred after every rain. Onions make their best growth early in the season while the weather is cool and the ground full of moisture. The plants should be kept growing vigorously at this time so as to get their full size if possible before the dry hot season sets in.

LETTUCE.—For summer use a second sowing of lettuce should be made early in June. If left until late in the month or until July the weather will be too dry and hot for good growth. Lettuce needs cool, damp weather for producing best quality. Get the summer lettuce bed started this month if you want good lettuce.

THE ASPARAGUS BED.—The asparagus bed should not be cut after the end of the month. The weeds should be kept down, the ground fertilized, the plants cultivated and allowed to grow for the remainder of the season if good crops are expected next year. Late cutting is injurious to future crops.

THE STRAWBERRY BED.—As soon as the plants have ceased bearing the old bed should be plowed up if it has been bearing for two years. The new bed should have the best of care and cultivation and the runners should not be allowed to mass the row. Their ends should be nipped off and the runners turned around so that they lie parallel with the row, not across it. All weeds should be kept down. A new bed can be set from the young plants some time during the month of July. However, such setting requires the best of care and frequent watering during the dry hot weather if good results are to be expected.

CELERY.—June is the month in which to set out celery plants for winter use. The usual practise is to follow level cultivation methods in the growing of celery rather than to plant it in trenches as was formerly done. If self-blanching varieties are used and the ground is very rich and can be kept well-watered, good results are to be had by setting plants six to eight inches apart each way in a bed. The plants shade each other and the blanching takes care of itself. In level cultivation the plants are set in rows about four feet apart and the usual distance apart in the row. When blanching time comes the blanching is done either by using boards along the row held in place by stakes or dirt or by simply drawing the dirt up around the growing plants using care not to get any of it into the crown.

June the time for Renovating Old Strawberry Beds

It is not always necessary to reset a strawberry bed in order to renew it. As soon as the plants quit bearing the bed may be renovated as follows:

If the bed is small spade up strips through it about two and one half feet wide leaving strips of six or eight inches of the old plants. Then with a hoe thin out these old plants, cutting out all diseased ones and leaving only nice green healthy plants. All weeds and grass should be pulled out and the remaining plants given a chance. They will immediately put out runners and in a short time will cover over the space where the old plants were turned under with the spade. It is usually desirable to keep the spaces open between the rows. The runners should be trained in to lie parallel to the rows. Since weeds come on rapidly at this time careful cultivation is necessary throughout the remainder of the season. This, however, is also the case with a newly set bed.

In the case of a large patch a quick way is to plow under the plants between the rows that you wish to leave. This can best be done with an old-fashioned single or double shovel cultivator. It takes far less time to renovate an old strawberry bed than it does to set a new one. The renovated bed will bear the next season and give a good crop while the newly set bed must be left for one season before it comes into active bearing. As a rule it is a better practise to set out new beds than to renovate old ones because this insures a rotation of crops with all its attendant advantages. It is often desirable, however, on small plots, to keep the old strawberry bed in the same place as long as it can be made to produce a crop. Renovation by the methods described above will enable one to do this.

Tainted Milk

A man wrote us the other day that his cow was giving strong tasting milk that also had an unpleasant odor and he wanted to know what was wrong with the cow and what should be done for her. Investigation showed that the cow was innocent, and the man guilty. Fresh, warm milk very readily absorbs bad smells and so may also become strong tasting on that account. It is the fat in the milk that has the absorptive powers. This may be better understood when it is stated that perfumes, by the old manufacturing process, are absorbed from the petals of flowers by placing them between sheets of fat-covered glass and setting them in the sun. The fat afterward is dissolved by ether and the perfume preserved. Knowing this about fat in milk it is necessary to keep the stable free from bad smells at milking time and also to keep the cow from eating any strong tasting feed, such as old cabbage or old roots. It was bad smells in a poorly ventilated, dirty stable that caused the strong tasting milk in the case we have referred to and to further illustrate the matter we can state that we know of a case where the owner of a large herd of dairy cows supplying new milk to city customers painted the inside of the stable, in front of the cows with a carbolic paint, thinking it would protect them against disease prevalent at the time. Next day the customers put in a unanimous complaint that the milk had a bad taste. It had absorbed the smell of carbolic acid from the paint. This should be remembered in using strong smelling disinfectants. It is better to use those that have no smell, such as corrosive sublimate, followed by free use of fresh made lime wash, when a strong disinfectant is needed after an outbreak of contagious disease. When absorption of smells is out of the question a sample of the milk of each cow should be saved in a separate bottle to determine which cow, from disease of the udder, is contaminating the milk. One cow may do this and the sooner she is isolated the better.

The Questions and Answers constitute one of the most valuable features of this department and we urge our farmer subscribers to read all of them carefully each month, as you will find that they contain much useful information and advice on practical problems that are troubling you as well as those who have asked the questions. Cut them out and paste them into a scrapbook for future reference. This will save you the trouble of writing us and will avoid delay in getting your answer when you need advice on these same matters. We are glad to receive inquiries from our subscribers and to advise them on all matters pertaining to farming, but it is hardly reasonable to expect us to waste valuable space in answering the same questions month after month for the benefit of those who need not have asked the questions if they had read and remembered the answers which we had previously printed.

Questions and Answers

BARREN APPLE TREES.—Can you tell me why my two apple trees do not bear? They were planted in my back yard five years ago. MRS. J. F. O., Chicago, Ill.

A.—The apple trees may be worthless seedlings, but if not they should bear if you remove sod from around the trunks for a space of six feet, dig the surface of the soil, manure it well and see that the trees have water in dry times. They should have sun and plenty of air. If that is impossible in the location bearing may not occur. It would be well to have the trees properly pruned by an expert some time next season, before sap starts to run. Do your trees blossom? And do the bees visit the blooms? If they blossom and then blight the trouble may be lack of bees to distribute the pollen. Bees perform an important function in fertilizing the blossoms and where there are no bees fruit trees are likely not to fruit well.

SUDAN GRASS.—Can you give me any information as to how to sow Sudan grass seed? At what time of year? Does it live over winter or does it have to be sown each year? H. R. P., Young Harris, Ga.

A.—Write to the United States Department of Agriculture for Bureau of Plant Industry Circular No. 125, Sudan grass, by C. V. Piper, the only publication on this subject of which the writer has knowledge. Should get bulletin free. It is a comparatively new plant but one of great promise for the South.

MILDEW ON GOOSEBERRIES AND GRAPE VINES.—Can you tell me what causes mildew on my gooseberry bushes and grape vines? What can I do to prevent it? MRS. J. F. R., Licking, Mo.

A.—Grape and gooseberry mildews are caused by a fungous growth from spores too small to be seen with the naked eye. Sprinkle with powdered sulphur or spray with Bordeaux mixture to control this pest.

BUGS DESTROY CUCUMBERS AND PUMPKINS.—All my pumpkin and cucumber vines were destroyed last year by oblong, flat, silver colored bugs that eat the pumpkins and cucumbers when they are small, and the vines also. I found them sitting in large bunches. They would kill a full-grown vine in three days. About here they are known by various names, oil bugs, carrion bugs, stinging bugs and turpentine bugs, and they have a very bad smell. I would like to know what to do to save my vines this season.

M. M. P., Gage, Okla.

A.—No, from your description it is impossible for us to tell the kind of bug. You describe the tarnished plant bug, a brassy brown insect, but this bug does not eat the plant but rather sucks its juices. For all chewing insects use a poison as described in another place in this paper. If these bugs eat the vines use a poison spray, but if they only suck the sap from the vines or leaves use the contact spray.

TO GET RID OF WIRE GRASS.—What is the best way to rid my land of wire grass? Also what kind of fertilizer is good for sweet and Irish potatoes?

MRS. M. P., Beeming, D. C.

A.—Deep plowing and thorough and frequent cultivation are the best remedies. A heavy growth of hemp or any quick growing crop which produces dense shade wil help to kill out grass and other weeds. A fertilizer rich in potash and containing considerable phosphoric acid is good for both sweet and Irish potatoes. Potash fertilizer is exceedingly difficult to get this year on account of the European War. See article on Potash Fertilizers in a former number of COMFORT.

POTATOES THAT RUN ALL TO VINES.—My potatoes produce plenty of vines but no potatoes. I would like to know the cause and the remedy.

MRS. F. M., Burlington, Iowa.

A.—It is probable that your soil is too rich in nitrogen which has a tendency to produce a heavy growth of vines. Try planting an early variety,—like Early Rose or Early Ohio, and fertilize with wood ashes or some other potash fertilizer, which will help to develop the tubers. Since the European war, however, it is almost impossible to buy potash, which comes from Germany. Wood ashes contain the potash.

WHERE TO GET INSTRUCTION IN GRAFTING.—Can you give me any information on grafting cherry, apple and plum trees, also about top grafting.

C. B., Zieglerville, Pa.

A.—For various methods of grafting and top working trees see any good text book on this subject, such as Bailey's Nursery Book, by Macmillan Book Co., New York City.

CALVES KILLED BY WRONG FEED.—In March I lost two beautiful calves, one two and one half months old and the other seven weeks old. When the first calf was one month old I began feeding him cottonseed meal, a little at first and increased it until I fed him nearly half a pint in a half gallon of milk. As my husband thought that was too much I cut down on the cottonseed meal about three weeks before the calf died. The younger calf I never fed so much cottonseed meal. All the while both calves were running in the wheat field. On Saturday morning (March 20) I fed the two calves as usual. The older one did not eat well and seemed not to be hungry, and that evening we found him dead. I stopped feeding cottonseed meal to the other and at feeding time, Monday night he seemed all right, but was dead Tuesday morning. Monday was a bleak day and it snowed some, and the calf was out in the wheat field most of the day. Was it the cottonseed meal or the wheat, or what that killed these calves? My husband thinks it was the meal but I believe it was the wheat. MRS. P. H., Bedford City, Va.

A.—Young calves should not go on green wheat, nor should cottonseed meal be fed in quantity. The combination killed the calves. You probably fed too much milk at too long intervals. The calves would do well

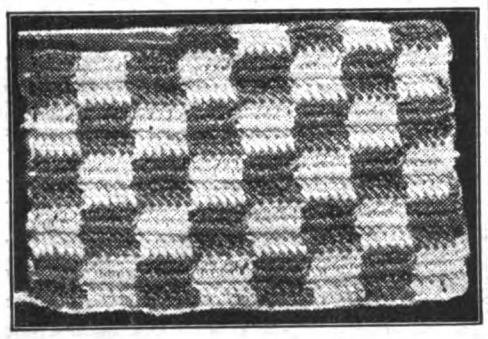
Terms Used in Crochet



Ch. st., chain stitch, simply a series of loops or stitches each drawn with the hook through the preceding one; s. c., single crochet, having a loop on hook, insert hook in work as indicated, draw loop through thread over, and draw through both loops; d. c., double crochet, thread over hook, insert hook in work, draw loop through, thread over draw through two loops, thread over, draw through two loops; tr. c., treble crochet, thread over hook twice, then work off as in double crochet, there being three groups of two loops to work off instead of two; h. tr., half treble, same as tr. c., only work off two loops, thread over and then through three loops; d. tr., double treble crochet, thread over three times, hook through work, thread over and draw through one loop, giving five on hook, thread over and work off by twos; sl. st., slip stitch, insert hook in work, draw loop through work and loop on hook at the same time; p., picot, a picot is formed on a chain by catching back in the fourth st., or as indicated and working a sl. st. r. st., roll stitch, throw the thread over the needle as many times as indicated, insert hook in the work, thread over, pull through coil or roll, thread over, draw through the one loop on hook. The roll when completed is straight, with a thread the length of roll along its side. The length or size of a roll is regulated by the number of times the thread is thrown over; o., over, thread over hook the number of times indicated; k. st., knot stitch, draw out loop about one quarter inch, catch thread and pull through, then put the hook between the drawn loop and the thread just pulled through, catch the thread, draw through these two stitches to form the knot; blk., block, a st. in each of a given number of sts., preceded and followed by a space; sp., space, a space is formed by making a chain of 3 or 4 sts. and omitting the same number of sts. in preceding row; sk., skip, to miss or omit number of stitches indicated in preceding row; p. c., padding cord; * stars mean that the directions given between them should be repeated as indicated before proceeding.

Handmade Accessories

Girdles, Ribbons and Necklace for the Summer Girl.

Crocheted Girdles of Two Colors.

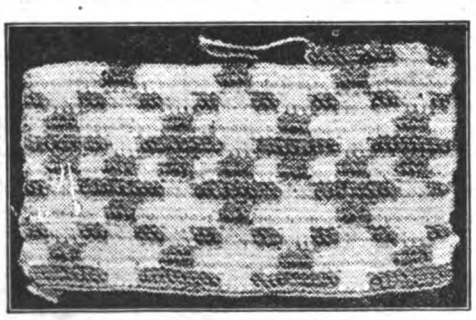
TO work in alternate colors is easy after you learn to keep your threads from twisting around each other, by placing a spool on each side of you and watching carefully you can easily learn to do it. When you have made the number of stitches in one color and wish to take up the next color, you simply use this second color in making the last loop of stitch in first color and work over the thread that you do not use. This makes the first stitch all of one color and not mixed. At the ends when turning take both threads through the last loop of the stitch and then drop one color and work over it.

PINK AND WHITE GIRDLE. FIG. 1.

These girdles should be made to fit the waist and fastened with snaps and a slash of the crochet made to pass under and over the fastening and this pinned down with a fancy pin or a crochet pin and the ends worked to a point, left square, or gathered up, and then a tassel added. Or such an ornament as is illustrated in Fig 5 made of the two colors used in the girdle makes a pretty and appropriate finish.

These pretty and popular belts of various colors should be made of rather coarse crochet cotton of a soft mercerized finish. A steel crochet hook of suitable size will be preferable and in doing the work, one should take up both loops of each stitch so as not to form a ribbed appearance, as the color design shows up much better in this way.

Handsome Striped Girdles



As brilliant and unusual color combinations are still worn these bright girdles are seen on both light and dark dresses.

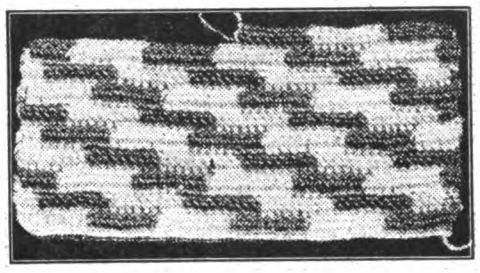
This color scheme is particularly attractive, if care is used in selecting good shades of the color given.

Crimson, yellow, bright or pencil blue, grass green, black and white.

In making this girdle it will be most effective to take up the back loop only so as to form a rib. 2 rows on 1 rib of crimson, 1 row of green, 1 row of yellow, this makes 1 rib; all ends and knots made by the joining of the colors should be pulled through to the wrong side as the work proceeds.

Remember that 2 rows will be given as 1 rib, while 1 row of course only forms half a rib.

YELLOW AND WHITE. FIG 2.



4 ribs of crimson, 1 rib of blue, 1 row of crimson, 2 rows of yellow, 1 row of green, 1 rib of green, 1 rib of blue, 3 ribs of green, one rib of yellow, 1 row of green, 1 rib of green, 1 rib of blue, 3 ribs of green, 1 rib of yellow, 1 rib of blue, 1 row white, 2 rows of crimson, 1 row of yellow, 1 row of blue, 1 rib of yellow, 1 row of green, 2 ribs of yellow, 1 row of blue, 1 row of yellow, 1 rib of crimson, 2 ribs of white, 1 row of crimson, 1 row of yellow, 1 row of green, 1 row of blue, 7 ribs of crimson, 1 rib of yellow, 3 ribs of crimson, 1 row of black, 1 row of white, 1 rib of crimson 3 rows of yellow, 1 rib of blue, 1 row of crimson, 1 rib of yellow, 3 rows of green, 1 row of yellow, 6 rows of blue, 1 row of yellow, 1 rib of green, 1 row of yellow, 3 rows of blue, 1 row of yellow, 2 ribs of crimson, 1 rib white, 1 rib black, 7 ribs white. Repeat the order of colors from the beginning.

The first or checkerboard design here shown is made of white and pink luster cotton and is about three and one half inches wide.

Directions for Girdle. Fig 1.

With pink make chain 51 stitches.

1st row.—1 d. c. in the 4th ch. from needle, 1 d. c. in each of the next 4 chs. This makes group of 6 d. c., counting the turning ch. as 1 double. Though the last loop of the 6th d. c., draw a loop of white and make 6 white d. c. in next 6 sts., working over the pink thread, which should be held just above the original row of chain sts. Transfer after finishing the white group as directed and again make 6 pink d. c. Continue in this way until 8 groups of the alternating colors have been started.

2nd row.—Draw the two colors through the last loop of the last double, ch. 3, using the color of the last group, make 1 d. c. on each d. c. transfer to color of the next block and make 1 d. c. on each d. c. Work across the row in this way making 6 d. c. on 6 d. c., using the same colors as in first row.

Repeat this row, simply alternating the blocks, as shown.

Girdle Design. Fig. 2.

This is very pretty of yellow and white.

With yellow make ch. 55 stitches.

1st row.—1 d. c. in 4th ch., 9 d. c. in next 9 sts., transfer and make 4 d. c. in next 4 sts., then 10 yellow d. c., 4 white d. c., 10 yellow d. c., 4 white d. c., 10 yellow d. c.

Always turn at the end of each row with a ch. 3 and count this as 1 double, then make the first double into the second double of previous row, and at the end of each row always work the last double into the top of the ch. 3, this makes an even edge. All rows begin and end in this way, so hereafter only the number of doubles in their color and order will be given.

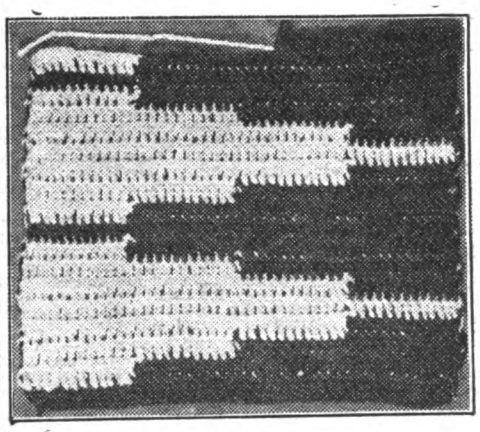
2nd row.—3 white d. c., 4 yellow d. c., 10 white d. c., 4 yellow d. c., 10 white d. c., 4 yellow d. c., 10 white d. c., 4 yellow d. c., 3 white.

3rd row.—3 yellow d. c., * 4 white d. c., 3 yellow d. c., repeat from * to * 6 times, and this row will contain 8 groups of 3 yellow and 7 of 4 white.

4th row.—10 white d. c., 4 yellow d. c., repeat twice and finish with 10 white d. c.

5th row.—3 yellow d. c., 4 white d. c., 10 yellow d. c., repeat from * to * twice, 4 white d. c., 3 yellow d. c.

6th row.—3 white d. c., 4 yellow d. c., repeat 6 times, 3 white d. c.



7th row.—10 yellow d. c., 4 white d. c., 10 yellow d. c., * repeat from * to * twice.

Repeat whole from the 2nd row until desired length.

Girdle Design. Fig. 3.

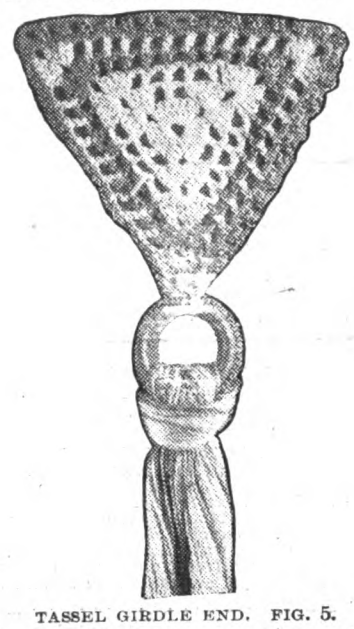
manner, beginning on the 4th ch. from needle as before.

1st row.—9 white d. c., 9 green d. c., 9 white d. c., 9 green d. c., 9 white d. c., 9 green d. c.

2nd row.—6 white d. c., 9 green d. c., 9 white d. c., 9 green d. c., 9 white d. c., 9 green d. c., 3 white d. c.

3rd row.—6 green d. c., 9 white d. c., 9 green d. c., 9 white d. c., 9 green d. c., 9 white d. c., 3 green d. c. Repeat from 1st row only transpose the colors, green for white and white for green thus, the 4th row would be same as 1st row only beginning with 9 green, then 9 white, etc.



5th row.—Begin with 6 white and then 9 green. It is very easy as one is working the colors in a stair like pattern across the width.

Girdle Design. Fig. 4

In this the colors are massed together so as to make a somewhat bolder pattern which was effectively worked out in this example in two shades of blue. Two shades of other colors or black and white would be equally as pretty; of the darker make ch. 51 sts. Turn and beginning in 4th ch. make 1st row.—48 dark d. c.

2nd row.—12 light d. c., 36 dark d. c.

TASSEL GIRDLE END. FIG. 5.

3rd row.—24 dark d. c., 24 light. d. c.

4th row.—36 light d. c., 12 dark d. c.

5th row.—48 light d. c.

Repeat from 2nd row, using light for dark and dark for light.

Tassel for Girdle End

Begin with ch. 6, joined in a ring.

1st round.—Ch. 3, 6 d. c. in ring, ch. 2, 7 d. c., in ring., ch. 2, 7 d. c. in ring, ch. 2, join on top of ch. 3.

2nd round.—Ch. 5 (double in center of 7 doubles, ch. 2, 1 d. c. in last of seven doubles 8 d. c., in corner space with ch. 3, in center of shell; 1 d. c. in first d. c. of 7 doubles, ch. 2) repeat this around and join the shell to the 3rd st. of ch. 5.

3rd round.—Ch. 5, d. c., in d. c., * (ch. 2 and double) * repeat from * to * twice, shell in corner as before. Two chain spaces between and shell on shell all around.

4th and 5th rounds are made in the same way the fourth being a different color.

For the tassel use both colors and wind over a 5-inch cardboard 40 or 50 times; knot this en a crochet covered ring as shown and fasten to the triangle.

A row of picots and singles may be added to triangle for a finish if desired

Tango Necklace

By Mrs. A. O. L. Wertman.

This handsome design is made of roll stitch or relief crochet full directions of which will be found in the explanation of stitches in the first column.

As the cord can be adjusted and held in place by the slide this necklace makes a very pretty finish for a V-shaped dress or waist.

TANGO NECKLACE.

No. 5 D. M. C. cordonette and steel crochet hook which slants to a good hook and will carry the thread easily are the only materials required.

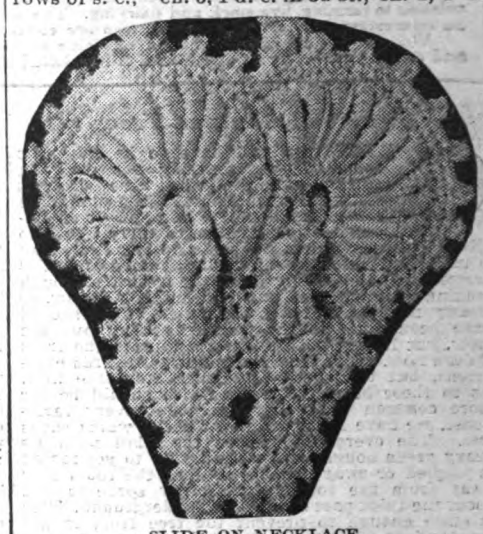
Begin with the fringe of a tassel; ch. 3, a roll st. o. 5 in the first ch. st; (again ch. 3 and a r. st., o. 5, in the first of this ch. 3) repeat this until 14 rolls in length, then make a slip stitch into the very first chain st. made, this is one fringe. Repeat from the beginning until you have 5 fringes made, then cut thread leaving a little end.

Now make the ball, ch. 6, join in a ring. In this tiny ring work 6 singles then fasten the fringe by bringing up a loop through the top where the thread is cut, make a single through the ring, pull the thread from the fringe through the ring and work it in with the next 5 singles which fills the ring. Now work 2 singles in each st. 12 times; then 80 singles without increase. Stuff with cotton and draw up by skipping singles until closed. For the chain of rolls begin at closing of ball and ch. 5, now 3 r. sts., o. 10, in closing of ball, * take out needle and slide under the 5th chain and draw last loop through; this bunches the rolls. Chain 5 and again 3 rolls made down where the first and last rolls are joined. Repeat from * until the chain is a yard long. Fasten off neatly. Next make the slide and run the chain through before making the tassel for other end.

For the slide take a lead pencil and wind thread around it 5 times, work in 4 d. c., wind for a ring again with the last loop on needle and needle on pencil also, work 4 d. c. in this ring; again make the same. You have a triangle of rings. Now fill the outside of these rings with d. c. At the last joining turn on wrong side and make ch. 12 and sl. st., in the joining again ch. 12 and sl. st. in same place. This is for the two large petals. Turn on right side and make graduated stitches under the ch. 12, begin with 1 s. c., 1 h. d. c., 1 d. c., 1 tr. c., 2 d. tr. c., then graduated roll sts., 2 roll, o. 10, 3 o. 15, 6 o. 20, 3 o. 15, 2 o. 10, 2 d. tr. c., 1 tr. c., 1 d. c., 1 h. d. c., and 1 s. c. Do the same on the next ch. 12. Now work s. c. all around the 3 rings and around the petals to the place where they lap over each other, pass over and work s. c. on next petal to the rings. There begin again with s. c. and make a ch. 3, picot at every 3rd s. c.

Bring the chain through a small ring from the wrong side up, then down through petal, and up through next petal and down through next ring. Finish this end with a tassel, to match the other.

Crocheted Corset Cover Ribbons



These pretty little handmade ribbons have much to commend them as they are easily made, very inexpensive and wash well besides adding an extra touch of daintiness to lingerie. For materials select either silk or any soft finish mercerized crochet cotton and suitable hook.

The simplest ribbon which can be crocheted, one can make very rapidly in this way.

Make a ch. 3, join by sl. st., into the first ch., now draw out loop on the needle until it is about one-quarter inch long, thread over, insert hook in ring formed by ch. 3, draw out loop, repeat until there are 5 loops on needle, thread over, draw loop through all, make ch. 3, join in ring and repeat until the length required.

Another very effective pattern consists of solid blocks with crossed open spaces between. Such a ribbon takes more time, but if made well will give good wear.

For this use fine cotton and hook. Begin with ch. 6, turn, 5 s. c. in 5 sts. of ch. (first allowing for the turning) ch. 1, turn and make 4 rows of s. c., * ch. 5, 1 d. c. in 3d st., ch. 2, 1 d.

SLIDE ON NECKLACE.

c. in 5th st. Repeat from * ch. 1, turn, 5 rows s. c., (making ch. 1 at end of each row before turning.) Repeat from * until cord is desired length, ending with a plain space as at the beginning.

Another pattern which is made in the length is also open and pretty. For this make a ch. of 45 inches, turn and make 1 s. c. in each ch., ch. 3, turn, 11 d. c. in first 11 stitches, * ch. 2, 1 d. c. in the third st. Repeat from * until last 12 stitches are reached; then make 12 d. c., ch. 1, turn, 1 d. c. on each d. c., 2 d c. in each space.

Roses for Ribbon Ends

Ch. 7, join by sl. st. to first ch., 12 s. c. in ring, ch. 6, 1 d. in 2 d. st., * ch. 3, 1 d. c. in 2 d.

RELIEF CROCHET RIBBON.

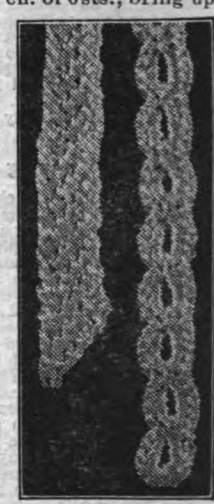
st.* repeat between stars until there are 6 holes. Over each ch. 3 make 1 s. c. and 7 d. c. Make a row of loops, catching between petals just made, at the back with a ch. 4 in each loop. Fill these loops with 1 s. c., 9 d. c., 1 s. c.

Turn rose and make a row of loops at back of inner row of petals, ch. of 3 in each loop, fill with 1 s. c., 7 d. c., 1 s. c. Attach roses to the ends by means of a small cord made of a chain one inch long, s. c. up one side and down the other.

The ribbons here illustrated are a little more work, but are new and especially attractive.

The first one shown is made of shells composed of roll stitches, and is made in the width. Each ribbon should be about one and one half yards long.

Relief Crochet Ribbon



Begin with ch. 5, a shell of roll sts. o. 10 into the first ch. (Detail of r. st., o. 10. Wind the silk 10 times over the needle, bring up a loop through first ch. st., thread over and draw through the coil on needle, thread over and draw through the one loop on needle. Repeat this 5 times for a shell.)

2nd row.—Ch. 5, now an open shell of a d. c., ch. 2, a d. c., ch. 2, a d. c., ch. 2, and a d. c. made in the center of roll shell. A tr. c., under the ch. 5 on edge.

3rd row.—Ch. 5, a roll shell made as before in the center space of the open shell, a tr. c., under ch. 5, on edge. Repeat the 2nd and 3rd row until as long as desired. Finish the ends with crochet rings made by winding the silk 10 times over forefinger, slip off and fill full of s. c. Sew one on the end, and run the ribbon through the beading and then sew on the other ring.

Ribbon Designs. Fig. 6 and 7.

For this design Fig. 6, which is a closely made ribbon begin with a ch. of 6 sts., bring up a loop on the needle from each stitch so you have 6 loops on the needle, * (thread over needle and draw through two loops *) repeat from * to * to the end.

RIBBON DESIGNS. FIG. 6 AND 7.

2nd row.—Ch. 1, take up 5 loops on the needle through the stitches standing vertical, leaving the last one. Adding a ch. st. and leaving one makes the ribbon a little bias. Repeat for the length desired and finish with rings as before described.

For the open work ribbon No. 7 begin by making ch. 7 and join to the first with a sl. st., * 5 s. c. in the ring; this fills it half full; ch. 7, take out needle and insert it in the last s. c. draw the loop through here to make a ring. Repeat from * for a yard and a half or longer, then make 5 more s. c. in last ring, and 5 more in every unfinished ring. Fasten off and finish the ends.

Edna's Secret Marriage

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

John Weston, old and wealthy, knowing he has but a few days to live, sends for Richard Burdon, his lawyer. Remembering a debt he owes Charles More, he revokes a will in favor of a younger brother's child and makes a new one, disposing of the lives and hearts of two, and leaves it for Mr. Burdon to carry out his bequests. The banker is found dead the next morning. Sixteen years later Sir Cyril More with wealth squandered and no aim in life, finds himself at Lucerne, Switzerland, where he meets Edna Weston, who has only Aunt Martha. Edna inquires of Sir Cyril if he knows Richard Burdon. Her father, on his death-bed charges her to go to him the first of the following September. Edna and her aunt board at the Pension, a Swiss boarding house and Sir Cyril leaves the Grand for the Pension Petre, where he gives his name to Edna and her aunt as Harold Payne. Seated in an arbor Cyril hears voices and recognizes Mr. Howley Jones, who admits being a chum of Cyril More, who has completely gone to the dogs, squandering all his money on Glitters. Edna listens and questions if he knows Sir Cyril and is it all true? He admits he has heard of him. Later Cyril meets Miss Glitters and requests her not to tell he is there. Passing on he sees Edna who has witnessed his greeting with Glitters.

A few days later, Aunt Martha, Edna, Sir Cyril and others go by train to the top of the Rigi. Returning, Cyril and Edna decide to walk down. A mist, preventing them from following the path, envelops them, and rather than have him leave her to find the path, she would rather die, Cyril clasps her in his arms, and she admits her love and promises to marry him. Without telling their secret, they go to a little Protestant church four hours' ride from Lucerne and are made one. Returning Edna realizes that Aunt Martha must be told. Coming to the Cathedral Edna recalls she has left her crepe shawl. Leaving her upon the Cathedral steps Cyril returns for it. Miss Glitters comes along and she remembers having seen Edna at the entrance of the Grand Hotel and knows she is waiting for the gentleman with whom she has seen her before. She tells Edna of his broken promises, shows her the face in the locket she wears, begs of her never to see him again and leaves her crushed with grief. Cyril returns and seeing the agony in Edna's face implores her to tell him the cause. She upbraids him for the wrong he has done. Filled with remorse he parts from her. She tries to call him back; it is too late.

CHAPTER XI.

READING THE WILL.

YES, most certainly Mr. Burdon was surprised. This was not at all what he had expected—so much did it differ, indeed, from his preconceived idea of the persons and situation, that he, the man of the law and the word, was slightly embarrassed.

He had been fully prepared to meet, and, if need be, cope with persons expectant of and grasping after "something to their advantage," but he was quite unprepared for the quiet, timid, elderly lady, and this equally quiet but modestly dignified girl.

But he was aware that Edward More's cynical gaze was dwelling on him, and made haste to recover his usual urbane self-possession.

He ensconced Mrs. Weston in the easiest of the easy-chairs, and placed the next best, with an air of profound respect and old-fashioned gallantry, for Edna, and then suggested refreshments, which were quietly declined.

"Pray let me urge a glass of sherry—dry sherry and a biscuit," he said, putting the decanter and its accompaniments on the table as he spoke, and making a little joke as he filled the glasses. "Dry sherry!—the proper beverage for such a dry place as a lawyer's office, my dear madam. Indeed, my dear young lady, you must allow me to insist upon your taking at least half a glass."

And he drew a small table to Edna's elbow, and placed the glass upon it. All this having given him and them time to compose themselves, Mr. Burdon relapsed from the man of gallantry into the man of law and business, and, resuming his seat, rustled his papers, glanced across at Edward More—who had watched his friend's efforts at hospitality with an unpleasantly sarcastic smile—and commenced his task.

"I need scarcely ask whether you arrived this morning?" he said, by way of prelude.

Aunt Martha, who was in an inward tremor, assented.

"Yes, yes," said Mr. Burdon, "in accordance with my dear friend's—your brother's—wish. Exactly. Yes, this is the first of September, and we are met here by the appointment of one whose wishes and instructions I trust, I sincerely trust, we may all be able to carry out."

As he spoke, he glanced with mingled curiosity and admiration at the pale face opposite him.

Edna's eyes, which had been fixed on him, dropped a little under his glance; she raised them again a moment afterward with an expression of wistful but patient attention. If Mr. Burdon had expected to hear her speak, he was disappointed.

"As you are aware, Mrs. Weston, we have met today to consider a deed, which, to all intents and purposes, is the will of this young lady's uncle, John Weston."

Aunt Martha looked up and nodded nervously.

"Yes, I think I knew that; but Edna knows nothing."

"Just so; that, I think, is exactly in accordance with her father's and her uncle's wish," said Mr. Burdon. "It is not for us to question the wisdom of that wish; it is our duty to respect it—in this case I think we have all done our duty," and he bowed slightly to Edna. "I may say for myself, that, until today, I was as ignorant of the motive that actuated your brothers in their desire for concealment—ignorant also of the purport of this deed—as you yourselves were."

Aunt Martha inclined her head again, and stroked Edna's hand, which she had, somehow or other, managed to smuggle into hers, nervously.

"My first duty," continued Mr. Burdon, "is to read, from beginning to end, this rather long document; but"—and he raised the deed from the table and turned the leaves over with a smile—"I am afraid if I do that without explaining its purport first, that it would not enlighten you much. The language of the law is not, I deeply regret to say, as plain and simple as we lawyers could wish it to be——"

Here Edward More, who had been nibbling and fidgeting at his nails, barked out a low, sharp laugh of sarcastic incredulity, which brought Edna's large, expressive eyes upon him with a look of startled surprise.

Mr. Burdon, not a whit put out by his friend's little commentary, smiled urbanely.

"Mr. More thinks that if there was nothing to explain in the law, there would be no need for lawyers, and considers me guilty of a little humbug. Well, well, perhaps I am. However, shall I explain it to you?"

He looked so directly at Edna that for the first time she spoke, but it was only a simple:

"Thank you."

Mr. Burdon turned round in his chair and took his leg upon his knee.

"I ought to begin, as they do on the stage, I think," he said, "with 'It was twenty years ago'—for it is quite like a romance; but I shall confine myself to a very meager outline of the matter, and your aunt"—and he smiled toward Mrs. Weston—"will furnish all the details from her own knowledge. It is just this, then: Your uncle, John Weston, my dear young lady, was an extremely wealthy man; he was also a very eccentric one, as the uncommon and extraordinary nature of this deed sufficiently proves. Some portion of this wealth he inherited, but the greater part of it he amassed during many years of hard toil. He was a merchant, a mine owner, a ship owner, and what is called a financier; he was, in fact, what is called a merchant prince—a man of extraordinary talent and acuteness, a man universally respected, and a man of vast—yes, vast influence. I don't suppose any man of his day had a greater number of friends, or more powerful ones. Nothing was too great for the scope of his mind, nothing too intricate for his extraordinarily acute business intellect. Persons of all grades, high and low, trusted him to an extent which nowadays seems incredible. It is not too much to say that for many years of his life he held the fortunes of a score of families in his hands, for he was a banker as well as a merchant, and traded with other people's capital as well as his own. You see, my dear young lady, that I have been tempted into a panegyric of your uncle; well, he was worthy of a higher tribute than any humble man like myself can pay. But to proceed—at a certain period of his career—when things were generally black and unpromising—when we had wars and rumors of wars, a great decline of trade, there came a general panic. Houses failed, fortunes were lost, everybody suspected everybody else, and John Weston even did not escape the general distrust and want of confidence. Nearly all the people who had hitherto reposed with the most absolute faith upon his honor and ability, suddenly grew cautious and distrustful, and—I am putting it into unbusiness-like and simple words—came upon him and demanded their money. Had they come one at a time, and gave him time, he could have met them with an easy mind and a full cash box, but unfortunately they came all at once—just as if your uncle had kept all their money in a strong box and could give it to them at any moment they wanted it—and he was unprepared. What happened, or what would have happened on any ordinary or anything but a most extraordinary case? The great, influential millionaire would have been ruined. It was a dreadful time! I remember it—I remember it!"

And Mr. Burdon rose under the excitement of the reminiscences, and walked to the fireplace, though there was no fire.

"I think I can see your uncle as he stood in his office—just as it might be here—tall and thin. He was very much like your father, Miss Weston—pale, but as cool and composed as—as—I am!" and Mr. Burdon rather inconsistently wiped the perspiration from his brow. "There was a crowd outside—a crowd of people clamoring for their money, and threatening to pull the house down; ah, and worse, if he didn't give it to them. The clerks were standing behind their desks white and trembling, expecting the great doors to give way every moment and let the gasping, anxious crowd in, to wreck the place. And there stood your uncle, as calm and composed as Napoleon himself might have been. I think I see him now!"

And Edna, listening with pale face and intent eyes, fancied that she also could see him.

"He had sent for me," continued Mr. Burdon, wiping his eyeglass mechanically, "but, of course, I could do nothing. 'Richard,' he said, 'you hear that crowd. Those are the voices of men and women who have trusted me with their money—some of them have confided their all to me. Up to this time I have dealt honestly with them, as they would testify if they were not frightened out of their sense of justice. If they would give me time I could pay them back—deposit and interest, to the uttermost farthing. They will not do so. I have sent for all the available money—I have realized all it is possible to do. I shall wait one hour longer, and then I shall declare the bank broken, and blow out my brains."

A low cry of pity and horror escaped Edna's lips.

Mr. Burdon made a gesture of sympathy, and hastened on.

"He looked at his watch as he spoke, and laid a pistol on the table before him, and then he sat down and waited, while the crowd got noisier and angrier. They were calling for him now, and threatening—well, well, half an hour passed, and I was about to call for assistance—for I was young to such scenes, and quite unable to cope singlehanded with such a calm, desperate man—when the door opened, and a tall, handsome-looking man came in. It was your uncle's old schoolfellow and best friend—Sir Charles More."

Edna looked up quickly at the certainly not noblelooking face of Mr. More in the room, and wondered breathlessly what was coming.

"I see him now," said Mr. Burdon, "straight as a dart, handsome as—as—all—almost as a woman, with golden hair and bright blue eyes, that were laughing—actually laughing, though the roar of the crowd was in his ears—a black bag was in one hand and his hat in the other; he tossed the hat on one side and hurried across the room. 'Hello, Jack!' he said. 'Here's a pretty kettle of fish! Why, anybody would think you were giving sovereigns away by the crowd of hungry fools outside. You didn't expect me! No! I'm just in time—landed at Southampton last night, and ran up to town posthaste.' All this, my dear young lady, in a breath. Your uncle could not get a word in, but at last he managed to stammer out—it was the first time his voice lost its firmness:

"'Charlie, the panic has touched me, and I'm ruined!'

"Sir Charles laughed outright; with a flushed face and a flashing eye: 'Ruined! Not you, Jack, while you've a friend left! "Ruined!" that word will never be tacked on to John Weston's name. Here, Mr. Burdon,' turning to me, 'have the goodness to call in some of the white-chokered clerks in the office—never could make out why you make the poor devils wear white chokers, as if they were parsons, Jack!—and tell 'em to count this out and give it to the hungry dogs outside, and by the time that's gone the people from the Bank of England will have sent some more for 'em,' and he took the bag and turned out a heap of Bank of England notes and rouleaus of gold."

Edna's face flushed, and her little hand tightened upon her aunt's.

"Your uncle gave a gasp as if he had been shot, then sank into his chair and covered his face with his hands. All his pluck went out of him in a moment, and he sobbed like a child."

And Mr. Burdon took out his large silk handkerchief, and blew his nose two or three times with a most suspicious vehemence, as the tears rolled slowly down Edna's cheek.

"He was as good as his word, Miss Edna; the cashiers paid out the money as fast as they could, and before it had gone a second lot came in, and a third after that; there was more than enough, for the idiots, when they found the bank was saved, paid the money back into it as fast as they drew it out, and instead of howling and cursing, clustered round the house cheering and hurrahing to such an extent, that your uncle had to go out and show himself, dragging Sir Charles by the hand, and calling to the people to look on the man who had saved their money and his honor."

Mr. Burdon drew a long breath, wiped his forehead, and looked round with an apologetic smile.

"I've allowed myself to be tempted into a long story," he said; "but I trust you will admit the temptation was strong. I won't do it again. Of course after this your uncle and Sir Charles became greater friends than ever. Your uncle was not a man to forget such a service, and was not at all satisfied with simply paying back to Sir Charles the money he had lent. He did more than that, he solemnly vowed that all his money should go to Sir Charles or his descendants. But this Sir Charles would not hear of. Your uncle had a younger brother to whom he was deeply attached, that younger brother had a daughter, a sweet-faced little girl—pardon me, Miss Weston—that little girl was yourself. Sir Charles very properly would not consent that he or his should gain by your loss, and your uncle, who was a determined man, was compelled to give up his generous intention in part. Only in part, for here comes the pith and substance of this remarkable deed."

Mr. Burton tapped the parchment impressively.

"Determined not to be wholly balked, your uncle hit upon a scheme by which he hoped to provide for you and enrich Sir Charles' descendant; that descendant was a nephew, a favorite of both Sir Charles and your uncle—a young man strikingly like Sir Charles in appearance—and—and"—here Mr. Burdon paused, and looked across at Edward More's face, which had assumed an angry scowl—"well, resembled him in the matter of a generous, careless, reckless disposition. This nephew is now Sir Cyril More——"

Edna started, and a sudden flush suffused her face; it was gone in a moment, but both the men had noticed it, and Edward More fell to biting his nails suspiciously.

To Edna the name had brought back, with a

Home Dressmaking Hints

Forecasts for Summer Fashions

By Geneva Gladding

GUIMPE dresses are such a boon and comfort to the busy mother, and those in suspender style are so easy to develop, so neat and attractive in appearance, and so practical because they launder easily.

The styles for grown-ups are reproduced in children's dresses. One sees skirts with two and three flounces, little smart apron effects in overskirt portions, over blouse styles, bolero waists, and girdle effects.

Tailored styles for women are strikingly smart this season, both in cloth, taffeta and wash materials.

Dainty lingerie frocks are made of fine embroidered voile, and combined with taffeta or satin.

Shirred effects on skirts, waists and sleeves are much in vogue. Very picturesque is the effect of a skirt with corded shirrings, puff sleeve and a dainty bolero waist.

Waists in guimpe style, combining taffeta in Pompadour or striped effects, and lace or net are most pleasing and effective.

Pattern Descriptions

ALL PATTERNS 10c. EACH
Unless Other Price Is Stated.

1297—Girls' Dress with Suspender Belt, and with sleeve in either of two lengths. This model is very attractive for combinations of material, and will make a delightfully cool and simple dress for warm weather. For embroidered crepe or voile, challie, lawn, dimity, or batiste, cashmere or taffeta, the design is very appropriate. The waist may be of crepe, crepe de chine, ratine, lawn, or batiste.

Cut in four sizes; six, eight, 10 and 12 years. It requires two and one eighth yards for the guimpe and two and three eighths yards for the dress of 27-inch material for a six-year size.

1283—A Practical Kitchen Apron. Every woman whether she has to do the work about the house or not, will find use for a simple, practical work apron, such as the one here pictured. The usual apron materials are suitable for reproduction, such as linen, gingham, holland and percale.

Cut in three sizes; small, medium and large. It requires five yards of 36-inch material for the medium size.

1287—Ladies' House Dress, with sleeve in either of two lengths. Dotted black-and-white percale is here shown, with trimming of white pique. This model will make a very desirable morning dress, and is equally attractive for business or "porch" wear.

Cut in six sizes; 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires five and one quarter yards of 44-inch material for a 36-inch size.

1095—Ladies' Dressing Sack or Kimono. The model is cut with body and sleeve in one. It is comfortable and pleasing. The style is good for batiste, cashmere, voile, crepe, organdie or silk.

Cut in three sizes; small, medium and large. It requires three yards of 36-inch material for a medium size.

1278—Ladies' House Dress with Sleeve in either of two lengths (with regulation or reversible closing) and normal or raised waistline. Percale, seersucker, gingham, chambrey, lawn, flannelette, cashmere, linen and linene, galatea and kindergarten cloth, are good for this style. The diagonal closing may be made from right to left in regulation style, or both fronts may be cut alike, and the closing reversed.

Cut in six sizes; 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires six and three eighths yards of 44-inch material for a 36-inch size.

1040—Ladies' Apron. One of the most practical features of an apron is the protection it affords. The design here shown has this good point and some others. It has deep arm openings, and is cut with sufficient fullness.

Cut in three sizes; small, medium and large. It requires four and one quarter yards of 36-inch material for a medium size.

1300—Ladies' Waist. This model shows exceptional style features and lends itself readily to combinations of lace and silk, embroidery and batiste, or to any of the trimmings now in vogue.

Cut in six sizes; 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires two and one half yards of 36-inch material for a 36-inch size.

1293—A Charming Group of Bonnets. For "little" girls there is nothing more attractive and becoming than a "love of a bonnet" and in the three styles here shown one will find new and attractive features. The models are all easy to develop, and will look equally well in lawn, mull, chiffon, batiste, crepe, silk, velvet, corduroy, poplin, repp or cloth.

Cut in three sizes; six months, one and two years. A one year size will require five eighths yard for No. one, of 30-inch material, one and one eighth yards for No. two of 20-inch material, and five eighths yard of 20-inch material for No. three.

1281—A New and Stylish Waist. This design is suitable for the new satins and crepes, for madras, linen, silk, poplin, batiste, crossbar muslin, and embroidered voile. The neck edge may have the new smart high collar, or the neat broad rolled one, that will be lovely with the short sleeves for warm days.

Cut in six sizes; 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires three and one quarter yards of 36-inch material for a 36-inch size.

1289—Ladies' Skirt in raised or normal waistline. Grenadine, in the new sand shades or in green or brown would be nice for this model. It is equally good for gabardine, serge, poplin, or voile, or for taffeta, linen or gingham.

Cut in six sizes; 22, 24, 26, 28, 30 and 32 inches waist measure. It will require three and seven eighths yards of 52-inch material for a 24-inch size.

1229—Ladies' Yoke Shirt in Raised or Normal Waistline. Gored skirts are among the newest designs, and are shown in flare and plaited styles. The model is suitable for silk, cloth or wash fabrics. It is lovely for linen, for ratine or gingham, and lends itself equally well to soft crepe, voile or poplin, as well as to broadcloth or serge.

Cut in six sizes; 22, 24, 26, 28, 30 and 32 inches waist measure. It requires five and one eighth yards of 44-inch material for a 24-inch size.

1001—Boys' Suit with Knickerbockers. This model has raglan sleeve portions that form a yoke over the fronts. The blouse is made with coat closing, and sailor collar. Suits of this fashion are fine for little boys, and are appropriate for Devonshire cloth, linen, drill, liene, pique, galatea, seersucker, percale, serge or gingham.

Cut in four sizes; three, four, five and six years. It requires three yards of 44-inch material for a five-year size.

1282—Girls' "Junior" Dress. This model is good for linen, poplin, repp, crepe, serge and cashmere. The blouse has straight semi-fitted lines, and may be made with sleeves in wrist or elbow length. The skirt is a three-piece model.

Cut in three sizes; 12, 14 and 16 years. It requires five and one quarter yards of 36-inch material for a 14-year size.

1296—Dress with or without Bolero for Misses and Small Women (with sleeve in either of two lengths.) This attractive model is lovely for embroidered voile or crepe, for lawn and dimity, for grenadine, challie, batiste, and other soft fabrics. The bolero, a new style feature, may be of contrasting material, and may be omitted, the collar being so arranged that it may be joined to waist or bolero.

Cut in four sizes; 14, 16, 17 and 18 years. It requires seven yards of 36-inch material for a 14-year size.

1302—Ladies' Four Gore Skirt, in raised or normal waistline. The lines of this model are becoming and graceful. It is cut with fashionable fullness, and will be easy to develop.

Cut in six sizes; 22, 24, 26, 28, 30 and 32 inches waist measure. It requires four yards of 44-inch material for a 24-inch size.

1263—Costume for Misses and Small Women. Grenadine in a new mauve shade is here shown with brocaded silk for sleeve and trimming. The style is unique in its lines and shows several new and pleasing features. Challie, poplin, voile, taffeta, crepe, batiste or lawn can be used for this model.

Cut in four sizes; 14, 16, 17 and 18 years. It requires six and one eighth yards of 36-inch material for a 16-year size.

1288—Girls' Dress with sleeve in either of two lengths. Plaid gingham in pretty brown, tan and green tones with facings of brown, was used to make this attractive dress. Percale, chambrey, linene, poplin, ratine or crepe are all good for this style.

Cut in four sizes; six, eight, 10 and 12 years. It requires three and one quarter yards of 44-inch material for an eight-year-size.

9921—Girls' Dress with Surplice Front and three-piece skirt. This model is simple in outline and easy to make. The design is suitable for poplin, crepe, seersucker, gingham, lawn, chambrey, voile, challie or cashmere.

Cut in four sizes; six, eight, 10 and 12 years. It requires four yards of 36-inch material for a 10-year size.

1032—A Dainty Frock for Mother's Girl. This design will certainly appeal to the home dressmaker. It is so easy to develop, and looks equally well in either style illustrated. The model is good for challie, lawn, voile, for silk, taffeta, messaline, and for the light weight woolen fabrics.

Cut in four sizes; six, eight, 10 and 12 years. It requires three and one quarter yards of 44-inch material for an eight-year size.

1280—Ladies' Kimono with Raglan sleeve. This design is nice for crepe, lawn, cashmere, challie, and albatross and will be likewise pleasing in flannelette, flannel or blanketings. The fullness at the waist may be unconfined, or gathered as illustrated.

Cut in three sizes; small, medium and large. It requires five and one quarter yards of 44-inch material for a medium size.

1290—Ladies' Waist with or without Yoke Facing, and with sleeve in either of two lengths. White butcher's linen was used for this design. It is splendid for all wash fabrics, for taffeta, poplin, albatross, serge or charmeuse.

Cut in six sizes; 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. Size 36 will require three yards of 44-inch material.

1295—A Simple Set of Drawers, Petticoat and Under Waist. Cambric, muslin, nainsook, long cloth, lawn or crepe may be used for the drawers and petticoat. If a strong, durable underwaist is wanted, drill or jean is best. The pattern includes all styles illustrated.

Cut in six sizes; two, four, six, eight, 10 and 12 years. The drawers require one and one half yard of 36-inch material, the petticoat requires two yards, and the underwaist one and one eighth yard for a 10-year size.

1286—A Stylish Youthful Model. Among the many and varied styles of this season, there seems none more comfortable and simple, than the blouse style here shown. It has the new full skirt, and new long sleeve. The neck may be finished with or without the "dickey."

Cut in four sizes; 14, 16, 17 and 18 years. It requires five and one eighth yards of 44-inch material for a 16-year size.

1275—Girls' Apron. This style is good for gingham, percale, lawn, cambric or sateen. It will serve as well for a cool and comfortable play dress as for an apron.

Cut in six sizes; four, six, eight, 10, 12 and 14 years. It requires two and one half yards of 36-inch material for a 10-year size.

1303—Pattern for Refooting Stockings. This pattern gives two different soles, both equally good and shaped so that the seams will not cause any discomfort to the wearer, as darned stockings sometimes do. Expensive silk stockings may be made to do duty twice as long when refooted in this way.

Cut in three sizes; eight, nine and 10 inches.

1016—Girls' Dress with short or long sleeve. The model is good for voile, ratine, rice cloth, chambrey, galatea, serge or silk. The skirt is a three-piece model with plaits in front and at the sides.

Cut in four sizes; six, eight, 10 and 12 years. It requires three and one quarter yards of 44-inch material for an eight-year size.

1276—A Comfortable Nightgown and boudoir cap. Cambric, lawn, dimity, crepe, cross-bar muslin, and silk are very appropriate for this style of gown, and the same materials, also net and lace could be used for the cap. Both styles are easy to develop.

Cut in three sizes; small, medium and large. It requires four and one quarter yards of 36-inch material for the gown, and one yard for the cap for a medium size.

Childhood Adventures on a Texas Ranch

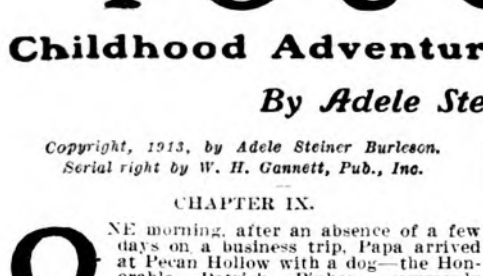
CHAPTER IX.



ONE morning, after an absence of a few days on a business trip, Papa arrived at Pecan Hollow with a dog—the Honorable Patrick Pinkey, commonly called Pat.

As Toughey and the children ran out to the farm-wagon, in which the final stage of the journey had been made, ready with an effusive greeting for the newcomer, Papa stopped them with the explantion that Pat was no ordinary dog and that his acquaintance must be made with more form and caution. He then invited Pat to come down from the wagon, which was done with a cheerful alacrity more suggestive of extreme god nature than of crossness. Notwithstanding this encouraging sign, his introduction to the family, which followed, was in every respect cold though polite. They, all, were instructed to treat him with civility while avoiding any approach to familiarity. His history and peculiarities were fully gone into and everyone cautioned to keep them well in mind.

It seems that Pat's former master had, for sometime past, been leading a double life! He passed the morning sympathizing with his neighbors because of the mysterious disappearance of their pet cats and dogs, and at night he dug surrepitious graves in his own garden for these same pets. It may have been fear of a similar fate for Pat, at the hands of a long suffering neighborhood, or fear that suspicion would fasten upon himself as Pat's confederate, or it may even have been the misery of an awakened conscience that determined Pat's master to part with him, but at all events that determination was finally reached.

Pat himself was not only aware of his master's unlawful practises, but was the principal party to them. In every dog and cat, Pat saw a mortal foe and he could not rest until his enemy had bitten the dust. Thus it was that his instinct for blood, carefully cultivated in generations of his ancestors, became his undoing and lost him, early in his career, a comfortable home. On the parting day Pat's master fastened a collar around his neck and leading him by a chain walked down to the principal street in the town.

Pat's future was uncertain. No provision had been made for him, because his departure had wisely been made a hasty one. But fortune had not deserted him! Fate brought in his direction a man, whose wife and children, located in the country for the summer, wanted a dog. This man was Papa, and in a few minutes Pat's chain was in his hand. While the dog's gentleness towards children had been guaranteed, it was evident from the outset that the tale of Pat's midnight assassinations had made an impression on his new master. There was respect, even deference, in his attitude towards the dog, and during the trip to the Plantation, where Pat was to act as watchdog, it cannot be truthfully recorded that his new master congratulated himself upon his acquisition. In fact, there were times when he seriously questioned his own discretion in having accepted the gift, and only excused himself upon the ground that the transaction had been hurried and—on his part if not on his friend's—totally unconsidered.

These facts impressed upon the family, Pat, under Papa's supervision, was now carefully fed, gently patted by each child, and then tied to the corner post of the front gallery. For it was believed that Pat's watch dog qualities would best be developed by keeping him chained. Such a course was to imbue him with a sense of responsibility for the safety of the family and enable him to distinguish between friends and those midnight prowlers and daylight tramps who ever haunted Mamma's imagination.

During the progress of this experiment, Pat had no occasion to complain of loneliness or neglect. All that favor could accomplish to mitigate the dullness of his confinement was done. Attentions were heaped upon him until it seemed that he must exhaust himself in his desire to acknowledge them. For whenever Pat wagged his tail it shook his whole body.

At the creak of an approaching wagon or the sound of a horse's hoofs the family would quickly collect about Pat to watch the effect upon him of the intrusion. Upon such occasions he would look questioningly from one to the other, as if unwilling to pursue the line of action expected of him, could he but understand it. It gradually became clear, however, that nothing could overcome Pat's extreme amiability towards all humankind. Even when afforded opportunity to exercise the savage prerogatives of a watch dog, he would accept the caress of a distinctly disreputable stranger as graciously as he did that of Mamma herself. It was only when a dog accompanied the visitor or passerby that Pat's conduct became individual and independent of all command, threat, or cajolery. Trembling violently, with alternate growls and cries, he would struggle fiercely, dragging at his chain and all but choking himself in the endeavor to get at his enemy.

After two weeks, it was agreed that, as a watch-dog, Pat was a miserable failure. The six shooter was again hung prominently over the mantelpiece, a warning to such stragglers, who, having discovered Pat's deficiencies as a protector might still, in Papa's absence, wish to impose on the household.

Freed from the restraint of the chain, Pat proved himself a delightful companion for the children. He played hide and seek with them in the cotton field, routed every chaparral cock that ventured within the enclosure, and early and late stalked the wary old crows without ever getting near one. He chased rabbits and squirrels on the hillside and even rusty-back lizards when no larger game offered. By sight alone was Pat able to follow the chase, for he was neither quick of ear nor of scent.

Given his liberty, however, Pat rapidly became a great responsibility. With every member of the family constituted a special policeman for both his protection and restraint, he was frequently able to elude the entire corps and depredate so horribly, that a day without its panic rarely passed. His chain, supposed to be kept in its especial place, ready for emergencies, seemed to vanish at the crucial moment. At such times, Pat, with the swift, stealthy movement of a panther, without a sound, and deaf to all entreaty, would creep upon the dog of either friend or stranger, passing through the Plantation, and dispatch him with a deadly, albeit discreditable skill. It was plain that some proper field must be discovered for the exercise of Pat's energies. After some deliberation it was agreed that he be permitted to accompany the family to the pastures, be instructed in the art of driving cattle and thus afforded a legitimate occupation.

Every precaution was taken to make the trial a success. On the way he was carefully guarded, the children on horseback acting as scouts while Mamma and Toughey in the surrey served as bodyguard to prevent any encounter with the enemy. The enemy was, of course, in every instance, a dog whose life in each case was saved only by unceremoniously bundling Pat into the surrey where he was kept blind and deaf until the danger was past. But Pat's projected association with the cattle could not be brought about. Disappointment again waited on the anxious family. From the beginning it was plain that no fraternal feeling could ever be established between Pat and a cow. After a few skirmishes it was impossible to make him quit his position just behind the horse's heels under the surrey, where the horn of an angry cow could not reach him.

Despondency began to settle down over the household. To keep Pat forever chained was, for many reasons, out of the question, and yet even a restricted freedom brought in its train such troubles, such uneasy relations with the people at the Camp, such expensive settlements with strangers, that it was only granted with fear and trembling. As the result of a serious family council it was determined to give Pat one more opportunity to establish for himself a useful position in the country.

To this end, Tom and Jerry, the famous "cat" hunters, were secured, with the understanding that they be returned to the Carters whole and undamaged.

On a beautiful September night, when the earth was moist from recent rains, the plan by which Pat was to be made into a respectable dog-citizen was put into execution. In company with the hounds, but with a safe distance between them, and at the end of his chain, Pat went forth on his first hunt. A good trail was quickly struck, the hounds gave tongue, and it was not long before they had run down their quarry in a little thicket of live oak. Pat watched the proceedings with every indication of intense interest, scanning the faces about him as though for a sign to take his turn at the game. The critical moment for testing Pat's understanding of the chase and its attendant duties, pleasures and honors had arrived! With a soft "sic him," and a gentle motion towards the struggling polecat, the chain was detached and Pat was left to the guidance of his instincts. These led him, swiftly, unerringly, not to the cat but to the throat of old Tom, which he seized in a grip that bespoke an iron jaw backed by an iron resolution. With a fence rail they finally succeeded in prying the animals apart and loaded with the scorn and obliquy of the indignant children Pat was led home, a dejected prisoner. His case appeared a hopeless one. The outlook was indeed gloomy. His sole accomplishment appeared to be that he could commit murder, unmitigated by discretion.

With the summer drawing to a close, Pat's disposition became a problem. The Manager stiffened at the bare mention of his name. It was impossible to give him away. To take him to the city meant continual attendance at the Police Court for the master or the Lethal Chamber for Pat.

The morning of their departure came and found the problem still unsolved. Unconscious of the worry he occasioned his only friends, Pat, invested with collar and chain, arrived at the railway station, and along with the trunks was placed in the baggage car. Chance was again to control his fate.

The Boy went with them to the train. He must go to Washington to college when he got older, they all said, and they promised to come often to the Plantation for the summer.

"Good by, Kids," was his parting with the children.

When he wrung Toughey's hand he put his boyish young heart into it and said quite steadily and soberly:

"I'll see you again, Toughey." And the girl felt suddenly sorry that she must part with her young companion who had helped more than anyone else to make her summer a happy one.

Old Isum grumbled a little when they left, and told Len confidentially that "dey sho was his kine o' white fokes."

Then the train came and there was noise and confusion, and when it steamed ahead again, Toughey and the children found themselves looking through blurred windows at an indistinct landscape, and Mamma was discovered sighing and wondering if such another summer was ever to be theirs again.

Even Nurse admitted that it might have been worse.

* * * * * * * * * *

At the first long stop made by the train, Papa went forward to look after Pat. He was met halfway by an embarrased but indignant baggage man. Pat had killed a fine Irish setter taken on at the last station. Mechanically Pat's master put his hand in his pocket, an action that instantly mollified the baggage man and made him turn hopefully to the setter's owner who at that moment approached. Possessed of the high color and loud clothes, universally supposed to characterize the sporting man, this individual's red face turned to purple when the situation was explained to him. Sputtering with rage, he strode towards the car as if to promptly avenge himself for the loss of his fine dog, when Pat presented himself at the open door.

There he stood, a perfect speciman of an English Terrier, his fine blood showing in every line and feature. The man stopped abruptly and gazed, as though fascinated, at the picture before him. He made his livelihood by the purchase and sale of dogs Pat was a gem of his kind. Already in his heart the sport adored him. Turning to Mr. Deering he said with a kind of hurried bashfulness that, a fair exchange being no robbery, he would take Pat to idemnify himself for the loss of his own dog. That is, he added slowly, with his eyes on the ground and fear in his heart, if the gentleman preferred to settle that way. Mr. Deering seized his hand and wrung it. "Thank you," he said simply. The man stared. "Promise me to treat him kindly!" added Pat's recent owner, stopped in his hasty retreat to his coach by a momentary twinge of remorse for having parted so lightly with an old friend.

"Kindly," echoed the man in amazement, "Sure," he said, and then added under his breath, "Sure, for he's the King of dogs."

cooking utensils, cameras, typewriters, automobiles and many of our too little appreciated luxuries of this day.

Every one should read Milton's "Paradise Lost," Thomas Gray's "Elegy Written In a Churchyard," Alfred Tennyson's "Enoch Arden," Ella Wheeler Wilcox's "Maurine" and her "This, too, Shall Pass Away," Longfellow's "Psalm of Life," and Elizabeth Barrett Browning's "Aurora Leigh."

Letters From a Self-made Merchant to His Son contain sound business advice tersely and wittily told.

And some of the novels of G. B. McCutcheon show a good phase of fashionable society.

There are a great many books that not to know is such ignorance to the reader and the conversationalist as well, that all of us should become acquainted with them. In this class are "Gulliver's Travels," "Swiss Family Robinson," "Robinson Crusoe," "Wandering Jew," "Tom Brown," "Vanity Fair" and "Mr. Dooley."

"The Deemster," by Hall Caine, vividly portrays what an uncontrolled temper can lead to; a gem is "The Wife" in Washington Irving's Sketch Book.

"Vanity Fair" is a masterpiece of Wm. M. Thackeray's brain and A. J. Evan's shows us the possibility of the conversion of a worldly man by a good woman.

I have heard of persons that know too much, but think it impossible to corner information, and believe there is a love of knowledge for itself alone, though we all meet folks who, having learned a little, seem to think by airing that modicum, they are impressing their hearers by their wisdom.

If you, dear reader, will cultivate the acquaintance of many of the foregoing literary folks, and others unknown to me, and have for help, a dictionary, an encyclopedia and an atlas of the world, or at least, a map of the United States (which can often be obtained at slight cost from some railroad), if you can crowd some of this into even the busiest life, you need not have the blues, you can avoid the company of those uncongenial to you, for, you know, if you do not like a book, you can shut it up, and you will be astonished at your own improvement and development. Also, I advocate keeping a book for jotting down sentences or thoughts that you want to make your own. There is some helpful thought lurking in most unexpected places for the discerning eye, and a little wisdom is good for you and me. MRS. ABIGAIL G. SCHILLER.

CENTER, ALA.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND COMFORT SISTERS:

Oftentimes I have read the interesting letters of the sisters, and been tempted to write, but I always supposed the letters to Mrs. Wilkinson were so numerous, that perhaps mine would be in the way.

I will take for my subject, "A Beautiful Life." A beautiful life, is a life of truthfulness, of nobility of the soul and a life of devotion to our loved ones here, and to the God who created us. Life indeed, is but a river running with rapidity onward, onward, ever on. It runs, alas! too swiftly. We have not one moment in which to hesitate, or to spend in idleness. We should place a guard on our every-day actions, as we travel along Life's journey. Just one unkind word can never be recalled. How much better if it had never been spoken. Kind words! How little they cost, and yet how dear! Soft words soften the soul. Words harsh and angry, kindle the fire of wrath and vengeance; cold words chill while hot ones create ire and discord. There are vain words, idle words, silly words, spiteful words and a multitude of others to guard against. By trying daily to imitate Him who had not where to lay His head can we live a beautiful life.

A crust of bread, a pitcher of water, a log cabin and perfect love, there is happiness for you, whether the day be dark or shining. It is the heart that makes the home, whether the eyes rest on a potato or a flower garden; the heart makes home precious, it is the only thing that can. Home is where the heart is.

The bitterest tears shed over graves are for words left unsaid, and for deeds left undone. "She never knew that I loved her." "He never knew what he was to me," and "I always meant to make more of our friendship." Such words are the poisoned arrows that cruel death shoots from the door of the sepulchre.

The woman who laughs heartily is a doctor without a diploma, her face in a sick room does more good than a bushel of powders or a gallon of bitter draughts. Sick hands go instinctively out to meet her grasp, while they turn involuntarily from the touch of the one who speaks in a groaning key. She laughs you out of your faults while you never dream of being offended with her, and you never know what a pleasant world you live in until she points out the sunny streaks on her pathway.

I am twenty-five years old, five feet and six inches tall.

I would be glad to receive cards or letters as I get very lonesome sometimes, but can't promise to answer all, unless stamps are enclosed.

With love and best wishes to Mrs. Wilkinson, Uncle Charlie and the COMFORT sisters, Your friend,

MISS MAUDE BLACK.

Miss Black. Unquestionably "home is where the heart is" and love is the ruling factor, but don't you think that the love of the average person of today lasts longer if fed with something more substantial than bread and water?

To be sure,

"A Book of Verses underneath the Bough,
A Jug of Wine, a loaf of Bread—and Thou
Beside me singing in the Wilderness—
Oh, Wilderness were Paradise enow!"

sounds lovely in theory, but I fear I am too practical to thoroughly appreciate it in everyday life. Do not misunderstand me and think that I am condemning love alone, and that I haven't a soul above things of the "earth earthy," for, in common with women of all time, I have my ideals and were I to advise anyone as to a choice between Mammon and Love, I'd say the latter for real happiness, though I still maintain that the happiness will be more lasting with a moderate amount of this world's goods.

The ideas or experience of anyone along this line will be gladly considered.—Ed.

DUNN, N. C.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

I have been silent for several years but, of course, have been gleaning all that was interesting and beneficial from the many good letters that appear in our Sisters' Corner. Perhaps some of you still remember me but I know many of you have been numbered in our corner since I first appeared in your midst.

I would like to have a chat with "Grandma" of Ind. She voiced my opinion in regard to controlling children. Sisters, please tell me why is it that children are so disobedient at this period. It seems impossible to rule and control them. Why is it that parents are so inclined to try to grant the wishes and desires of their children, regardless of whether they are for their benefit or not. When I was a child, my childish wishes were not taken into consideration by my parents unless these were right out needful and in accordance with their will. I am sure it does not make a child any happier to grant every whim and notion.

Miss Caleo C. Cochrane. I can give you a sure remedy for that feeling of loneliness that appears now and then to blot out the sunshine of contentment. Just so long as you keep your hands busily employed, your thoughts will very well follow. Take up some employment that will interest you. I always see many branches of industry that I would like to engage in. Being endowed with much will power and energy I strive to gain success in all I undertake. This causes me to be interested in all employments I engage in. I will relate some of my experiences through times past and present, then you will know why I can give a reason for the remedy I recommended to all those who are physically able to toil. This is not to the many invalids who are suffering, to whom my deepest sympathy goes out, for by experience of years past I know their lonely feelings. To those who are blessed with strength I am speaking. I have experienced parting with father, mother, sisters, and brothers. Father, mother and one brother by the cold, icy hand of death. The others through matrimony went from under the old, parental roof into homes of their own, except one sister and she and I live alone. Therefore out of a family consisting of twelve why should I not know what loneliness means. Since we have been living alone, my sister has been away from home for a few days at times on a visit and I remained at home with not a neighbor's house in sight of our plantation. Perhaps I would not see anybody during day or night while she was gone. People sometimes ask me if I do not get lonesome. My reply is, "I am always busy, and those who are busy seldom get lonely." Busily engaged with home duties or some employment during daylight; at night busy reading or writing until I retire. Then I don't get nearly all the spare time for reading I would like to have. I have always found that when busily engaged, loneliness and discontent do not find room to creep in. Yet I find a change is always needful. We would not have all sunshine. The clouds and rain are necessary to promote life and growth. So we need a change occasionally to break the monotony of existence. If we will visit the sick and render unto them some assistance; visit our relatives and friends, and go to church or to some place of entertainment it will keep us busy, and these changes will help drive away the blues and melancholy feeling that will creep in if we continue through the same old routine of business, day after day. Therefore I advise all who feel lonely and discontented to try the method I have suggested and watch results.

With much love and best wishes for all COMFORT readers, a Southern bachelor maid, MISS AZUBAH LEE.

NORMANNA, TEXAS.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

Will you move over a tiny bit please and make room for a little girl from southwest Texas?

I will take for my subject "Idleness." If we only stop to think, "idle" is a broad word, and can mean different things. What I have reference to, however, is a person who does nothing for others. Many an idle person fancies himself industrious. But is it really fruitful? Fruitful effort always contains elements of service to others. Effort need not be definitely useful and active to be fruitful. The person who, in unselfish aspiration to spend a fruitful life, is hunting a place where they may be of service to others. Why not begin near home? How many poor souls are there around our very doors whom we could help in some way. For instance, how many of us, stop to give a few minutes of sympathy and cheerful words to some disheartened person, or an hour employed in taking an invalid out driving, etc. Or even to write a hopeful letter to one who is depressed in spirit. All of these are fruitful, and would it not make us happier, knowing that we had done something to make someone else happy? Some of us are so selfish we are not willing to sacrifice the merest trifle for the happiness of others. Kind words do not cost much, yet how much they may accomplish!

Now can you not all see how true this is?

Selfish people aren't really happy. How a bright smiling face will brighten a dreary day! Cheerfulness and gaiety are by nature contagious, so let us not be the cause of others being weak, but give them our energy, to revive them and lift them up.

I have been a subscriber to COMFORT for several years, and like it better all the time. Each issue shows a finer selection of reading matter than the last. I feel as if I owe it something in return for all the pleasure it gives me. I take a keen interest in the Sisters' Corner. There are so many things in it which I find helpful, as I'm the housekeeper most of the time. Mother's health has not been good for sometime, and I have had nearly all of the housework to do.

I am eighteen years old. Weigh one hundred and twenty-five pounds, and am five feet and eight inches tall. Have dark brown, wavy hair, dark eyes and a fair complexion. Both father and mother are living, also two brothers, and four sisters, all are married but two sisters and myself. One of my sisters teaches school, and the other one isn't at home much so you can imagine how lonely I get. I read lots, however, crochet and do embroidery and pass the time away very well.

Drawnwork Scarf

EVERY woman reader of COMFORT who wants a handsome, serviceable dresser or sideboard scarf should answer this offer at once. We have imported from Germany a large quantity of these large sized, pure linen scarfs, 67 inches long and 16 inches wide, and secured them at a price so low that we can well afford to give them away for less money in subscriptions than you would have to pay outright for a much inferior scarf in any store. As shown in illustration, the pattern is a large attractive zigzag drawnwork design and both ends of the scarf are finished with a handsome wide combed and knotted fringe. Being made by skilled workmen of pure flax, the texture of this scarf is such that it should last a lifetime and in appearance it is one of the most beautiful dresser or sideboard covers you ever saw. We are giving away this scarf free on the terms of the following CLUB OFFER. For two one-year subscriptions to COMFORT at 25 cents each, or one 3-year subscription) not your own) at 50 cents, we will send you this large handsome, pure linen, imported scarf free by Parcel Post prepaid. Premium No. 332.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

Comfort's Information Bureau

Under this heading all questions by COMFORT subscribers on subjects not related to the special departments elsewhere in the paper will be answered, as far as may be. COMFORT readers are advised to read carefully the advertisements in this paper, as they will often find in them what they seek through their questions addressed to this Bureau. They will thus save time, labor and postage.

NOTICE.—As the privileges of this Bureau and of all other departments of COMFORT are for subscribers only, no attention will be given any inquiry which does not bear the writer's correct name and address. Initials only, or a fictitious name, if requested, will appear in the published answer, but the inquiry must invariably be signed by the writer's true name.

M. A. H., Milville, Cal.—President McKinley was shot while holding a public reception in the Temple of Music, at the Buffalo Exposition, Sept. 6, 1901, and died in Buffalo on the 14th. He was shot twice by Leon Czolgosz who was immediately arrested. The assassin was placed on trial Sept. 23, and the next day was found guilty of murder in the first degree. On the 28th he was sentenced and Oct. 29 he was put to death. It appears that Czolgosz had no confederates and simply killed the President in pursuance of the anarchistic teaching that all men in authority should be killed.

Mrs. J. F. M., Washington, Pa.—We are not acquainted with the name of the first white baby born in Baltimore; perhaps the Mayor of that city could tell you. Write to him. He always strives to please and will inform you (2) Mrs. Hetty Green, the "richest woman in the world" is not related to Gen. Nathaniel Green of Revolution fame so far as we know. We have never heard that her husband was.

E. E. S., Franklinton, La.—If you wish to assist the United States to become a great sea-faring nation why don't you enlist in the navy where your knowledge of Spanish as well as your other capacities will have full development? Good men are needed in the navy and the job is a sure one as long as you want it and behave yourself. It also provides for you when you are old enough to quit work. Write to Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C. about getting on a ship. Your knowledge of Spanish may be worth a whole lot to you if our ships go into Mexican waters as they may have to before things become settled in that country.

Mrs. Emily Johnson, Texas, writes that amole, the soap vegetable, is chiefly valuable as a hair tonic and dandruff remover, but she also finds it satisfactory in washing delicate fabrics, though not good for the usual laundry purposes.

Honesty, New Castle, Pa.—You cannot copyright formulas for compounding remedies, but you can have them protected as other patent medicines are. Write to Commissioner of Patents, Washington, D. C. for detailed information.

Mrs. J. J. C., Farmington, Ark.—If you want the nice opossum and raccoon skins your husband has, to be tanned so they will be worth anything after the tanning, don't trust it to a green hand, any more than you would trust the making of your best dress to someone who didn't know how to fit or sew. Tanning, except the ordinary, rough, home work, can only be done by experts, and if the skins are nice ones, they should not be spoiled by a green hand who would like to do it right, but doesn't know how. Any hunter in your neighborhood can tell your husband how to tan them in the usual rough style and if you want them that way, all right, let the green hand do it. We are thus particular in telling you this, because so many COMFORT readers have the idea that if they are told how to do a thing they can do it, notwithstanding those who do such things right can only do so after years of practise, with all knowledge possible and the necessary materials and machinery. Even then, most of them don't do the best work. You know we are a nation of inefficients.

Pearl, Milano, Texas.—The larger part of the fresh water pearls produced in this country come from the Mississippi river, or its tributaries, though pearls are found in all the fresh waters of the U. S. We may suggest to you that if you think of trying pearl fishing, not to do it, as it is hard work and the pay is very small, pearls being scarce and the chief value of the mussels being the shells used by button factories. For detailed information write to U. S. Fish Commission, Washington, D. C.

Mrs. J. L., Golconda, Nev.—Children born in the United States and coming of age here are citizens, whatever their parents may be. A foreign woman marrying an American becomes an American citizen.

Nina, Richland, Kans.—You can get a book on how to raise and care for canaries from any bookseller, and if you have none in your town, write to A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago, Ill., or to Wm. Bartels, 160 Greenwich St., New York City. Parrots cost anywhere from five dollars up, a good talking bird being worth from twenty-five dollars up. Ask Bartels about parrots. (2) The only objection to General Delivery letters by P. O. officials is that such letters are often of a character not such as the writers would like to have come in their regular mail. Many scandals have grown out of Gen. Del. letters.

F. J. G., Runge, Texas.—The address of the American Red Cross is 1624 H. Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., Secretary, Charles L. Magee.

Pet, Waco, Texas.—Any kind of stationery will do to write stories on if they are such stories as editors are striving for. Otherwise don't write them, because the market for ordinary stories is completely overstocked. We don't believe you can write a first-class story, judging from your letter, and we advise as a friend that you do not attempt story writing yet.

E. D. B., Sedgwick, Kans.—The U. S. has never issued a coin or paper currency of the value of twelve and a half cents with the standard name of shilling. The terms, shilling and bit, come to us from the English and Spanish coins in use before we had a coinage of our own—the bit being always twelve and a half cents, or Spanish real, while the shilling varied from that amount to twenty-three and one half cents. The use of the terms now are purely local and chiefly rural.

Miss R. M., Red Springs, N. C.—For any information concerning railway mail clerk or other government civil service positions write to Secretary, Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C. Other COMFORT inquirers take notice.

B. W. H., Millport, Ala.—We haven't space to give you a list of U. S. Senators. Get a World Almanac, New York City. Price thirty cents, mailed. It is full of the kind of information you want and a great deal you need. (2) In all the states the U. S. senators are elected by popular vote now, since the recent change in the U. S. Constitution. (3) There are no U. S. senatorial districts. Each state has two senators at large.

C. C., Casey, Ill.—The madstone is a stone of a greenish color and porous substance, circular or egg-shaped, and while discredited by scientists is believed by many less learned people to be a specific for the bites of mad-dogs or snakes. They are rare and are found chiefly in the South. One method of application is to soak the stone in milk and apply it to the bite. If there is poison it is expected to adhere to the spot until the poison is absorbed when it is supposed to drop off. It really has no power though, but many cures are claimed for it. It has no particular locality and is found separate from other formations as a large-sized pebble is found. Owners of madstones hold them in a sort of superstitious awe and while they will often make no charge for their use, they will not sell them at any price.

T. N., Hoseland, Nebr.—If you pass the Civil Service examination for postal clerk you will stand as good a chance as any other applicant for appointment if you are a person of good character and of the proper age. For blanks and all necessary information write to Secretary, Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C., stating what branch of the service you wish to enter.

L., Stockwell, Ind.—The president and cashier of the national bank issuing bills are the only persons who may legally sign them. Anyone else doing so would be guilty of forgery. This would not be possible, however, unless the bills were stolen from the bank before the proper officers could sign them, so that both larceny and forgery would stand against the offenders.

painful vividness, that afternoon in the arbor, when she had sat with the man whom she would never see more, and listened to Mr. Howley Jones' idle boasting.

How the name had impressed her then, awaking a strange kind of infinite memory; she remembered how she had asked about this Sir Cyril, and now she was to hear that this same man was in some way linked with her past, and possibly with her future.

The flush passed away, and she listened more intently, if that were possible than before.

"Sir Cyril, at the time of your uncle's death, was a promising lad some few years older than you. He was often at More Park, and though he has no doubt forgotten your uncle and all connected with him, used as a boy to be very fond of him. I have seen your uncle nursing him on one knee while you, my dear Miss Weston, were on the other."

Edna's eyes dropped, and a little thrill, whether of pain or pleasure she could not say, ran through her. For the first time the lawyer seemed long-winded. Why did he not go on? What was he leading up to?

"Your uncle then hit upon a scheme which should conduce to the good of both families. He left a certain sum of money to your father, another set sum to your aunt"—and he bowed to Mrs. Weston—"and the remainder of his fortune he placed in the hands of trustees to take care of, and increase by the accumulation of interest, until you should have reached the age of twenty. You are twenty today, if I am not mistaken?"

Edna, open-eyed, pale again but calm, though rather perplexed and troubled, inclines her head in assent.

"Just so," said Mr. Burdon, rubbing his eyeglass, and warming to his theme. "The trustees have taken care of the money; it has bred—if I may use the term—and increased, and is now a fortune, almost princely in its extent, and it now remains to be seen to whom it belongs."

Edna drew a sigh that almost seemed one of relief; Aunt Martha, pale and agitated, murmured the words, "Fortune—princely!" and nervously clasped and unclasped her hands.

Edward More got up from his chair and took two or three impatient turns across the room, then sank, with something between a groan and a snort, into his seat again.

"That immense fortune—every penny of it—will belong to either you or Sir Cyril More, or perhaps to both of you. It will belong to both of you, in equal shares, on one condition.

"On one condition," repeated Mr. Burdon, emphasizing the words by tapping the deed with his forefinger after each; "and that is, that you become man and wife."

Edna stared with startled eyes for a moment, then went deadly pale.

"Man and wife!" she murmured, her head drooping, until her face was hidden.

Mr. Burdon nodded emphatically.

"It was your uncle's dearest wish; it was Sir Charles' dearest wish, that you and his nephew should marry, and so make the houses of More and Weston—united for so many years by so firm a bond of friendship—one in fact and law. With that wish in his heart and on his lips your uncle lived and died."

There was a moment's pause after these words, almost solemnly delivered, and it was in a still slower and more emphatic manner that the lawyer resumed:

"But we know that your uncle was too just and acute a man to attempt to wrest fate to his own inclination; he only tried to guide it. He has proved his wisdom and justice by a stipulation which stamps him at once as a man of no common mind. He has left, so to speak, each of you free to decline or accept his fortune without depriving the other of his, or her, chance of it. To Sir Cyril the first word is given. It is for him to say, when the whole matter has been laid before him, whether he will follow the course set out in the deed, and propose for your hand. Should he do so, and you accept, well and good, the money is secure to you both. Should you reject him, the fortune goes to him—lands, houses, gold. So much for your part in the matter; now comes his. Should he be mad enough to throw away such a chance of securing a beautiful and charming bride—forgive me if I am plain-speaking, my dear Miss Weston—and an immense, a princely fortune, should he do this, then the whole of the money, lands, houses and gold comes to you; to do with as you will—yours wholly and unconditionally; unfettered by a single claim or drawback.

"Such is the story which the deed sets forth, and such are its commands and requirements."

Mr. Burdon having paused, impressively looked at Edna. She was surprised and agitated—one moment pale, the next a vivid crimson. Aunt Martha, still holding her hand, crushed that hand one moment and patted and soothed it the next. Edward More sat and glanced at one and the other, dissatisfied with everything, and quite prepared to break out into lamentable complainings whichever way the matter should be settled.

Neither of the three spoke a word. Mr. Burdon, having waited to see if anyone felt inclined to speak, rose again, and stood with his back to the empty fireplace, and addressing Edna, said:

"Practically, my dear young lady, the matter rests in your hands."

Edna started from a painful reverie, and looked up with vague alarm.

Mr. Burdon, answering that look, added:

"Yes; for I am not indulging in a perhaps pardonable flattery when I assert that Sir Cyril, not being insane, is not likely to refuse either you or this immense fortune—certainly not both together. Therefore it rests with you whether you accept a husband, young, handsome, and a general favorite——"

Edward More grunted audibly.

"A general favorite," repeated Mr. Burdon, emphatically, as if he would not be contradicted on that point.

"Of course any conjecture is at present premature, but I think I may answer for Sir Cyril; I think I am sufficiently in his confidence to promise that he will throw no obstacle in the way of the fulfillment of your uncle's wishes."

There was another pause.

"As I have said, the choice if choice it can be called, rests with Sir Cyril, as it should do, very properly giving you two choices, if I may call them so; and I have dispatched a clerk, a special messenger, for Sir Cyril, that the preliminaries may be got through without any loss of time. I trust, I do trust, that we may succeed in finding Sir Cyril; his movements are just at present very uncertain."

"Very uncertain!" echoed Edward More, sardonically.

"May I ask if you have ever seen Sir Cyril?" asked Mr. Burdon.

Edna raised her eyes, half frightened, wholly troubled, and shook her head.

"No, I have not seen him," she said, in a low voice.

"No doubt you have heard of him?"

"Oh, no doubt!" echoed Edward More, again, with increased bitterness.

Edna looked from one to the other.

"Yes, I have heard of him," she said, and her face grew crimson.

"And heard no good of him?" grunted Edward.

"We can't say that," broke in Mr. Burdon, quickly.

"As I have said, Sir Cyril is a general favorite and—and—well, he has no worse enemy than himself."

"And that is enough to ruin him," added Edward, spitefully.

Edna looked with pained surprise at the malignant face of the speaker, and for the first time a gleam of pity for this Sir Cyril crossed her heart.

"Well, well," said Mr. Burdon, with a touch of impatience. "Brothers are inclined, too often, to judge each other too harshly. It is a pity Sir Cyril is not here to speak for himself. Meanwhile, my dear madam," he said—"that is, until he arrives—I think we had better suspend all decisions and even discussions. Where are you staying?"

"We are staying at Moffat's Hotel," answered Aunt Martha, nervously.

Mr. Burdon bowed and glanced at Edward.

"Is there anything else that we ought to say Mr. More?"

Edward More shook his head.

"Except to hope that that precious brother of mine will be persuaded to put in an appearance. I don't suppose Miss Weston will be sorry to have the matter cleared up."

Edna looked up quickly, and her bright eyes flashed upon him with sweet indignation.

"I think," she said, with a little tremor in her voice, 'that it could be settled now at this moment——"

Mr. Burdon stopped her with upraised hands.

"Softly, softly, my dear young lady! I cannot permit you to say—what I think you were going to say. The choice, remember, rests in the first instance with Sir Cyril. Do not be hasty! I implore you to remember that the fate of an immense estate rests upon the issue of this question. Come, you will forgive me," he said, bending toward her with infinite respect; "indeed, I should never forgive myself if I allowed you to put yourself at a disadvantage, and, believe me, you would be doing so if you expressed an opinion at this time."

Then as Edna hung her head and closed her lips, he ejaculated, irritably:

"I would give a hundred pounds if Sir Cyril were here now!"

As he spoke, almost before the words were out of his lips, there came a knock at the door, and the discreet clerk appeared in answer to the impatient "Come in!" and handed a card to Mr. Burdon.

No sooner had he glanced at it than he turned with a short laugh of surprise and satisfaction.

"See how rash it is to make monetary vows—or vows of any sort! Sir Cyril is here!"

"What!" exclaimed Edward More, starting to his feet with a surprised scowl of repugnance; do you mean to say he is here, in this house?"

"Yes," said Mr. Burdon, "and wishes to see me alone!"

Edna, pale and trembling, rose.

"Let us go, aunt!" she said, in a hurried whisper.

"Not yet," pleaded Mr. Burdon. "If you can be persuaded to stay until I return, I promise not to be long. Please let me persuade you. Come, my dear young lady, this is a matter of business as well as sentiment. I can understand and appreciate your feelings in the matter, but while I respect them, pray let me beg you to reflect on the lamentable results that would attend any mistake or misunderstanding. Give me five—ten—minutes!"

Edna sank back into her chair trembling visibly, but otherwise calm and self-possessed, and the lawyer hurried from the room.

CHAPTER XII.

SIR CYRIL'S CHOICE.

"My dear Sir Cyril!" exclaimed Mr. Burdon, entering his chief clerk's room, into which Sir Cyril had been shown, "this is the luckiest coincidence in the world," and he laughed a legal laugh of satisfaction, which died away rather suddenly as he came near enough to take his client's proffered hand and see his face.

"I—I hope nothing has happened," he said, with an air of concern, "and that you are quite well."

"Nothing has happened, and I am quite well, thanks!" replied Cyril, with most unusual impatience.

"I am glad to hear it, Sir Cyril," responded Mr. Burdon, still eying with a covert scrutiny the Beautiful Hair and Lots of it, if You Use Crystolis.

In Europe "Crystolis," has been called the most wonderful discovery of the century.

The judges of the Brussels and Paris Expositions enthusiastically awarded Gold Medals to this marvelous Hair Grower.

Already since we secured the American rights hundreds of men and women have written telling of the phenomenal results obtained by its use. People who have been bald for years tell how they now glory in beautiful hair. Others who have had dandruff all their lives say they have got a clean, healthy scalp after a few applications of this wonderful new treatment.

We don't care whether you are bothered with falling hair, prematurely gray hair, matted hair, brittle hair or stringy hair, dandruff, itching scalp, or any or all forms of hair trouble, we want you to try "CRYSTOLIS" at our risk.

We give you a binding guarantee without any "strings" or red tape, that it won't cost you a cent if we do not prove to you that "CRYSTOLIS" will do all we claim for it—and what's important, we have plenty of money to back our guarantee. $1000 has been deposited in our local bank as a Special Fund to be forfeited if we fail to comply with this contract. Cut out the coupon below and mail it today to Creslo Laboratories, 12-U Street, Binghamton, N. Y.

Gleason's Horse Book

520 Pages Fully Illustrated

All That is Worth Knowing About Training and Treating Horses

Premium No. 443

EVERY person who owns, handles or manages horses and all livestock keepers and breeders should have a copy of this great book because it tells about all the known methods of treating diseases of horses and other domestic animals—methods that are based upon the results of actual practice and not mere theory. It also contains Prof. Gleason's famous system of horse breaking, taming and training therefore, it is in reality two books in one and positively the most authoritative work of the kind ever published. There are in all 520 pages, many of them illustrated and dealing with the cause and cure of practically every disease known to horses, cattle, sheep, poultry, swine and dogs with the right remedies for each disease. Among the many subjects covered in Part 1 of this book are causes of diseases, how to observe diseases, treatment of diseases, Cerebro, Spinal Meningitis, distemper, dysentery, eye diseases, fistula, glands, internal diseases, kidney diseases, poisons, stomach and bowel diseases, worms and literally hundreds of other horse and live-stock ailments, which for lack of space we cannot enumerate here. In Part 2 of this book Prof. Gleason gives to the world for the first time his method of breaking and training horses and there are are also special chapters on how to buy, how to detect unsoundness, feeding, breeding, horse-shoeing, general care of horses, etc. Gleason's Horse Book is actually worth its weight in gold to every horse owner or breeder in the land, yet by special arrangement with the publishers we are enabled to give it away without cost to all who will accept the following

VETERINARY INFORMATION

Subscribers are invited to write to this department asking for any information desired relative to the treatment of animal troubles. Questions will be answered in these columns free by an eminent veterinarian. Describe the trouble fully, sign full name and give your address; direct all correspondence to the Veterinary Department, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine. Should any subscriber desire an immediate, special opinion on any question privately mailed, it may be had by sending one dollar with a letter asking such advice, addressing as above.

No atttention will be given any inquiry which lacks, the sender's full name and address, but we will print only initials if so requested.

SICK HOGS.—About a year ago I bought four pigs between three and four months old. They had a fine range, eating dry Alfalfa leaves, or whatever they found. One died in May, another the last part of July, after being sick for nearly three weeks. He wouldn't eat and couldn't stand on his hind legs. The third one died four weeks after; he was sick about eighteen hours. I never feed anything except dish-water and milk.

The foregoing inquiry was not signed and therefore is not entitled to any attention, according to our rule printed in the heading of this department. We print the following answer, however, because the information may be useful to our readers. Remember that all communications addressed to any department of COMFORT must be signed and give the writer's P. O. address.—Editor.

A.—A post-mortem examination should have been made in each case to determine the cause of death. The symptoms suggest poisoning from ptomanies in soured or fermented slop, or possibly from excess of soap or soap powder in the slop. Possibly, however, a chronic form of hog cholera has been present. Allow your hogs free range on Alfalfa and stop the slopping and especially the soapy water. Feed corn to balance the Alfalfa feed. If the drinking water is soft in your country add lime freely to the drinking water.

IMPACTION.—I have a cow that has been sick for three weeks. At first she began foaming at the mouth and shaking her head, and later in the day she began to stagger with her head slightly forward. Then she began to pitch and fall and striking herself with her feet. She is now quiet but has a severe cough and is constantly grunting. She chews her cud but very little. She hasn't any appetite, and drinks but little water. She was giving one and a half gallons of milk per day but is now dry. M. C. S.

A.—It is practically certain that this cow is suffering from impaction of the third stomach or "leaves," but it may happen to be an impaction of the paunch. In the latter event it would, at this stage, probably be necessary to have a veterinarian open the paunch (rumen) and remove the feed. If it is the third stomach we fear that the cow will have died before this answer arrives. At the outset of the attack a pound or more of Castor oil should have been given, shaken up in milk and followed by copious drinks of warm flaxseed tea containing alcoholic stimulants and dram doses of fluid extract of nux vomica.

RABIES.—Two of my cows died in an unusual manner. The trouble started with the animals refusing to eat and bellowing every few minutes, day and night. They also frothed slightly at the mouth and showed a tendency to chase chickens, hogs and less frequently other cattle. In a few days they were too weak to stand up and died a few days later. I could find nothing wrong with the internal organs except a very offensive odor. H. F. F.

A.—These are the symptoms of rabies from the bite of some rabid (mad) animal. If you remember that a stray dog chased the animals that will be the explanation and if anyone has been bitten in your district at that time the Pasteur treatment against rabies should be applied at once. If you have other animals that were bitten they should be isolated and watched carefully. Be especially careful of any dog that may possibly have been bitten.

WORMS.—I have a mare with foal; she is seven years old and troubled with worms. They are of a whitish gray color and some are about three inches long. The largest part of them is not more than an eighth of an inch in diameter. D. W.

A.—These small pin worms inhabit the rectum and may cause some irritation or tail rubbing, but otherwise are practically harmless. As the mare is in foal internal remedies should not be given, but if you wish to do so inject into the rectum two or three quarts of soapy warm water two or three times, at intervals of twenty-four hours. It is usual to mix a cupful of tobacco decoction with each injection solution, or salt may be used. It would be best, in our opinion, not to give any treatment if the mare is near foaling.

THRUSH.—We have a mare that limps in her right forefoot, and we do not know what causes it; she seemed to have a little thrush in both forefeet, we removed the shoes and burned her feet with turpentine; that helped the thrush some but hasn't stopped the limping. Her right shoulder seems to get very stiff after working, but not sore; we have been bathing it with liniment. The foot she limps in she often holds out from her and stands on the other. What do you think is the trouble? C. L. H.

A.—The lameness evidently is in the foot, but thrush rarely causes lameness. Thursh is due to standing in wet and filth in the stable. Remove the cause, cleanse the cleft of the frog and on each side of it, then pack with calomel and force oakum on top of the calomel to keep it in place. Renew the dressing daily. Should lameness persist after the thrush is cured, clip the hair from the hoof-head and blister two or three times, at intervals of two or three weeks, using a mixture of one part of powdered cantharides and three parts of lard for the work.

SADDLE SORES.—I would like to ask you for a cure for my horse. His back breaks with boils under the saddle. MRS. M. B.

A.—Have the saddle fit properly and then use a saddle pad or cloth. Bathe the skin under the saddle with strong alum water or white oak bark tea, or a solution of half an ounce of tannic or gallic acid to half a gallon of cold water before and after riding the horse. In chronic cases it sometimes is necessary to cut out dead, horny patches of skin, called "sitfasts," before healing will take place.

BLOAT.—I am raising eight lambs, feeding them from a bottle on cow's milk. At first I fed them seven times a day. I feed four times a day now, letting them out to eat grass. I skim the cream off the milk and add water to it. They bloat badly and can hardly walk. I feed about one quart of milk at a time. The oldest lamb is two months old and the youngest is three weeks. MRS. J. A. C.

A.—Add an ounce of limewater to each pint of milk and feed not more than a pint at a meal. Feed less if the milk does not then agree. Keep the feeding bottles scalded and perfectly clean. Add a little sugar to the milk. Feed oatmeal and bran in addition to milk.

PROLAPSE OF RECTUM.—Please tell me what to do for my pigs. The rectum protrudes and is bloody? A. B.

A.—Cleanse the protruded part, then dust with freshly powdered ergot and return to place. Repeat the treatment as often as found necessary. Do not feed irritating feed such as corn and cob meal, or ground unscreened oats, or boiled feed.

FISTULA.—I have a four-year-old mule that has a wart under his left ear which discharges all the time. Will you advise me how to remove it? B. B.

A.—An operation by an expert surgeon will be necessary as the discharge either indicates a fistula of the bursa mucosa, or is due to the presence of a supernumerary molar tooth. Such cases are comparatively common and always are difficult to remedy.

INDIGESTION.—I have a mare nine years old in good flesh. She has fife for an hour's or so, work, and then appears weak and doesn't want to go, especially when driven. J. D. R.

A.—Have the mare clipped, if her coat is long and rough. Cut her grain ration in half. Feed whole oats and wheat bran, without corn, and allow not over one and one fifth pounds of hay per hundred pounds of body weight as a day's ration. Never let her stand idle for a single day. Make her take abundant exercise if there's no work for her to do.

WARTS.—Our cattle have warts on their necks. They start about the size of a pea and in a few months the entire neck is covered. There is a disagreeable odor from them. It is only the young stock that have it. They eat grass in summer, hay and straw in winter. MRS. D. V.

A.—When warts are starting to grow rub the affected parts once daily with Castor oil or fresh goose grease and they will disappear after a time. A coating of pine tar is good treatment for warts that have grown for some time. Twist off large warts and stop the bleeding by applying a hot iron.

COUGH.—I have a milk cow that will freshen in July. She has a dry cough, yet eats heartily, and is in poor condition. I feed her millet, pea hay and mixed mill feed. W. R. B.

A.—Cough is merely a symptom of irritation from any one of a large number of different causes. As tuberculosis is a very common and serious cause and also suggested by thin condition you should have the cow tested with tuberculin. Until this is done isolate the cow and do not use her milk. Tuberculosis is incurable.

PARALYSIS.—I have a mare six years old, fed her in the A. M. She ate heartily, at noon refused all food, took her out of the stall, found she trembled, lay down full length just a few minutes, arose and stood still. Soon noticed she was losing the use of left hind leg, in a very short time lost the use of both and fell, lay prostrate for a few hours, would at intervals look up, and eat heartily, on the 6th day could stand for some time, was awfully drawn and stiff, now the 22nd day since taken she still has good appetite, bowels regular and healthy, kidneys not acting so well, she seems to be losing the use of the hind legs or the parts are weak, won't stand only a few minutes, what is the trouble? The cause and what to do for it? MISS L. E. B.

A.—If the mare has been standing idle and has been well fed on oats or other rich feed and the urine was dark brown in color at the time of attack the disease is azoturia. That ailment is caused by lack of work or exercise for one or more days in the stable while still fed the usual ration of grain. If there is no such history to the case the trouble probably comes from molds in hay or grain. Remove such a cause. The mare should be supported with slings or a tarpaulin or stack cover folded and passed under the body, from one side of the stall partition to the other. Give her a physic. Rub the muscles of the loins and hips and above stifle with a liniment composed of an ounce each of turpentine and aqua ammonia shaken up, in a pint of raw linseed oil or cottonseed oil.

NAIL PRICK.—My three-year-old mare got a rusty wire nail in her foot, about four months ago. It went up in the frog about one inch. I pulled the nail out and put turpentine on. Pus formed and ridge appeared above the top of her hoof and is now down on the hoof about one half inch. When she steps flat it seems to hurt her. MRS. J. G.

A.—Clip the hair from the hoof-head and blister twice a month with a mixture of one dram of biniodide of mercury in two ounces of a mixture of one part of powdered cantharides and three parts of lard. We fear that pus will break out at the hoof-head and if it does you should employ a qualified veterinarian.

MULE HOOFS.—Can you give me a remedy for a colt, a year old this month? Instead of the hoofs growing out straight as they should they are drawn in. MRS. M. P.

A.—Have the hoofs levelled by rasping. Keep the colt off board floors. Let him run daily on moist pasture and if that does not suffice soak the feet in cold water for an hour or so twice daily and then smear with any simple greasy hoof-dressing. The hoofs have become hard and contracted from confinement on a dry floor. Lack of succulent feed may also have such an effect.

PARALYSIS.—What is the matter and what can I do for my sow? She has a good appetite but she can't get up on her feet and squeals as though in pain when you assist her. She had little pigs last December. I have taken them away from her. The first I noticed she appeared lame in one hind leg and then she could not get up on any of them. MRS. J. F. R.

A.—This condition attacks a pampered sow when she is weakened by the strain and drain of nursing pigs. It is induced by overfeeding and lack of exercise. Stuffing on corn is most likely to bring it on. As the sow is in good condition she should be killed for meat. Treatment might not succeed and the medicines used would make the meat unfit for use.

BLINDNESS.—My young rabbits are getting blind and run around in circles. They are six weeks old. J. S.

A.—The rabbits are too closely confined and you may not be keeping the hutches clean and dry. Provide new, clean, roomy quarters for abundant exercise. Wash the eyes twice daily with a ten per cent solution of boric acid.

SORES ON UDDER.—Our cows' udders break out in sores; when the scab comes off it leaves raw-looking places. They get well for a few days then break out again; sometimes the milk looks as though there were drops of grease or oil of some kind on top as soon as milked. Cows all have calves; they don't break out till after they are fresh a few days. We feed bran and cottonseed meal. All seem to be in good health and give lots of milk. MRS. C. E.

A.—This may be cowpox which is spread from cow to cow by the milkers' hands, or it may be the contagious form of mammites (garget). Isolate a cow the moment anything is seen to be wrong with her udder and keep her separate until perfectly well. If it is cowpox you will find a mixture of equal parts of bay rum and glycerine an excellent lotion for use on the udder. Obstinate sores should be painted with tincture of iodine every other day and once daily coated with glycerite of tannin. If it is not cowpox use camphor phenique upon the affected parts once daily.

ABSCESSES.—My hogs and calves have a large lump on their jaw. They are full of pus when cut open. (2) I have a cow eight years old. Every two months she has a swelling on her udder and the milk is stringy and thick. MRS. A. M. P.

A.—Abscesses on the jaws of hogs and calves suggest the possibility of tuberculosis in the herd and you should have the cows tested with tuberculin, as the young animals take the disease from milk. It may be, however, that the young animals have abscesses from puncture or presence of foreign bodies such as needle grass, or they may have actionomycosis (lump jaw). Unfortunately we cannot determine the matter without making an examination. You should therefore have a graduate veterinarian make an examination of all of the animals, as soon as possible. Meanwhile swab the lumps with tincture of iodine every other day and continue using the tincture when the abscesses burst or are opened. (2) It will not pay to keep the cow as she has chronic garget. Rub the udder once daily with a mixture of one part of mercurial ointment and two parts of lard or soft soap.

LAMENESS.—I have a mule lame in right hind leg. He has wind knots on his ankle. W. A. T.

A.—Wind puffs are synovial distensions and come from hard work, but rarely if ever cause lameness. We think you must look for some other cause. If the mule starts out lame and gets over the lameness when he walks or trots a short distance bone spavin is the cause of lameness and would require firing and blistering by a veterinarian, to be followed by a six weeks' rest. If spavin is not present look for ringbone, which would need puncture-firing and blistering.

The Rajah's Daughter

to save the Europeans, will be in time to avenge them and crush the mutineers."

The Resident went to the door to order his bearers, and the Rajah walked down a few yards of the avenue with him. Their backs had hardly been turned when a Hindoo youth threw the arras which concealed an ante-room of the audience-chamber aside, and, with frightened face and hasty steps, vanished through a side door.

An hour later this same Hindoo youth appeared before Hector Graham's bungalow and handed him a note containing the following:

THE PALACE, 6 P. M., May 23, 1857.

My Beloved: My father knows all, and I am a prisoner. The Resident was here to-day, and Mahond, whom you may trust, heard by accident a conspiracy to destroy you and marry me to Sir James. The native troops in Cawnpore and other military posts have risen in revolt and massacred the Europeans. They intend doing the same in Amritsur on parade tomorrow morning. This is startling, but it is true. So in the name of Allah take care of yourself for my sake.

"Your wife, AJMOUR.

While reading these lines the blood in Hector Graham's veins ran cold. Here was a fearful responsibility placed on his shoulders. But was not the thing impossible? And yet he and the other Europeans of the garrison had for some time felt that vague sort of uneasiness sailors in the Mediterranean experience immediately before the advent of a white squall, while the sky is still blue and cloudless.

Dismissing Mahond, with a caution to keep his lips sealed, Hector sent for the telegraph operator.

"Mr. Caldwell," he said, when that person reported half an hour subsequently, "I wish to send this dispatch to Lahore."

"Impossible, sir; the wires are all cut. I can't understand it, but it is as I say."

"You can ride?"

"Yes. Captain, I can ride well. I have been in the cavalry."

"Good. Go at once to my stables and saddle one of the Arabians you will find there. Ride to Philour, thirty-seven miles from here, you know, and tell Major Hardy in command there that the Sepoys in Cawnpore and Delhi have risen; that I expect to have a revolt here in the morning, and that I want reinforcements. Cavalry, of course. To be of use, they must be here before seven o'clock."

The operator mounted on the swift Arabian, cantered slowly through the cantonments, but once outside of them, covered the ground as if many lives depended upon his speed.

Upon making further investigations Hector Graham discovered another indication of the coming trouble in the fact that the rifles of the native soldiers doing sentinel duty were loaded. He then gently made arrangements by which the white soldiers of the fort were warned of the coming danger, and the women of the garrison placed in as secure a position as possible, after which the young commander sat down and wrote out the subjoined garrison order:

Amritsur, May 23, 1857.

As tomorrow will be the Queen's Birthday, the troops of the garrison will parade at 7 o'clock instead of 5.30 as usual. The artillery and infantry will fire a feu de joie on the occasion, and blank ammunition will be served out to them for the purpose. By order,

HECTOR GRAHAM,
Captain Commanding the Fort.

"Why have you delayed the parade, Hector?" asked Doctor Donovan, when, after doing all that could be done under the conditions, the two officers, with the Reverend Doctor Jessup, met in Graham's bungalow after the trials and tribulations of the day.

"To gain more time for the arrival of reinforcements, Larry; also, that we may have fair daylight in which to die, if necessary. I hope all our fellows will be on the alert to prevent a surprise during the night."

"You may be sure they will," said the chaplain. "I shall take my turn in visiting the sentries."

"And I also," said Doctor Donovan.

Then all three lapsed into silence and speculated upon portentous coming events. One of them dwelt sadly on the fact that he had just married the most beautiful woman in India, only, in all probability, to leave her a widowed maid in a few hours. For thirty-eight against four hundred! The odds were, indeed, desperate.

The Pretty Girls' Club

Conducted by Katherine Booth

Those Disturbing Blackheads

"Oh, Mistress Mary, quite contrary,
How does your garden grow,
With silver bells and cockle shells
And blackheads all in a row?"

I WONDER! Yet I shouldn't be surprised if contrary Mistress Mary would have to admit to the possession of a blackhead or two—even three or four! For so many of my Pretty Girls are just a wee bit careless about their complexions.

I wonder will they continue to admit to blackheads when I whisper the confidence that blackheads are nothing more nor less than dirt which has lodged in a very lazy pore which is constantly gaping; or that they are the excretions of the skin, which is not active enough to throw them off, so that they stay right in the pores, clogging them up and distending them, and presently along comes a flying speck of dirt, settles down on an open pore—and, behold, a blackhead!

It is easy to see, at once—isn't it?—that the two things needful to avoid or cure blackheads are constant attention to cleanliness, and some method of stimulating the skin to eliminative action.

You know, of course, that I attach immense importance to the use of a complexion brush, because I am constantly saying to one or another of you "Get a complexion brush!" and that is just the way I must begin our little talk on blackheads—"Get a complexion brush!"

It must be of camel's hair, because that is soft and will not irritate a sensitive skin; you can buy one at the druggist's for twenty-five or fifty cents. Then you need a comedone extractor, which will probably cost another twenty-five cents and is a little instrument almost like an ear-spoon or tweezers, except that it has a tiny hole on the end of it just big enough to put over a blackhead. You do this, press down hard, and out pops Mr. Blackhead!

Just as soon as you have bought the camel's-hair brush, and the comedone extractor, and a bar of Castile soap, we are ready to begin our campaign.

We will start at night, by scrubbing face and neck thoroughly with quantities of hot soapy water—and our newly acquired brush. When we have scrubbed until the skin tingles—showing it is shaking off some of its laziness—the face must be rinsed and rinsed and rinsed, several times in hot water, several times in warm water. Now, rub in cold cream and use the comedone extractor on any prominent blackheads. If they do not come out easily, massage the spot, then apply cold cream and massage again the next night; and the third night, after the cold cream application, bring the extractor into service again.

Every time you remove a blackhead, touch the open pore with alcohol or some astringent lotion to close it. When the pore is very large, it is sometimes not objectionable to insert the point of a needle and break down its walls, then bathe with an astringent. When it heals, it will close itself up. Don't try this plan except on an occasional unusual pore, or you may succeed in scarring yourself.

Massaging a sluggish facial skin daily will aid in the elimination of blackheads. Examine your skin by the aid of a hand-mirror, in a strong light. Where do your blackheads congregate? On your nose? In the crease of the nose where it sets on the cheeks? On the chin? Or—yes, it sometimes happens!—in the ears! The latter cannot be cured by massage, but you can get rid of a large percentage of the crop on nose and chin by daily frictioning with the flat of the fingers dipped in cold cream. Do this in the morning, but at night use the complexion brush, which itself acts as a stimulant.

If you have some tiny blackheads in the ear, you will never be able to discover them for yourself. Get some good friend to investigate for you, and if the cup of the ear shows some ugly black spots which give an appearance of uncleanliness, get a little eyebrow brush for ten cents—it is a brush about two inches long, and looks like a fairy toothbrush. Dip this in soapy water and carefully scrub the lining of the ear, being careful, of course, not to insert the brush in the little passage.

If you have a very serious case of blackheads, you may need more strenuous treatment than this I have just outlined. In such case, after scrubbing your face at night, rub in a little boracic powder. If this smarts the skin—as it very likely will—massage with a little cold cream. Keep this treatment up for a week; then, at night, after the usual scrubbing, steam the face over a basin of boiling water. To do this, throw a Turkish towel over the head, enveloping head and bowl. After a few moments of the steaming, rinse the face in hot water and spread over it a handful of Soap Jelly. Let this remain on ten minutes, then wash off and massage for several minutes with a good cold cream. Do not use any boracic powder this night.

This treatment may be continued two or three weeks, if needed, and if the skin does not become irritated. Do not, of course, forget to use the cold cream as the skin demands it.

Soap Jelly For Blackheads

Three cups of water, one small cake of Castile soap.

Pare the soap into the water, and add one teaspoonful of powdered borax. Boil until thoroughly dissolved and slightly reduced in quantity. Set aside until cold, when it should have jellied. Fill into covered jar. It will keep for some time.

Blackheads which are the result of secretions which have remained to clog the pores, rather than dirt which has filled enlarged pores, are the result of imperfect digestion, imperfect elimination, and sometimes of too infrequent body baths. The entire surface of the body should be washed daily, whether in a stand-up sponge bath or in a more leisurely and luxurious tub bath; the essential thing is that the surface excretions of the body must be removed.

Not only this, but the bowels must act freely at least once a day. If they are sluggish and obstinate, be careful as to food, drink eight to ten glasses of water a day, and each morning on rising eat six prunes which have been soaked in a tumbler of water all night, drinking this water as well.

Avoid potatoes temporarily, and eat plenty of fresh fruits and green vegetables. Don't eat ordinary white bread, but whole wheat bread, and Johnny-cake or corn bread, and bran biscuit. In eating fruit do not remove the skin; the coarser your food, the better for a time, as it will stimulate intestinal action. Eat an apple with its skin, every night on retiring.

And practise sensible exercises every night and morning in your room! If you will look back through the last few issues of COMFORT, you find directions for several exercises which will help you put bowels and stomach in perfect condition—and that will mean one less reason for blackheads!

Answers to Questions

Anxious One.—You can't remove liver spots by external applications. You must get your liver in good condition. Stop eating sweet things—pies, cakes, much sugar, etc., fat meats and gravies for a time. Eat plenty of fresh fruit and green vegetables; drink eight to ten glasses of water a day. And practise this exercise daily:

For a Torpid Liver

Standing with heels together, head up, body erect, stretch the right arm up as far as you can, at the same time reaching downward as far as possible with the left hand. You will unconsciously sway toward the left. Now raise the left arm and reach down with the right. Alternate the arms rapidly, using them like a windmill. Lemon juice is good to bleach the skin, but here is a face bleach:

Egyptian Face Bleach

Buy a fifty-cent jar of theatrical cream, and a pound of almond meal. Beat together one teaspoonful of the cream and some almond meal, and add enough hot water to make a thin spreading paste. Cut two squares of thin cheese-cloth big enough to cover the face, and tear a hole in the center of each square for your nose, so you can breathe freely. Now, dampen the squares and spread the paste between. Bathe the face in very hot soapy water, massage for a minute, and then apply the pack, patting it down so it touches the face all over. Lay on two medium-sized, hot wet Turkish towels; and as soon as they cool, replace with others. Keep this up for fifteen minutes, then remove pack, wash face in warm, then cool, then very cold water. Take two of these treatments every seven days for three weeks, when your skin will be beautifully white and soft.

Mrs. A. M.—See answer to "Anxious One" for face bleach. To whiten the hands, use this lotion:

Disappearing Hand Bleach

Orange-flower water, four ounces; rose-water, four ounces; borate of soda (borax), one half dram; spirits of benzoin, one dram; bruised almonds, one ounce.

Take first two ingredients and almonds and mix; let stand for twenty-four hours, filter, add the soda, shake or stir until dissolved, then put the benzoin in drop by drop while constantly shaking the mixture. Before applying this lotion, give the hands a thorough bath in hot water, then apply the lotion undiluted to the hands in connection with strained honey, massaging it into the skin with a gentle rotary movement. If the hands do not become irritated, make several applications of this beautifier in one night, then coat the hands with lanoline, draw on a pair of rubber or loose cotton gloves and hie you off to bed. I am sorry I cannot express an opinion as to a proprietary face cream; but any cream you see advertised extensively in reliable magazines will be safe to use. Sage tea will not rid the scalp of dandruff. Shampoo once in two weeks, brush out the dandruff painstakingly every night, and cleanse the scalp with a tiny sponge dipped in alcohol, parting the hair in many places and passing sponge along part. The alcohol will not be desirable for one with dry hair, but you say yours is very oily. "Eyes that fascinate?" My dear, eyes that fascinate do so because they express beautiful thoughts, tender sympathy, an interest in others or a bright happy outlook upon life. To keep the eyes bright, keep liver, stomach and bowels in perfect condition.

M. T. F.—The arms that are pimply between elbows and shoulders need only to be scrubbed thoroughly every night. Use a bath brush or a camel's-hair complexion brush and hot soapy water—rinse thoroughly. For the first two or three nights after washing, you may rub in the lotion recommended to "Mrs. A. M." For the fat hips, practise this exercise:

To Reduce Fat Hips

Stand with your feet a little apart, arms extended above your head. Then sweep forward with the body, throwing the hands in which you may hold balls or dumb-bells as far back as possible between the legs. Resume standing position and repeat. Practise this exercise rapidly.

Mrs. R. C.—A change in diet is what you need to reduce your flesh and prevent your gaining. Cut out all pies, cakes, sweet things, fats and gravies, also potatoes, rice, cereals, and white bread. And cut the amount in two. Crisp toast, an orange or small dish of fresh fruit and a soft boiled egg are enough for breakfast. For dinner, eat a small amount of lean, broiled or roasted meat (no fat and no gravy) with one or two green vegetables, peas, asparagus, greens, onions, string beans, etc., and a simple dessert, fresh fruit preferably, or a custard, or a baked apple, or stewed prunes, etc. For supper, you can have some cold meat or some escalloped tomatoes or some fish, with a green vegetable or salad. Epsom salts help to reduce, but you need more strenuous measure. Practise the exercise I gave to "M. T. F."

Sweet Sixteen.—Your writing is very good and clear, my dear. For a fleshy protuberant mole or wart, tie a thread around base. After a few days it will turn black, wither up and drop off. For the smooth moles apply a freckle lotion, though your diet probably needs attention.

Hope.—See answer to "Sweet Sixteen." Use a cut lemon on the offending spots, and drink a glass of cool water half an hour before breakfast to which the juice of half a lemon, without sugar, has been added. Drink eight to ten glasses of water a day and see that the bowels move freely every day. The exercise given to "Anxious One" is also good for constipation.

A. A.—Sorry you can't get that ingredient for the Wrinkle Cream. Use this formula instead:

Wrinkle Lotion

Alum, thirty grains; rose-water, three ounces; almond milk (thick), three quarters of an ounce.

Massaging the wrinkles with a cold cream will help to drive them away.

J. P. K.—Anoint the edges of your little daughter's eyelids nightly with melted vaseline or sweet almond oil. It helps the growth of the lashes and I trust it will make new lashes for your little girl.

An Old Subscriber.—A scar can be helped by massaging nightly with cold cream; but it is unlikely it can be removed. Only the most skilled surgeon could advise you about grafting a fresh piece of skin on, and it would be a most expensive operation. I do not know whether it could be successfully done. I'm so sorry!

Maxine.—Don't cut the hair in bangs, as they are not worn now.

Daisy.—See answer to "Mrs. A. M." for a good treatment for your dandruff. Shampoo frequently—once in two weeks, at the very least—and be careful of diet and bowels. If dandruff persists after a week of the alcohol treatment, try using sixty grams of sulphur to an ounce of vaseline and rubbing it into the scalp (not onto the hair) with the finger-tips every three days.

Olivia.—For tan, use the face bleach given to "Anxious One." For fat hips, see answer to "M. T. F." After using the face bleach, always rub in cold cream before going outdoors, wipe off firmly with a soft towel, dust on a very little good powder, and wipe off again.

A. B. C.—The thread tied on a fleshy mole should be very tight and let remain until the mole withers up and drops off. This treatment can, of course, only be used on a protuberant mole.

Elsa.—Your diet needs attention. Too many sweets and fats, too many fried foods, will make pimples. Follow directions given "Hope." In addition, scrub the face every night with a camel's-hair complexion brush (buy it at your drug-store for twenty-five or fifty cents) and plenty of hot soapy water, rinsing afterward many, many times. Pay particular attention to your bowels if you want to have a good complexion. At nineteen, don't bother about developing your bust, as a very slender girlish bust is the proper thing and much the most beautiful at that age. Practising exercise given below, however, will increase the bust.

To Develop the Bust

Stand with heels together, head up, body erect. With arms outstretched at sides on a level with the shoulders, try to have every muscle in the body tense. Then force the hands together in front of the body at full length, holding the arms rigid. Throw the arms back as far as possible; then to the front again. Keep the hands at the shoulder level throughout. Inhale as the arms are brought back and exhale as they come together.

Mrs. G. L.—Massaging the scalp nightly will help to restore health to the hair, and affects the color. I do not approve of dyes, homedyed hair is seldom satisfactory. Try using the resorcin hair tonic on the scalp:

Resorcin Hair Tonic

Resorcin, forty grains; water, one half ounce; one ounce each of witchhazel and alcohol. Apply to scalp every night.

Lillian.—The place which looks chapped on your neck near the ear may be caused by having worn high or tight collars, if it is below the ear. If it is on the cheek, then I do not know the cause. Use a complexion brush nightly, as per answer to "Elsa," and afterward always rub in a good cold cream.

Helen.—Massage the scalp for ten minutes nightly, using a little vaseline on the finger-tips. Stop tonics temporarily. Brush the dandruff out of the hair every night.

Texas Cow-girl.—The black spots on your nose are dirt which has settled in the little clogged-up pores. See answer to "Elsa." To make the hair grow, massage the scalp nightly.

Miserable, Thin, Sister Flossie, and Others.—The Milk Diet is what you need. Take a good cathartic the first night. The next morning drink a glass of hot water on rising; then half an hour later, drink a glass and a half of cool milk, "chewing" each mouthful before swallowing. Thereafter take a glass and a half every hour until four o'clock in the afternoon. Eat a meal at six-thirty, drinking a glass of water an hour before and an hour after. At night, put to soak half a dozen prunes in a tumbler of water. The next morning, fifteen minutes after drinking a glass of water, drink the prune juice and eat the prunes, masticating them thoroughly before swallowing. Continue the diet in this manner for a week, at the end of which time take your water night and morning, and your prunes, and drink two glasses of milk each hour of the day from 7.30 A. M. to and including 6.30 P. M. Do not take an evening meal. Weigh yourself on the afternoon of the last day in each week in the same clothes each time and on the same scales, and you will find a weekly gain of one to three pounds—provided, always, you take the full amount of milk prescribed. If you become constipated, take a lacpactic pill at night that you can buy at your druggist's.

The Mysterious Soprano

He laid is finger over her lips. "Hush, hush, I have suffered enough for being such an insufferable cad. You know Margaret," with a faint smile, "you always had your revenge, even in the old days."

"Yes," she nodded, "and in the new, too. But tell me," hastily backing away from him, "Tell me Larry, do you still think the same of——"

"I love you yet, yes, a hundredfold," he interrupted, "as for dancing," very gravely, "it is an innocent pastime, providing it is entered into with the proper spirit, but, it is one of the pleasures that this," touching his coat, "prevents me from sharing, although it does not prevent me from enjoying others' enjoyment of it."

For once the girl was at a loss for words. She stood before him with scarlet cheeks and downcast eyes.

"Margaret, tell me, am I forgiven, or what must I do?"

"Larry, I—I—I forgave you long ago, but—but——" she stammered, and stopped.

"But what, little girl? I wrote twice that year after that silly quarrel, but, you did not answer, and my foolish pride prevented me from writing again, and then I lost track of you."

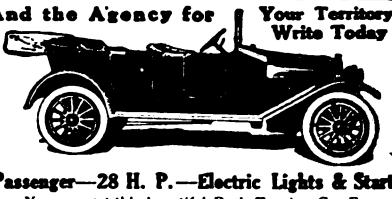
"I received your letters, but they came while I was still smarting and sore, and to punish you I ignored them."

"Will you come Margaret?" holding out his arms. "No," as she hesitated. "There is someone else then?"

His face grew very white as he remembered "Auld Robin Gray."

"No, no, no one else, but I must tell you a little story first. Sit there." They seated themselves, her face in the shadow, as she nervously began.

"That day in Harrisville—I knew you were to take charge of the service that morning, and wondered whether you had changed and how. Curiosity led me to the church door. I did not care enough to go in and sit down, mischief prompted me to surprise everyone, and as no one knew me, I felt safe. I was staying with the Whites—they have a country home there—a sort of camp—that's how I knew you would be there. Then when I sang so unexpectedly in your church here, Harold planned that for me. He found out Miss Kane was ill and promised to get me in the choir loft and out again without anyone finding out who I was. I think he suspected something before that, for each time while I was here, he suggested asking you here. I managed to upset his plans. Well, he managed it, and we both enjoyed the result. Everyone asked because no one could answer. Then because you kept making guarded inquiries, we wished to stimulate your curiosity farther, so after I had returned to the city, he helped me with the card, and mailed it to you. Harold kept me posted—and—and even then I would not let myself forgive. Girls are queer creatures Larry. Then at Alice's wedding, he managed that for me also. But somehow when I began to sing behind those palms, the expression on your face robbed me of all the pleasure I took in mystifying you. I—I had tried to rouse your interest, but—but, when I got back to town I found I had played with fire and burnt my own fingers. No—no—wait," as he started eagerly towards her. "I must tell you. I fought and fought against it, and thought all the bitter things of you I could, all summer, and fall, but, it was stronger than I. It was to you—just to you, I sang last night. Didn't you know? Oh, Larry, Larry." The story was haltingly told. As she finished he took her, unresisting, in his arms.



"Margaret, sweetheart."

An hour later as he was leaving, she tilted her head to one side and demurely said, "Larry, I shall lead you one continuous dance from now on; so which shall it be, a waltz or a two-step?"

"Well," he laughingly answered, "it first must be to the tune of 'Come Haste to the Wedding'—after—well."

Should any subscriber desire an immediate, special opinion on any legal question, privately mailed, it may be had by sending one dollar with a letter asking such advice, addressing the same to "THE EDITOR, COMFORT'S HOME LAWYER," Augusta, Maine, and in reply a carefully prepared opinion will be sent in an early mail.

Full names and addresses must be signed by all persons seeking advice in this column but not for publication. Unless otherwise requested, initials only will be published.

W. L., Tennessee.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that a married woman can bind, dispose of by deed, will or otherwise all of her separate real or personal property, without her husband's consent, and without leaving any share of same to him, unless such power is withheld in the insrument under which she holds title; we do not think there is any legal way to prevent your wife from leaving her separate property to her adopted daughter and excluding you from any share, if she desires to do so.

W. T., Alabama.—We do not think the fact that you are suffering from broken or fractured limbs would legally excuse you from the payment of road tax legally assessed against you, but we think you can be excused from working out this tax upon the payment of same in money.

Mrs. J. S., Texas.—We think you have practically no chance of recovering any portion of property abandoned by you forty years ago. (2) We think your husband's liability for the death of the horse he hired or kept under some agreement would depend upon the nature of such agreement and upon the cause of the horse's death. we think if the horse died from overwork or mistreatment your husband would be liable.

Mrs. C. W. N., Oklahoma.—We do not think there is any legal objection to the use for recitations at entertainments of any of Longfellow's poems; we think you are probably confused as to your rights by the fact that you would have no legal rights to the use of copyrighted plays and works, upon which the copyright had not yet expired.

W. A., South Dakota.—We do not think the laws of your state provide that a domestic employee shall have one day off each week.

Mrs. W. S. B.—We think the court records of the county in the state where the litigation you mention took place, should show just what took place in such litigation, and just how the estate you mention was settled; we are of the opinion that a general guardian of an infant can be compelled to account for such funds belonging to the infant as may come into his hands.

Mrs. S. A. S., Oklahoma.—We do not think that the marriage of the young man you mention would be invalidated or affected in any way by reason of his use of the name of his foster parents even though his adoption was not a legal one under the judgment or decree of some proper court, but we think he would have no rights of inheritance from such foster parents' estate unless such adoption was a legal one, or unless some provision was made for him by will; we think the judgment decree or order of some proper court on the presentation of the proper papers is necessary to constitute a legal adoption, and that the taking of a child from a foundling asylum to raise or bring up would not alone constitute a legal adoption, even though such child was thereafter always known by the name of the person or persons who brought him up.

M. McD., Arkansas.—Under the laws of your state, in the absence of a will, we think a widow is entitled to dower of one third of all lands of which the husband was seized of an estate of inheritance during marriage, not relinquished by her in legal form, during her life, and also absolutely to one third part of the personal estate of all kinds of her husband; and that if the husband died leaving no child or descendant his widow is entitled to dower of one half of the lands and to one half of the personalty in his own right if the estate be a new acquisition, as against collateral heirs, but as against creditors, to one third; and that if the estate be ancestral to one third of the personalty absolutely and a one third life estate in lands.

Mrs. A. B. P., Texas.—We are of the opinion that, under the laws of Arkansas, a widower can convey and give good title to the real estate standing in his name without the signature of any of his children to the deed.

D. E. C., Missouri.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that the delivery of the deed to real estate is essential to prove good title to the same, but the possession of such deed, we think would be prima facie evidence of the delivery of the same to the possession of the grantee, and if such deed was procured in an illegal way, we think the burden of proof of showing such fact would be upon the person disputing the delivery of same. Under the laws of your state, we think that upon the death of a married man, leaving no will his widow would always receive dower of a one third interest for life in his real estate, and in cases where he leaves no issue a larger share.

Mrs. A. S., South Dakota.—Under the laws of your state we are of the opinion that a married woman may dispose of all her separate estate by will, without the consent of her husband, and that it is not necessary that her husband join in the deed of conveyance of her separate real estate, except homesteads, in which case if both husband and wife are residents of the state, both must convey; we think the general custom in your state is for both husband and wife to join in the conveyance of the real estate of the other in order to avoid the necessity of proving that the real estate conveyed is not a homestead as would be necessary in order to prove good title on the conveyance by the one alone; we think, in your state, upon the death of the wife, leaving no will, her husband would receive a share of her separate property, if he survives her, this share depends in amount upon who else is left.

Mrs. L. E., Illinois.—Under the laws of your state we are of the opinion that upon the death of a married man, leaving no will and leaving a surviving widow and one child as his only heirs at law and next of kin, his widow would receive dower of a life estate of one third of his real estate and one third of his personal estate absolutely, the remainder going to the child, regardless of the fact that such child may be by a former wife.

Mrs. N. K., Oklahoma.—We are of the opinion that one member of a partnership has no legal right to sign the partnership name to a note or other evidence of indebtedness for the purpose of raising money for his own individual use, unless the other members of the partnership consent to such act.

R. V. S., Texas.—Under the laws of your state, we are of the opinion that all property acquired by the husband and wife during marriage, except by devise, descent or gift is considered the common or community property and upon the death of either party, and in the absence of a will, goes one half to the survivor and the remainder to the child or children of the deceased; (2) we think that upon the death of a married man, leaving no will, and leaving a surviving widow and children the widow receives a life estate of one third of his separate real estate, and one third of his separate personal property absolutely.

Mrs. J. K. G., Missouri.—Under the laws of your state we are of the opinion that the dower of a wife and curtesy of the husband in the real estate of the other, where the same exists, cannot be affected by will unless the provisions of the will in that respect are accepted by the non-rejection of such provisions within a specified time and in a certain formal way.

Miss M. S., Colorado.—You are misinformed, the laws of no state in the United States allows trial marriages with a privilege to the parties to the marriage to have the same annulled after a stated period, where a decree annulling a marriage is granted it is for some much better reason; we think you should not contemplate marriage harboring such ideas.

I would greatly appreciate a card and letter shower the eighth of June, as that is my birthday.
Best wishes to all, I am your new friend,
CLAOMA TAYLOR.

Miss Taylor. Your discourse on "Idleness" brings to mind a poem which teaches us the need of doing the little deed of kindness today, and the folly of wasting valuable time in dreaming of the great things we mean to do sometime in the far distant future.—Ed.

"What Have We Done Today"

"We shall do so much in the years to come,
But what have we done today?
We shall give our gold in a princely sum,
But what did we give today?
We shall lift the heart and dry the tear,
We shall plant a hope in the place of fear,
We shall speak the words of love and cheer,
But what did we speak today?

"We shall be so kind in the after while,
But what have we been today?
We shall bring each lonely life a smile,
But what have we brought today?
We shall give to truth a grander birth,
And to steadfast faith a deeper worth,
We shall feed the hungering souls of earth,
But whom have we fed today?

"We shall reap such joys in the by and by,
But what have we sown today?
We shall build us mansions in the sky,
But what have we built today?
'Tis sweet in idle dreams to bask,
But here and now do we do our task?
Yes, this is the thing our souls must ask,
'What have we done today?'"

Here are a number of uses for lemons:

Lemon juice will bring out the flavor of fresh fruit cakes, especially those with molasses.

Chew a tiny bit of lemon rind and sweeten the breath.

Remove tartar from teeth and warts from the hands.

Sometimes rubbing a slice of lemon on forehead will cure an ordinary headache.

Juice of one half lemon in a cup of tea or coffee will often relieve a sick headache.

Chilblains will respond quickly if a slice of lemon is bound on when retiring.

Lemon juice, sugar and white of eggs will relieve a racking cough.

Lemon juice will remove fruit, mildew and ink stains from white fabrics, and iron or rust from marble or any household article.

Comfort Postal Requests

How to Get a Lot of Souvenir Postals Free

Exchanging Souvenir Post Cards is no longer a fad but a custom as firmly established as letter writing, and more convenient and pleasing. By entering this Exchange list you are enabled to accumulate cards from every state in the Union and Foreign Countries. To secure the appearance of your name in the Exchange List it is necessary to send a club of two one-year 25-cent subscriptions to COMFORT and fifty cents to pay for same. We will send you a very fine Fifty Card Album for Post Cards, and your name will appear in the next available issue of COMFORT, and you will be expected to return cards for all received by you.

John W. Murphy, 407 Main St., Barnhill, Ohio. Colored scenery and buildings only. Miss Xenia Young, Hartville, Missouri. Harry G. Johnson, Box 274, Meriden, Conn. Mr. Ralph Ross, Richfield, R. R. 1, N. C.

Missing Relatives and Friends

We shall only require you to get a small club of subscribers to COMFORT for each request printed; so in sending your notice for insertion in the Missing Relatives' column, include a club of three one-year 25-cent subscriptions, or if you are already a paid-in-advance subscriber, send only two one-year 25-cent subscriptions. This amount limits the notice to twenty-two words, making three lines; if longer notice is required, send two additional 25-cent one-year subscriptions yearly for every seven words.

Address COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

The Family Doctor

So many inquiries are received from COMFORT subscribers concerning the health of the family that this column will be devoted to answering them. The remedies and advice here given are intended only for simple cases; serious cases should be addressed to physicians, not to us.

Address The Family Doctor, COMFORT, Augusta, Maine.

NOTICE.—As the privileges of this and all other departments of COMFORT are for subscribers only, no attention will be given any inquiry which does not bear the writer's correct name and address. Initials only, or a fictitious name, if requested, will appear in the published answer, but the inquiry must invariably be signed by the writer's true name.

M. L., Hanford, Wash.—You say your doctor is a "poor excuse" and expensive. Perhaps he may not be the best, but he is on the ground and can see the patient, which makes him better than the best who can only guess at the trouble from a long distance. These lumps in your breast may be the beginning of serious trouble and should be examined and treated by skilled physicians, for their cause cannot be guessed at. You are listening to all sorts of people who are as ignorant as you are of the cause and presently you will be in a condition where nobody can help you. Consult a first-class doctor regardless of cost.

F. B. S., Richmond, Va.—If you find the wheat bran is effective in your case of constipation go on using it and don't be studying up ways by which it may harm you in some other direction. There is no danger of it producing appendicitis. Neither will your sleeping position affect your appendix. The best position to lie in is the one you can sleep most comfortably in. (2) We believe the ladies of the Anti-Cigarette League advocate the use of nitrate of silver as a mouth-wash to prevent smoking, but we advise you not to use it. It is a dangerous caustic, very powerful, and should never be applied to the mouth except by a skilled physician. If used carelessly it is likely to skin the mouth and cause death.

Mrs. J. A. M., Madison, N. C.—Having no disease that you know of and having nothing the matter with you except that tired feeling which comes to everybody in the spring, why go about trying to find something wrong that you think should be drugged? Thank the Lord that you have as good health as you have and stop thinking about doctors and medicine and don't take blood purifiers or other stuff that kind friends prescribe for you. Leave yourself in the hands of nature and don't trouble trouble till trouble troubles you. We wish all COMFORT readers were as well off physically as you are.

J. C. B., Kemp, Texas.—Let the mole alone unless you want something worse on your jaw. Won't your whiskers hide it? Moles may be removed, that is some moles, but it can be done only by an expert, and even then not always so as to have the skin show no scar.
